PRAYER.

Rev. J. J. BULLOCK, Chaplain to the Senate, offered the following

Almighty and most merciful God, our heavenly Father, we adore Thee as the only true and living God. We acknowledge our responsibility to Thee as the Supreme Ruler of the universe. We thank Thee for all Thy manifold blessings to us as a people: for Thou hast placed us above all the nations of the earth. We live in a land of law, and of liberty, and of rich abundance.

Most Gracious God, we thank Thee that They had spread the lives

Most Gracious God, we thank Thee that Thou hast spared the lives of all the members of this venerable body since last it met together in this place and that so many of them are permitted to enter upon the duties and responsibilities of a new session under circumstances of great mercy. If any be sick or afflicted in any wise in body or in mind, we pray that Thou wouldst deal very mercifully with them; restore the sick to health and comfort the afflicted.

We pray for our beloved country. May we long live a united, happy, and prosperous people—a people who fear God and leve righteousness. In obedience to Thy word and in accordance with our own desires we would offer up our supplications, prayers, and intercessions for the rulers of this great country, for the President and the Vice-President, for the Senators and Representatives in Congress, and for all others in authority. May they be plenteously endued with wisdom from on High to guide and assist them in the discharge of their responsible duties as the guardians of this great country. May they long live in health and prosperity, approved of God and honored of men; and when they shall have finished their course upon earth may they in the last trying hour enjoy the consolations of our most holy religion in the last trying hour enjoy the consolations of our most holy religion and finally be admitted into Thy Kingdom above. For Christ our Redeemer's sake. Amen.

CREDENTIALS.

CREDENTIALS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT presented the credentials of James L. Pugh, chosen by the Legislature of Alabama a Senator from that State to fill the vacancy caused by the death of George S. Houston in the term ending March 3, 1885.

The credentials were read; and, the oath prescribed by the act of July 11, 1868, having been administered to Mr. Pugh, he took his seat in the Senate.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia, presented the credentials of Joseph E. Brown, chosen by the Legislature of Georgia a Senator from that State to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of John B. Gordon in the term ending March 3, 1885.

The credentials were read; and, the oath prescribed by the act of July 11, 1868, having been administered to Mr. Brown, he took his seat in the Senate.

NOTIFICATION TO THE HOUSE.

Mr. THURMAN offered the following resolution; which was con-

Resolved. That the Secretary inform the House of Representatives that a quorum of the Senate is assembled, and that the Senate is ready to proceed to business.

NOTIFICATION TO THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. BAYARD submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That a committee consisting of two members be appointed, to join such committee as may be appointed by the House of Representatives, to wait upon the President of the United States and inform him that a quorum of each House is assembled, and that Congress is ready to receive any communication he may be pleased to make.

By president

By unanimous consent, the Vice-President was authorized to appoint the committee on the part of the Senate; and Messrs. BAYARD and ANTHONY were appointed.

HOUR OF MEETING.

On motion of Mr. WALLACE, it was Ordered, That the hour of the daily meeting of the Senate be twelve o'clock meridian, until otherwise ordered.

CREDENTIALS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT presented the credentials of George F. EDMUNDS, chosen by the Legislature of Vermont a Senator from that State for the term beginning March 4, 1881; which were read and ordered to be filed.

Mr. WALLACE, (at twelve o'clock and fifteen minutes p. m.) I move that the Senate take a recess for thirty minutes, until the House can be communicated with.

The motion was agreed to; and at the expiration of the recess (at twelve o'clock and forty-five minutes p. m.) the Senate reassembled.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

Mr. T. F. King, one of the clerks of the House of Representatives, appeared at the bar of the Senate and delivered the following mes-

Mr. President, I am directed by the House of Representatives to inform the Senate that a quorum of the House of Representatives has assembled, and that the House is now ready to proceed to business. I am also directed to inform the Senate that the House of Representatives has appointed Mr. James H. Blount of Georgia, Mr. William D. Kelley of Pennsylvania, and Mr. J. W. Singleton of Illinois, a committee on the part of the House, to join such committee as may be appointed on the part of the Senate, to wait upon the President of the United States and inform him that a quorum of the two Houses has assembled, and that Congress is ready to receive any communication that he may be pleased to make.

RECESS.

Mr. THURMAN. I move that the Senate take a recess until half past one o'clock.

The motion was agreed to; and at the expiration of the recess the Senate reassembled.

PRESIDENT'S ANNUAL MESSAGE.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President, the committee appointed by the Senate to act in connection with the committee of the House of Representatives to wait upon the President and inform him that a quorum of each House had assembled and was ready for the transaction of busi-ness have performed the duty assigned them, and have been informed by the President that he would presently communicate his views to the Senate in writing.

At one o'clock and thirty-two minutes p. m., Mr. W. K. Rogers, the Private Secretary of the President of the United States, appeared at the bar of the Senate and said:

Mr. President, I am directed by the President of the United States to deliver to the Senate a message in writing.

The message was received from the secretary and handed to the Vice-President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the annual message of the President of the United States, which the Secretary will read.

The Secretary of the Senate, Mr. JOHN C. BURCH, read the message, as follows:

Fellow-citizens of the Senate and House of Representatives:

I congratulate you on the continued and increasing prosperity of our country. By the favor of Divine Providence we have been blessed during the past year with health, with abundant harvests, with profitable employment for all our people, and with contentment at home, and with peace and friendship with other nations.

The occurrence of the twenty-fourth election of Chief Magistrate has afforded another opportunity to the people of the United States to exhibit to the world a significant example of the peaceful and safe transmission of the power and authority of government from the pub.

transmission of the power and authority of government from the public servants whose terms of office are about to expire to their newly chosen successors. This example cannot fail to impress profoundly thoughtful people of other countries with the advantages which republican institutions afford. The immediate, general, and cheerful acquiescence of all good citizens in the result of the election gives gratifying assurance to our country, and to its friends throughout the world, that a government based on the free consent of an intelligence of the election of the election gives the world, that a government based on the free consent of an intelligence of the election of the election of the election gives gent and patriotic people possesses elements of strength, stability, and permanency not found in any other form of government.

Continued opposition to the full and free enjoyment of the rights of citizenship conferred upon the colored people by the recent amendments to the Constitution still prevails in several of the late slaveholding States. It has, perhaps, not been manifested in the recent election to any large extent in acts of violence or intimidation. It has, however, by fraudulent practices in connection with the ballots, with the regulations as to the places and manner of voting, and with counting, returning, and canvassing the votes cast, been successful in defeating the exercise of the right preservative of all rights, the right of suffrage, which the Constitution expressly confers upon our enfran-chised citizens.

It is the desire of the good people of the whole country that sectionalism as a factor in our politics should disappear. They prefer that no section of the country should be united in solid opposition to any other section. The disposition to refuse a prompt and hearty obedience to the equal-rights amendments to the Constitution is all that now stands in the way of a complete obliteration of sectional lines in our political contests. As long as either of these amendments is flagrantly violated or disregarded, it is safe to assume that the people who placed them in the Constitution as embodying the legitimate results of the war for the Union, and who believe them to be wise results of the war for the Union, and who believe them to be wise and necessary, will continue to act together and to insist that they shall be obeyed. The paramount question still is as to the enjoyment of the right by every American citizen who has the requisite qualifications to freely cast his vote and to have it honestly counted. With this question rightly settled the country will be relieved of the contentions of the past, by-gones will indeed be by-gones, and political and party issues with respect to economy and efficiency of administration, internal improvements, the tariff, domestic taxation, educathat dot, increase improvements, the tarin, domestic taxation, education, finance, and other important subjects, will then receive their full share of attention; but resistance to and nullification of the results of the war will unite together in resolute purpose for their support all who maintain the authority of the Government and the perpetuity of the Union, and who adequately appreciate the value of the victory or the Union, and who adequately appreciate the value of the victory achieved. This determination proceeds from no hostile sentiment or feeling to any part of the people of our country, or to any of their interests. The inviolability of the amendments rests upon the fundamental principle of our Government. They are the solemn expression of the will of the people of the United States.

The sentiment that the constitutional rights of all our citizens must be maintained does not grow weaker. It will continue to control the Consequent of the country. Health, the history of the late.

trol the Government of the country. Happily the history of the late election shows that in many parts of the country where opposition to the fifteenth amendment has heretofore prevailed it is diminishing, and is likely to cease altogether if firm and well-considered action is taken by Congress. Itrust the House of Representatives and the Senate, which have the right to judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of their own members, will see to it that every case of viola-tion of the letter or spirit of the fifteenth amendment is thoroughly investigated, and that no benefit from such violation shall accrue to any person or party. It will be the duty of the Executive, with sufficient appropriations for the purpose, to prosecute unsparingly all who have been engaged in depriving citizens of the rights guaranteed to them by the Constitution.

It is not, however, to be forgotten that the best and surest guarautee of the primary rights of citizenship is to be found in that capacity for self-protection which can belong only to a people whose right to universal suffrage is supported by universal education. The means at the command of the local and State authorities are, in many cases, wholly inadequate to furnish free instruction to all who need it. wholly inadequate to furnish free instruction to all who need it. This is especially true where, before emancipation, the education of the people was neglected or prevented, in the interest of slavery. Firmly convinced that the subject of popular education deserves the earnest attention of the people of the whole country, with a view to wise and comprehensive action by the Government of the United States, I respectfully recommend that Congress, by suitable legislation and with proper safeguards, supplement the local educational funds in the several States where the grave duties and responsibilities of citizenship have been devolved on uneducated people, by devoting to the purpose grants of the public lands, and, if necessary, by appropriations from the Treasury of the United States. Whatever Government can fairly do to promote free popular education ought Government can fairly do to promote free popular education ought to be done. Wherever general education is found, peace, virtue, and social order prevail, and civil and religious liberty are secure.

In my former annual messages, I have asked the attention of Congress to the urgent necessity of a reformation of the civil-service system.

tem of the Government. My views concerning the dangers of patronage or appointments for personal or partisan considerations have been strengthened by my observation and experience in the Executive Office, and I believe these dangers threaten the stability of the Government. Abuses so serious in their nature cannot be permanently tolerated. They tend to become more alarming with the enlargement of administrative service, as the growth of the country in population increases the number of officers and placemen employed. The reasons are imperative for the adoption of fixed rules for the regulation of appointments, promotions, and removals, establishing a uniform method, having exclusively in view, in every instance, the attainment of the best qualifications for the position in question. Such a method alone is consistent with the equal rights of all citizens, and the most economical and efficient administration of the pub-

Competitive examinations, in aid of impartial appointments and promotions, have been conducted for some years past in several of the Executive Departments, and by my direction this system has been adopted in the custom-houses and post-offices of the larger cities of the country. In the city of New York over two thousand positions in the civil service have been subject in their appointments and tenure of place to the operation of published rules for this purpose during the past two years. The results of these practical trials have been very setting the past two years. past two years. The results of these practical trials have been very satisfactory, and have confirmed my opinion in favor of this system of selection. All are subjected to the same tests, and the result is free from prejudice by personal favor or partisan influence. It secures for the position applied for the best qualifications attainable among the competing applicants. It is an effectual protection from the pressure of importunity, which, under any other course pursued, largely exacts the time and attention of appointing officers, to their great detriment in the discharge of other official duties, preventing the abuse of the service for the mere furtherance of private or party purposes, and leaving the employé of the Government, freed from the obligations imposed by patronage, to depend solely upon merit for retention and advancement and with this constant incentive to exertion and improve-

These invaluable results have been attained in a high degree in the offices where the rules for appointment by competitive examination

A method which has so approved itself by experimental tests at points where such tests may be fairly considered conclusive should be extended to all subordinate positions under the Government. I believe that a strong and growing public sentiment demands immediate measures for securing and enforcing the highest possible efficiency in the civil service, and its protection from recognized abuses, and that the experience referred to has demonstrated the feasibility of such measures

The examinations in the custom-houses and post-offices have been held under many embarrassments and without provision for compensation for the extra labor performed by the officers who have conducted them, and whose commendable interest in the improvement of the public service has induced this devotion of time and labor without pecuniary reward. A continuance of these labors gratuitously ought not to be expected, and without an appropriation by Congress for compensation it is not practicable to extend the system of examinations generally throughout the civil service. It is also highly important that all such examinations should be conducted upon a uniform system and under general supervision. Section 1753 of the Revised Statutes authorizes the President to prescribe the regulations for admission to the civil service of the United States, and for this purpose to employ suitable persons to conduct the requisite inquiries with reference to "the fitness of each candidate in respect to age, health, character, knowledge, and ability for the branch of service into which he seeks to enter;" but the law is practically inoperative for want of the requisite appropriation.

I therefore recommend an appropriation of $25,000 per annum to meet the expenses of a commission, to be appointed by the President in accordance with the terms of this section, whose duty it shall be to devise a just, uniform, and efficient system of competitive examinations, and to supervise the application of the same throughout the entire civil service of the Government. I am persuaded that the facilities which such a commission will afford for testing the fitness of those who apply for office will not only be as welcome a relief to members of Congress as it will be to the President and heads of Departments, but that it will also greatly tend to remove the causes of embarrassment which now inevitably and constantly attend the conflicting claims of patronage between the legislative and executive departments. The most effectual check upon the pernicious competition of influence and official favoritism, in the bestewal of office, will be the substitution of an open competition of merit between the applicants, in which every one can make his own record, with the flicting claims of patronage between the legislative and executive departments. The most effectual check upon the pernicious competition of influence and official favoritism, in the bestewal of office, will be the substitution of an open competition of merit between the applicants, in which every one can make his own record, with the assurance that his success will depend upon this alone.

I also recommend such legislation as, while leaving every officer as free as any other citizen to express his political opinions and to use his means for their advancement, shall also enable him to feel as safe as any private citizen in refusing all demands upon his salary for political purposes. A law which should thus guarantee true liberty and justice to all who are engaged in the public service, and likewise contain stringent provisions against the use of official authority to coerce the political action of private citizens or of official subordinates, is greatly to be desired.

The most serious obstacle, however, to an improvement of the civil service, and especially to a reform in the method of appointment and removal, has been found to be the practice under what is known as the spoils system, by which the appointing power has been so largely encroached upon by members of Congress. The first step in the reform of the civil service must be a complete divorce between Congress and the Executive in the matter of appointments. The corrupting doctrine that "to the victors belong the spoils" is inseparable from congressional patronage as the established rule and practice of parties in power. It comes to be understood by applicants for office, and by the people generally, that Representatives and Senators are entitled to disburse the patronage of their respective districts and States. It is not necessary to write at length the evils resulting from this invasion of the Executive functions. The true principles of government on the subject of appointments to office, as stated in the national conventions of the leading parties of the country, have again and again been approved by the American people, and have not been called in question in any quarter. These authentic expressions of public opinion upon this all-important subject are the statement of principles that belong to the constitutional structure of the Government.

Under the Constitution the President and heads of Departments are to make nominations for office. The Senate is to advise and consent to appointments, and the House of Representatives is to accuse and prosecute faithless officers. The best interest of the public service demands that these distinctions be respected; that Senators and Representatives, who may be judges and accusers, should not dictate appointments to office.

To this end the co-operation of the legislative department of the Government is required, alike by the necessities of the case and by public opinion. Members of Congress will not be relieved from the demands made upon them with reference to appointments to office until by legislative enactment the pernicions practice is condemned and forbidden. It is therefore recommended that an act be passed defining the relations of members of Congress with respect to appointment to office by the President, and I also recommend that the provisions of section 1767, and of the sections following, of the Revised Statutes, comprising the tenure-of-office act, of March 2, 1867, be repealed.

Believing that to reform the system and methods of the civil service in our country is one of the highest and most imperative duties of statesmanship, and that it can be permanently done only by the co-operation of the legislative and executive departments of the Government, I again commend the whole subject to your considerate attention.

It is the recognized duty and purpose of the people of the United States to suppress polygamy where it now exists in our Territories, and to prevent its extension. Faithful and zealous efforts have been made by the United States authorities in Utah to enforce the laws against it. Experience has shown that the legislation upon this subject to be effective requires extensive modification and amendment. The longer action is delayed the more difficult it will be to accomplish what is desired. Prompt and decided measures are necessary. The Mormon sectarian organization which upholds polygamy has the whole power of making and executing the local legislation of the Territory. By its control of the grand and petit juries it possesses large influence over the administration of justice. Exercising, as the heads of this sect do, the local political power of the Territory, they are able to make effective their hostility to the law of Congress on the subject of polygamy, and, in fact, do prevent its enforcement. Polygamy will not be abolished if the enforcement of the law depends on those who practice and uphold the crime. It can only be suppressed by taking away the political power of the seet which encourages and sustains it.

The power of Congress to enact suitable laws to protect the Territories is ample. It is not a case for half-way measures. The political power of the Mormon sect is increasing; it controls now one of our wealthiest and most populous Territories. It is extending steadily into other Territories. Wherever it goes it establishes polygamy and sectarian political power. The sanctity of marriage and the family relation are the corner-stone of our American society and civilization. Religious liberty and the separation of Church and State are among the elementary ideas of free institutions. To re-establish the interests and principles which polygamy and Mormonism have imperiled, and to fully reopen to intelligent and virtuous immigrants of all creeds that part of our domain which has been, in a great degree, closed to general immigration by intolerant and immoral institutions, it is recommended that the government of the Territory of Utah be reorganized.

I recommend that Congress provide for the government of Utah by a governor and judges, or commissioners, appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate—a government analogous to the provisional government established for the Territory northwest of the Ohio by the ordinance of 1787. If, however, it is deemed best to continue the existing form of local government, I recommend that the right to vote, hold office, and sit on juries in the Territory of Utah be confined to those who neither practice nor uphold polygamy. If thorough measures are adopted it is believed that within a few years the evils which now afflict Utah will be eradicated, and that this Territory will in good time become one ρf the most prosperous and attractive of the new States of the Union.

Our relations with all foreign countries have been those of undisturbed peace, and have presented no occasion for concern as to their continued maintenance.

My anticipation of an early reply from the British Government to the demand of indemnity to our fishermen for the injuries suffered by that industry at Fortune Bay, in January, 1878, which I expressed in my last annual message, was disappointed. This answer was received only in the latter part of April in the present year, and when received exhibited a failure of accord between the two governments, as to the measure of the inshore-fishing privilege secured to our fishermen by the treaty of Washington, of so serious a character that I made it the subject of a communication to Congress, in which I recommended the adoption of the measures which seemed to me proper to be taken by this Government in maintenance of the rights accorded to our fishermen under the treaty, and toward securing an indemnity for the injury these interests had suffered. A bill to carry out these recommendations was under consideration by the House of Representatives at the time of the adjournment of Congress in June last.

Within a few weeks I have received a communication from Her

Within a few weeks I have received a communication from Her Majesty's government renewing the consideration of the subject, both of the indemnity for the injuries at Fortune Bay and of the interpretation of the treaty in which the previous correspondence had shown the two governments to be at variance. Upon both these topics the disposition toward a friendly agreement is manifested by a recognition of our right to an indemnity for the transaction at Fortune Bay, leaving the measure of such indemnity to further conference, and by an assent to the view of this Government, presented in the previous correspondence, that the regulation of conflicting interests of the shore fishery of the provincial sea-coasts, and the vessel fishery of our fishermen, should be made the subject of conference and concurrent arrangement between the two governments.

I sincerely hope that the basis may be found for a speedy adjustment of the very serious divergence of views in the interpretation of the fishery clauses of the treaty of Washington, which, as the correspondence between the two governments stood at the close of the last session of Congress, seemed to be irreconcilable.

In the important exhibition of arts and industries which was held

In the important exhibition of arts and industries which was held last year at Sydney, New South Wales, as well as in that now in progress at Melbourne, the United States have been efficiently and honorably represented. The exhibitors from this country at the former place received a large number of awards in some of the most considerable departments, and the participation of the United States was recognized by a special mark of distinction. In the exhibition at Melbourne the share taken by our country is no less notable, and an equal degree of success is confidently expected.

The state of peace and tranquillity now enjoyed by all the nations of the continent of Europe has its favorable influence upon our diplomatic and commercial relations with them. We have concluded and ratified a convention with the French Republic for the settlement of claims of the citizens of either country against the other. Under this convention a commission, presided over by a distinguished pub-licist, appointed, in pursuance of the request of both nations, by His Majesty the Emperor of Brazil, has been organized and has begun its sessions in this city. A congress to consider means for the protection of industrial property has recently been in session in Paris, to which I have appointed the ministers of the United States in France and in Belgium as delegates. The international commission upon weights and measures also continues its work in Paris. I invite your attention to the necessity of an appropriation to be made in time to enable this Government to comply with its obligations under the metrical convention.

Our friendly relations with the German Empire continue without interruption. At the recent International Exhibition of Fish and Fisheries at Berlin, the participation of the United States, notwithstanding the baste with which the commission was forced to make its preparations, was extremely successful and meritorious, winning for private exhibitors numerous awards of a high class, and for the country at large the principal prize of honor offered by His Majesty the Emperor. The result of this great success cannot but be advantageous to this important and growing industry. There have been some questions raised between the two governments as to the proper effect and interpretation of our treaties of naturalization, but recent dispatches from our minister at Berlin show that favorable progress is making toward an understanding, in accordance with the views of this Government, which makes and admits no distinction whatever between the rights of a native and a naturalized citizen of the United States. In practice, the complaints of molestation suffered by naturalized citizens abroad have never been fewer than at present.

There is nothing of importance to note in our unbroken friendly relations with the Governments of Austria-Hungary, Russia, Portugal, Sweden and Norway, Switzerland, Turkey, and Greece.

During the last summer several vessels belonging to the merchant marine of this country, sailing in neutral waters of the West Indies, were fired at, boarded, and searched by an armed cruiser of the Spanish Government. The circumstances, as reported, involve not only a private injury to the persons concerned, but also seemed too little observant of the friendly relations existing for a century between this country and Spain. The wrong was brought to the attention of this country and Spain. The wrong was brought to the attention of the Spanish Government in a serious protest and remonstrance, and the matter is undergoing investigation by the royal authorities, with a view to such explanation or reparation as may be called for by the

The commission sitting in this city for the adjudication of claims of our citizens against the Government of Spain is, I hope, approaching the termination of its labors.

The claims against the United States under the Florida treaty with Spain were submitted to Congress for its action at the late session, and I again invite your attention to this long-standing question, with a view to a final disposition of the matter.

At the invitation of the Spanish Government a conference has recently been held at the city of Madrid to consider the subject of pro-tection by foreign powers of native Moors in the Empire of Morocco. The minister of the United States in Spain was directed to take part in the deliberations of this conference, the result of which is a convention signed on behalf of all the powers represented. The instrument will be laid before the Senate for its consideration. The Government of the United States has also lost no opportunity to urge upon that of the Emperor of Morocco the necessity, in accordance with the humane and enlightened spirit of the age, of putting an end to the persecutions which have been so prevalent in that country of persons of a faith other than the Moslem, and especially of the Hebrew residents of Morocco.

The consular treaty concluded with Belgium has not yet been officially promulgated, owing to the alteration of a word in the text by the Senate of the United States which occasioned a delay, during hich the time allowed for ratification expired. The Senate will be asked to extend the period for ratification.

The attempt to negotiate a treaty of extradition with Denmark failed on account of the objection of the Danish Government to the the draws providing that each nation should pay the expense of the arrest of the persons whose extradition it asks.

The provision made by Congress at its last session for the expense of the commission which had been appointed to enter upon negotiations with the Imperial Government of China, on subjects of great tions with the Imperial Government of China, on subjects of great interest to the relations of the two countries, enabled the commissioners to proceed at once upon their mission. The imperial government was prepared to give prompt and respectful attention to the matters brought under negotiation, and the conferences proceeded with such rapidity and success that, on the 17th of November last, two treaties were signed at Pekin—one relating to the introduction of Chinese into this country and one relating to commerce. Mr. Trescot, one of the commissioners, is now on his way home bringing the treaties, and it is expected that they will be received in season to be laid before the Senate early in January.

Our minister in Japan has negotiated a convention for the recipro-

Our minister in Japan has negotiated a convention for the recipro-cal relief of shipwrecked seamen. I take occasion to urge once more upon Congress the propriety of making provision for the erection of suitable fire-proof buildings at the Japanese capital for the use of the American legation, and the court-house and jail connected with it. The Japanese Government, with great generosity and courtesy, has offered for this purpose an eligible piece of land. In my last annual message I invited the attention of Congress to the subject of the indemnity funds received some years ago from China and Japan. I renew the recommendation then made that whatever portions of these funds are due to American citizens should be promptly paid, and the residue returned to the nations, respectively, to which portions of these funds are due to American citizens should be promptly paid, and the residue returned to the nations, respectively, to which they justly and equitably belong.

The extradition treaty with the Kingdom of the Netherlands, which has been for some time in course of negotiation, has, during the past year, been concluded and duly ratified.

Relations of friendship and amity have been established between the Government of the United States and that of Roumania. We have sent a diplomatic representative to Bucharest, and have rehave sent a diplomatic representative to Bucharest, and have received at this capital the special envoy, who has been charged by his Royal Highness Prince Charles to announce the independent sovereignty of Roumania. We hope for a speedy development of commercial relations between the two countries.

In my last annual message I expressed the hope that the prevalence of quiet on the border between this country and Mexico would soon become so assured as to justify the modification of the orders then in force to our military commanders in regard to crossing the frontier, without encouraging such disturbances as would endanger the peace of the two countries. Events moved in accordance with these expectations, and the orders were accordingly withdrawn, to the entire satisfaction of our own citizens and the Mexican Government. Subsequently the peace of the border was again disturbed by a savage foray under the command of the chief Victoria, but, by the combined action of the military forces of both countries, his band has been broken up and substantially destroyed.

There is reason to believe that the obstacles which have so long prevented rapid and convenient communication between the United States and Mexico by railways are on the point of disappearing, and that several important enterprises of this character will soon be set on foot which cannot fail to contribute largely to the prosperity of both countries.

New envoys from Guatemala, Colombia, Bolivia, Venezuela, and Nicaragua have recently arrived at this capital, whose distinction and enlightenment afford the best guarantee of the continuance of friendly relations between ourselves and these sister republics.

The relations between this Government and that of the United States of Colombia have engaged public attention during the past States of Colombia have engaged public attention during the past year, mainly by reason of the project of an interoceanic canal across the Isthmus of Panama, to be built by private capital under a concession from the Colombian Government for that purpose. The treaty obligations subsisting between the United States and Colombia, by which we guarantee the neutrality of the transit and the sovereignty and property of Colombia in the Isthmus, make it necessary that the conditions under which so stupendous a change in the region embraced in this guarantee should be effected—transforming, as it would, this isthmus, from a barrier between the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans. this isthmus, from a barrier between the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans, into a gateway and thoroughfare between them, for the navies and the merchant ships of the world—should receive the approval of this Government, as being compatible with the discharge of these obligations on our part, and consistent with our interests as the principal commercial power of the western hemisphere. The views which I expressed in a special message to Congress in March last, in relation to this project, I deem it my duty again to press upon your attention. Subsequent consideration has but confirmed the opinion "that it is the right and duty of the United States to assert and maintain such supervision and authority over any interoceanic canal across the isthmus that connects North and South America as will protect our national interest."

The war between the Republic of Chili on the one hand, and the allied Republics of Peru and Bolivia on the other, still continues. This Government has not felt called upon to interfere in a contest that is within the belligerent rights of the parties as independent states. We have, however, always held ourselves in readiness to aid in accommodating their difference, and have at different times re-minded both belligerents of our willingness to render such service. Our good offices in this direction were recently accepted by all the belligerents, and it was hoped they would prove efficacious; but I regret to announce that the measures which the ministers of the United States at Santiago and Lima were authorized to take, with the view to bring about a peace, were not successful. In the course of the war some questions have arisen affecting neutral rights. In all of these the ministers of the United States have, under their instructions, acted with promptness and energy in protection of Ameri-

In Samoa, the government of King Malietoa, under the support and recognition of the consular representatives of the United States, Great Britain, and Germany, seems to have given peace and tranquillity to the islands. While it does not appear desirable to adopt as a whole the scheme of tripartite local government which has been proposed, the common interests of the three great treaty powers require harmony in their relations to the native frame of government, and this may be best secured by a simple diplomatic agreement between them. It would be well if the consular jurisdiction of our representative at Apia were increased in extent and importance so as to guard American interests in the surrounding and outlying islands of Oceanica.

In pursuance of the act passed at the last session of Congress, invitations have been extended to foreign maritime states to join in a sanitary conference in Washington, beginning the 1st of January. The acceptance of this invitation by many prominent powers gives promise of success in this important measure, designed to establish a system of international notification by which the spread of infectious or epidemic diseases may be more effectively checked or prevented. The efforts of the Department of State to enlarge the trade and commerce of the United States, through the active agency of consular officers and through the dissemination of information obtained from them, have been unrelaxed. The interest in these efforts, as developed in our commercial communities, and the value of the information secured by this means to the trade and manufactures of the country were recognized by Congress at its last session, and pro-vision was made for the more frequent publication of consular and other reports by the Department of State. The first issue of this publication has now been prepared, and subsequent issues may regularly be expected. The importance and interest attached to the reports of consular officers are witnessed by the general demand for them by all classes of merchants and manufacturers engaged in our foreign trade. It is believed that the system of such publications is deserving of the approval of Congress, and that the necessary appropriations for its continuance and enlargement will commend itself to your consideration.

The prosperous energies of our domestic industries, and their immense production of the subjects of foreign commerce, invite, and even require, an active development of the wishes and interests of our people in that direction. Especially important is it that our commercial relations with the Atlantic and Pacific coasts of South America, with the West Indies and the Gulf of Mexico should be direct, and not through the circuit of European systems, and should be carried on in our own bottoms. The full appreciation of the opportunities which our front on the Pacific Ocean gives to commerce with Japan, China, and the East Indies, with Australia and the island groups which lie along these routes of navigation, should inspire equal efforts to appropriate to our own shipping and to administer by our own capital a due proportion of this trade. Whatever modifications of our regulations of trade and navigation may be necessary or useful to meet and direct these impulses to the enlargement of our exchanges and of our carrying trade, I am sure the wisdom of Congress will be ready to supply. One initial measure, however, seems to me so clearly useful and efficient that I venture to press it upon your earnest attention. It seems to be very evident that the provision of regular steam postal communication by aid from government has been the forerunner of the commercial predominance of Great Britain on all these coasts and seek a great trade in worthed decises and decise and the interest of the commercial predominance of Great Britain on all these coasts and seek a great are trade in worthed decise and the interest of the commercial predominance of Great Britain on all these coasts and seek a great are trade in worthed decise and the interest can be a commercial predominance of Great Britain on all these coasts and seek a great are trade in worthed decise and the interest can be a constant of the commercial predominance of Great Britain on all these coasts and seek and seek and seek and seek and seek and seek and of the commercial predominance of Great Britain on all these coasts and seas, a greater share in whose trade is now the desire and the intent of our people. It is also manifest that the efforts of other European nations to contend with Great Britain for a share of this commerce have been successful in proportion with their adoption of regular steam postal communication with the markets whose trade they sought. Mexico and the states of South America are anxious to redevelopment. Similar co-operation with this country and to aid in their development. In this connection I desire also to suggest the very great service which might be expected in enlarging and facilitating our commerce on the Pacific Ocean, were a transmarine cable laid from San Francisco to the Sandwich Islands, and thence to Japan at the north and Australia at the court. Australia at the south. The great influence of such means of communication on these routes of navigation, in developing and securing the due share of our Pacific coast in the commerce of the world, needs no illustration our ratine constitute consideration in consideration of enforcement. It may be that such an enterprise, useful and in the end profitable as it would prove to private investment, may need to be accelerated by prudent legislation by Congress in its aid, and I submit the matter to your careful consideration.

Ships of the proper construction and equipment, to be of the greatest efficiency in case of maritime war, might be made constant and active agents in time of peace in the advancement and protection of our foreign trade, and in the nurture and discipline of young seamen, who would, naturally, in some numbers, mix with and improve the crews of our merchant ships. Our merchants at home and abroad recognize the value to foreign commerce of an active movement of our naval vessels, and the intelligence and nations against a proportion every in gence and patriotic zeal of our naval officers in promoting every in-

The condition of the financial affairs of the Government, as shown by the report of the Secretary of the Treasury, is very satisfactory. It is believed that the present financial situation of the United States, whether considered with respect to trade, currency, credit, growing wealth, or the extent and variety of our resources, is more favorable than that of any other country of our time, and has never been surpassed by that of any country at any period of its history. All our industries are thriving; the rate of interest is low; new railroads are being constructed; a vast immigration is increasing our population, capital, and labor; new enterprises in great numbers are in progress; and our commercial relations with other countries are improving.

It is fortunate that this large surplus revenue occurs at a period when it may be directly applied to the payment of the public debt soon to be redeemable. No public duty has been more constantly cherished in the United States than the policy of paying the nation's debt as excitable as presible.

ished in the United States than the policy of paying the nation's debt as rapidly as possible.

The debt of the United States, less cash in the Treasury, and exclusive of accruing interest, attained its maximum of $2,756,431,571.43 in August, 1865, and has since that time been reduced to $1,886,019,504.65. Of the principal of the debt, $108,758,100 has been paid since March 1, 1877, effecting an annual saving of interest of $6,107,593. The burden of interest has also been diminished by the sale of bonds bearing a low rate of interest, and the application of the proceeds to the redemption of bonds bearing a higher rate. The annual saving thus secured since March 1, 1877, is $14,290,453.50. Within a short period over six hundred millions of 5 and 6 per cent. bonds will become redeemable. This presents a very favorable opportunity not only to further reduce the principal of the debt, but also to reduce the rate of interest on that which will remain unpaid. I call the attention of Congress to the views expressed on this subject by the tention of Congress to the views expressed on this subject by the Secretary of the Treasury in his annual report, and recommend prompt legislation, to enable the Treasury Department to complete the refunding of the debt which is about to mature.

The continuance of specie payments has not been interrupted or endangered since the date of resumption. It has contributed greatly to the revival of business and to our remarkable prosperity. The fears that preceded and accompanied resumption have proved groundless. No considerable amount of United States notes have been presented for redemption while very large sums of cold hullion both sented for redemption, while very large sums of gold bullion, both domestic and imported, are taken to the mints and exchanged for The increase of coin and bullion in the United States

There are still in existence uncanceled $347,681,013 of United States legal-tender notes. These notes were authorized as a war measure, There are still in existence uncanceled $347,681,016 of United States legal-tender notes. These notes were authorized as a war measure, made necessary by the exigencies of the conflict in which the United States was then engaged. The preservation of the nation's existence required, in the judgment of Congress, an issue of legal-tender paper money. That it served well the purpose for which it was created is not questioned, but the employment of the notes as paper money indefinitely, after the accomplishment of the object for which they were provided, was not contemplated by the framers of the law under which they were issued. These notes long since became like any other pecuniary obligation of the Government—a debt to be paid, and when paid to be canceled as mere evidence of an indebtedness and when paid to be canceled as mere evidence of an indebtedness no longer existing. I therefore repeat what was said in the annual message of last year, that the retirement from circulation of United States notes, with the capacity of legal tender in private contracts, is a step to be taken in our progress toward a safe and stable currency, which should be accepted as the policy and duty of the Government and the interest and security of the people.

At the time of the passage of the act now in force requiring the

At the time of the passage of the act now in force requiring the soinage of silver dollars, fixing their value and giving them legal-tender character, it was believed by many of the supporters of the measure that the silver dollar which it authorized would speedily become under the operations of the law of equivalent value to the gold dollar. There were other supporters of the bill who, while they doubted as to the probability of this result, nevertheless were willing the support of the support o ing to give the proposed experiment a fair trial with a view to stop the coinage if experience should prove that the silver dollar author-ized by the bill continued to be of less commercial value than the standard gold dollar.

The coinage of silver dollars, under the act referred to, began in March, 1878, and has been continued as required by the act. The average rate per month to the present time has been $2,276,492. The total amount coined prior to the 1st of November last was $72,847,750. Of this amount $47,084,450 remain in the Treasury, and only $25,763,291 are in the hands of the people. A constant effort has been made to keep this currency in circulation, and considerable expense has been necessarily incurred for this purpose, but its return to the Treasury is prompt and sure. Contrary to the confident anticipation of the friends of the measure at the time of its adoption, the value of the silver dollar, containing 412½ grains of silver, has not increased.

of the silver dollar, containing 412½ grains of silver, has not increased. During the year prior to the passage of the bill authorizing its coinage, the market value of the silver which it contained was from ninety to ninety-two cents as compared with the standard gold dollar. During the last year the average market value of the silver dollar has been eighty-eight and a half cents.

It is obvious that the legislation of the last Congress in regard to silver, so far as it was based on an anticipated rise in the value of silver as a result of that legislation, has failed to produce the effect then predicted. The longer the law remains in force, requiring as it does the coinage of a nominal dollar, which, in reality, is not a dollar, the greater becomes the danger that this country will be forced to accept a single metal as the sole legal standard of value in circulation, and this a standard of less value than it purports to be worthin the recognized money of the world.

The Constitution of the United States, sound financial principles, and our best interests all require that the country should have as its legal-tender money both gold and silver coin of an intrinsic value as bullion, equivalent to that which, upon its face, it purports to possess. The Constitution in express terms recognizes both gold and silver as the only true legal-tender money. To banish either of these metals from our currency is to narrow and limit the circulating medium of exchange to the disparagement of important interests. The United States produces more silver than any other country, and is directly interested in maintaining it as one of the two precions metals which furnish the coinage of the world. It will, in my judgment, contribute to this result if Congress will repeal so much of existing legislation as requires the coinage of silver dollars containing only 412½ grains of silver, and in its stead will authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to coin silver dollars of equivalent value as bullion with gold dollars. This will defraud no man, and will be bullion with gold dollars. This will defraud no man, and will be in accordance with familiar precedents. Congress, on several occasions, has altered the ratio of value between gold and silver, in order to establish it more nearly in accordance with the actual ratio of value between the two metals.

In financial legislation every measure in the direction of greater fidelity in the discharge of pecuniary obligations has been found by experience to diminish the rates of interest which debtors are required to pay, and to increase the facility with which money can be obtained for every legitimate purpose. Our own recent financial history shows how surely money becomes abundant whenever confi-

The Secretary of War reports that the expenditures of the War Department for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1880, were $39,921,773.03.

The appropriations for this Department for the current fiscal year amount to $41,993,630.40.

With respect to the Army, the Secretary invites attention to the fact that its strength is limited by statute (section 1115, Revised Statutes) to not more than thirty thousand enlisted men, but that provisos contained in appropriation bills have limited expenditures to the enlistment of but twenty-five thousand. It is believed the full legal strength is the least possible force at which the present organization can be maintained, having in view efficiency, discipline, and economy. While the enlistment of this force would add somewhat to economy. While the enlistment of this force would add somewhat to the appropriation for pay of the Army, the saving made in other respects would be more than an equivalent for this additional outlay, and the efficiency of the Army would be largely increased.

The rapid extension of the railroad system west of the Mississippi River and the great tide of settlers which has flowed in upon new territory impose on the military an entire change of policy. The maintenance of small posts along wagon and stage routes of travel is no longer necessary. Permanent quarters at points selected of a more substantial character than those heretofore constructed will be required. Under existing laws, permanent buildings cannot be erected. more substantial character than those heretofore constructed will be required. Under existing laws, permanent buildings cannot be erected without the sanction of Congress, and when sales of military sites and buildings have been authorized, the moneys received have reverted to the Treasury and could only become available through a new appropriation. It is recommended that provision be made by a general statute for the sale of such abandoned military posts and buildings as are found to be unnecessary, and for the application of the proceeds to the construction of other posts. While many of the present posts are of but slight value for military purposes, owing to the changed condition of the country, their occupation is continued at great expense and inconvenience, because they afford the only available shelter for troops. able shelter for troops.

The absence of a large number of officers of the line in active duty from their regiments is a serious detriment to the maintenance of the service. The constant demand for small detachments, each of which should be commanded by a commissioned officer, and the various details of officers for necessary service away from their commands occa-sions a scarcity in the number required for company duties. With a view to lessening this drain to some extent, it is recommended that the law authorizing the detail of officers from the active list as professors of tactics and military science at certain colleges and universities be so amended as to provide that all such details be made from the retired list of the Army.

Attention is asked to the necessity of providing by legislation for organizing, arming, and disciplining the active militia of the country, and liberal appropriations are recommended in this behalf. The reports of the Adjutant-General of the Army and the Chief of Ordnance touching this subject fully set forth its importance.

The report of the officer in charge of education in the Army shows that there are seventy-eight schools now in operation in the Army, with an aggregate attendance of twenty-three hundred and five enlisted men and children. The Secretary recommends the enlist-ment of one hundred and fifty school-masters, with the rank and pay of commissary sergeants. An appropriation is needed to supply the judge-advocates of the Army with suitable libraries; and the Secrejudge-advocates of the Army with suitable libraries; and the Secretary recommends that the corps of judge-advocates be placed upon the same footing as to promotion with the other staff corps of the Army. Under existing laws the Bureau of Military Justice consists of one officer, the Judge-Advocate-General, and the corps of judge-advocates of eight officers of equal rank, (majors,) with a provision that the limit of the corps shall remain at four, when reduced by casualty or resignation to that number. The consolidation of the Bureau of Military Justice and the corps of judge-advocates upon the same basis with the other staff corps of the Army would remove an unjust discrimination against deserving officers and subserve the best interests of the service.

Especial attention is asked to the report of the Chief of Engineers upon the condition of our national defenses. From a personal inspection of many of the fortifications referred to, the Secretary is able to emphasize the recommendations made, and to state that their incomplete and defenseless condition is discreditable to the country. While other nations have been increasing their means for carrying on offensive warfare and attacking maritime cities, we have been dor-mant in preparations for defense. Nothing of importance has been done toward strengthening and finishing our casemated works since done toward strengthening and finishing our casemated works since our late civil war, during which the great guns of modern warfare and the heavy armor of modern fortifications and ships came into use among the nations, and our earthworks left, by a sudden failure of appropriations some years since, in all stages of incompletion, are now being rapidly destroyed by the elements.

The two great rivers of the North American continent, the Mississippi and the Columbia, have their navigable waters wholly within the limits of the United States, and are of vast importance to our internal and foreign commerce. The permanency of the important work on the South Pass of the Mississippi River seems now to be assured. There has been no failure whatever in the maintenance of the maximum channel during the six months ended August 9 last. This experiment has opened a broad, deep highway to the ocean, and is an ment channel during the six months ended Adgust 5 last. This experiment has opened a broad, deep highway to the ocean, and is an improvement upon the permanent success of which congratulations may be exchanged among people abroad and at home, and especially among the communities of the Mississippi Valley, whose commercial exchanges float in an unobstructed channel safely to and from the

A comprehensive improvement of the Mississippi and its tributaries is a matter of transcendent importance. These great waterways comprise a system of inland transportation spread like net-work over a large portion of the United States, and navigable to the extent of many thousands of miles. Producers and consumers alike have a common interest in such unequaled facilities for cheap transportation. Geographically, commercially, and politically, they are the strongest tie between the various sections of the country. These channels of communication and interchange are the property of the nation. Its jurisdiction is paramount over their waters, and the plainest princi-ples of public interest require their intelligent and careful supervision, with a view to their protection, improvement, and the enhancement of their usefulness

The channel of the Columbia River, for a distance of about one hundred miles from its month, is obstructed by a succession of bars, which occasion serious delays in navigation, and heavy expense for lighterage and towage. A depth of at least twenty feet at low tide should be secured and maintained, to meet the requirements of the extensive and growing inland and occan commerce it subserves. The extensive and growing inland and ocean commerce it subserves. The most urgent need, however, for this great water-way is a permanent improvement of the channel at the mouth of the river.

From Columbia River to San Francisco, a distance of over six hundred miles, there is no harbor on our Pacific coast which can be apdred miles, there is no harbor on our Pacific coast which can be approached during stormy weather. An appropriation of $150,000 was made by the Forty-fifth Congress for the commencement of a breakwater and harbor of refuge, to be located at some point between the Straits of Fuca and San Francisco, at which the necessities of commerce, local and general, will be best accommodated. The amount appropriated is thought to be quite inadequate for the purpose intended. The cost of the work, when finished, will be very great, owing to the want of natural advantages for a site at any point on the coast between the designated limits, and it has not been thought to be advisable to undertake the work without a larger appropriato be advisable to undertake the work without a larger appropria-tion. I commend the matter to the attention of Congress.

The completion of the new building for the War Department is urgently needed, and the estimates for continuing its construction

The collections of books, specimens, and records constituting the Army Medical Museum and Library are of national importance. The Army Medical Museum and Library are of national importance. The library now contains about fifty-one thousand five hundred volumes and fifty-seven thousand pamphlets relating to medicine, surgery, and allied topics. The contents of the Army Medical Museum consist of twenty-two thousand specimens, and are unique in the completeness with which both military surgery and the diseases of armies are illustrated. Their destruction would be an irreparable loss, not only to the United States, but to the world. There are filed in the record and pension division over sixteen thousand bound volumes of hospital records, together with a great quantity of papers, embracing the records, together with a great quantity of papers, embracing the original records of the hospitals of our armies during the civil war. Aside from their historical value, these records are daily searched for Aside from their historical value, these records are daily scattered for evidence needed in the settlement of large numbers of pension and other claims for the protection of the Government against attempted frauds, as well as for the benefit of honest claimants.

These valuable collections are now in a building which is peculiarly exposed to the danger of destruction by fire. It is therefore earnestly recommended that an appropriation be made for a new fireproof building adequate for the present needs and reasonable future expansion of these valuable collections. Such a building should be absolutely fire-proof; no expenditure for mere architectural display is required. It is believed that a suitable structure can be erected at a cost not to exceed $250,000.

I commend to the attention of Congress the great services of the commander and chief of our armies during the war for the Union, whose wise, firm, and patriotic conduct did so much to bring that momentous conflict to a close. The legislation of the United States contains many precedents for the recognition of distinguished military merit, authorizing rank and emoluments to be conferred for eminant and the conferred for emi tary merit, authorizing rank and emoluments to be conferred for eminent services to the country. An act of Congress authorizing the appointment of a captain-general of the Army, with suitable provisions relating to compensation, retirement, and other details, would, in my judgment, be altogether fitting and proper, and would be warmly approved by the country.

The report of the Secretary of the Navy exhibits the successful and satisfactory management of that Department during the last fiscal year. The recommendation of the Secretary of the Navy that provision be made for the establishment of some form of civil government for the people of Alaska is approved. At present there is no protection of people of Alaska is approved. At present there is no protection of persons or property in that territory, except such as is afforded by the officers of the United States ship Jamestown. This vessel was dispatched to Sitka because of the fear that without the immediate presence of the national authority there was impending danger of anarchy. The steps taken to restore order have been accepted in good faith by both white and Indian inhabitants, and the necessity for this method of restraint does not, in my opinion, now exist. If, however, the Jamestown should be withdrawn, leaving the people, as at present, without the ordinary indicial and administrative and as at present, without the ordinary judicial and administrative authority of organized local government, serious consequences might

The laws provide only for the collection of revenue, the protection of public property, and the transmission of the mails. The problem is to supply a local rule for a population se scattered and so peculiar in its origin and condition. The natives are reported to be teachable and self-supporting, and if properly instructed doubtless would advance rapidly in civilization, and a new factor of prosperity would be added to the national life. I therefore recommend the requisite

The Secretary of the Navy has taken steps toward the establishment of naval coaling stations at the Isthmus of Panama to meet the requirements of our commercial relations with Central and South requirements of our commercial relations with Central and Sonth America, which are rapidly growing in importance. Locations eminently suitable, both as regards our naval purposes and the uses of commerce, have been selected, one on the east side of the Isthmus, at Chiriqui Lagoon, in the Caribbean Sea, and the other on the Pacific coast, at the Bay of Golfito. The only safe harbors sufficiently commodious on the Isthmus are at these points, and the distance between them is less than one hundred miles. The report of the Secretary of the Navy concludes with valuable suggestions with respect to the building up of our merchant-marine service, which deserve the favorbuilding up of our merchant-marine service, which deserve the favorable consideration of Congres

The report of the Postmaster-General exhibits the continual growth and the high state of efficiency of the postal service. The operations and the high state of efficiency of the postal service. The operations of no Department of the Government, perhaps, represent with greater exactness the increase in the population and the business of the country. In 1860 the postal receipts were $8,518,067.40; in 1880 the receipts were $33,315,479.34. All the inhabitants of the country are directly and personally interested in having proper mail facilities, and naturally watch the Post-Office very closely. This careful oversight on the part of the people has proved a constant stimulus to improvement. During the past year there was an increase of 2,134 post-offices, and the mail-routes were extended 27,177 miles, making an ment. During the past year there was an increase of 2,134 postoffices, and the mail-routes were extended 27,177 miles, making an additional annual transportation of 10,804,191 miles. The revenues of the postal service for the ensuing year are estimated at $38,845,174.10 and the expenditures at $42,475,932, leaving a deficiency to be appropriated out of the Treasury of $3,630,757.90.

The Universal Postal Union has received the accession of almost all the countries and colonies of the world maintaining organized postal services; and it is confidently expected that all the other countries and colonies now outside the union will soon unite therewith, thus realizing the grand idea and aim of the founders of the union of forming, for purposes of international mail communication, a single postal territory embracing the world with complete uniformity of postal charges and conditions of international exchange for all descriptions of correspondence. To enable the United States to do its full share of this great work additional legislation is asked by the Postmaster-General, to whose recommendations especially attention is called.

The suggestion of the Postmaster-General, that it would be wise to encourage by appropriate legislation the establishment of American lines of steamers by our own citizens to carry the mails between our own ports and those of Mexico, Central America, South America, and of transpacific countries, is commended to the serious consideration of Congress.

The attention of Congress is also invited to the suggestions of the Postmaster-General in regard to postal savings.

The necessity for additional provision to aid in the transaction of the business of the Federal courts becomes each year more apparent. The dockets of the Supreme Court and of the circuit courts in the greater number of the circuits are encumbered with the constant accession of cases. In the former court, and in many instances in the circuit courts, years intervene before it is practicable to bring cases

The Attorney-General recommends the establishment of an intermediate court of errors and appeals. It is recommended that the number of judges of the circuit court in each circuit, with the exception of the second circuit, should be increased by the addition of another judge; in the second circuit, that two should be added; and that an intermediate appellate court should be formed in each circuit, to consist of the circuit judges and the circuit justice, and that in the event of the absence of either of these judges the place of the absent judge should be supplied by the judge of one of the district courts in the circuit. Such an appellate court could be safely invested with large jurisdiction, and its decisions would satisfy suitors in many cases where appeals would still be allowed to the Supreme Court. The expense incurred for this intermediate court will require a very moderate increase of the appropriations for the expenses of the Department of Justice. This r consideration of Congres This recommendation is commended to the careful

It is evident that a delay of justice, in many instances oppressive and disastrous to suitors, now necessarily occurs in the Federal courts which will in this way be remedied.

The report of the Secretary of the Interior presents an elaborate account of the operations of that Department during the past year. It gives me great pleasure to say that our Indian affairs appear to be in a more hopeful condition now than ever before. The Indians have made gratifying progress in agriculture, herding, and mechanical pursuits. Many who were a few years ago in hostile conflict with the Govern-Many who were a few years ago in hostile conflict with the Government are quietly settling down on farms where they hope to make their permanent homes, building houses and engaging in the occupations of civilized life. The introduction of the freighting business among them has been remarkably fruitful of good results, in giving many of them congenial and remunerative employment and in stimulating their ambition to earn their own support. Their honesty, fidelity, and efficiency as carriers are highly praised. The organization of a police force of Indians has been equally successful in maintaining law and order upon the reservations and in exercising a whole-some moral influence among the Indians themselves. I concur with the Secretary of the Interior in the recommendation that the pay of this force be increased as an inducement to the best class of young

Much care and attention has been devoted to the enlargement of educational facilities for the Indians. The means available for this important object have been very inadequate. A few additional boarding-schools at Indian agencies have been established and the erection of buildings has been begun for several more, but an increase of the appropriations for this interesting undertaking is greatly needed to accommodate the large number of Indian children of school age. The number offered by their parents from all parts of the country for education in the Government schools is much larger than can be accommodated with the means at present available for that purpose. The number of Indian pupils at the normal school at Hampton, Vir-The number of Indian pupils at the normal school at Hampton, virginia, under the direction of General Armstrong, has been considerably increased, and their progress is highly encouraging. The Indian school established by the Interior Department, in 1879, at Carlisle, Pennsylvania, under the direction of Captain Pratt, has been equally successful. It has now nearly two hundred pupils, of both sexes, representing a great variety of the tribes east of the Rocky Mountains.

The nupils in both these institutions receive not only an elementary English education, but are also instructed in house work, agriculture, useful mechanical pursuits. A similar school was established this year at Forest Grove, Oregon, for the education of Indian youth on the Pacific coast. In addition to this thirty-six Indian boys and girls were selected from the Eastern Cherokees and placed in board-ing-schools in North Carolina, where they are to receive an elementary English education and training in industrial pursuits. The interest shown by Indian parents, even among the so-called wild tribes, in the education of their children is very gratifying, and gives promise that the results accomplished by the efforts now making will be of lasting benefit.

The expenses of Indian education have so far been drawn from the permanent civilization fund at the disposal of the Department of the Interior; but the fund is now so much reduced that the continuance of this beneficial work will in the future depend on specific appropriations by Congress for the purpose, and I venture to express the hope that Congress will not permit institutions so fruitful of good results to perish for want of means for their support. On the contrary, an increase of the number of such schools appears to me highly advisable.

The past year has been unusually free from disturbances among the Indian tribes. An agreement has been made with the Utes, by which they surrender their large reservation in Colorado in consideration of an annuity to be paid to them, and agree to settle in severalty on certain lands designated for that purpose, as farmers, holding individual title to their land in fee-simple, inalienable for a certain period. In this way a costly Indian war has been avoided, which at one time seemed imminent, and for the first time in the history of the country an Indian nation has given up its tribal existence to be setthed in severalty and to live as individuals under the common protection of the laws of the country. The conduct of the Indians throughout the country during the past year, with but few noteworthy exceptions, has been orderly and peaceful. The guerrilla warfare carried on for two years by Victoria and his band of Southern Apaches has virtually come to an end by the death of that chief and most of his followers on Mexican soil. The disturbances caused on our northern frontier by Sitting Bull and his men, who had taken refuge in the British dominions, are also likely to cease. A large majority of his followers have surrendered to our military forces, and majority of his followers have surrendered to our military forces, and the remainder are apparently in progress of disintegration.

I concur with the Secretary of the Interior in expressing the earnest hope that Congress will at this session take favorable action on the bill providing for the allotment of lands on the different reservations in severalty to the Indians, with patents conferring fee-simple title inalienable for a certain period, and the eventual disposition of the residue of the reservations for general settlement, with the consent and for the benefit of the Indians, placing the latter under the equal protection of the laws of the country. This measure, together with a vigorous prosecution of our educational efforts, will work the most important and effective advance toward the solution of the Indian problem, in preparing for the gradual merging of our Indian population in the great body of American citizenship.

A large increase is reported in the disposal of public lands for setthement during the past year, which marks the prosperous growth of our agricultural industry and a vigorous movement of population toward our unoccupied lands. As this movement proceeds the codification of our land laws, as well as proper legislation to regulate the disposition of public lands, become of more pressing necessity, and I therefore invite the consideration of Congress to the report and the accompanying draught of a bill, made by the public lands commission, which were communicated by me to Congress at the last session. Early action upon this important subject is highly de-

The attention of Congress is again asked to the wasteful depreda-tions committed on our public timber lands, and the rapid and indis-criminate destruction of our forests. The urgent necessity for legislation to this end is now generally recognized. In view of the lawless character of the depredations committed, and the disastrous consequences which will inevitably follow their continuance, legislation has again and again been recommended to arrest the evil and to preserve for the people of our Western States and Territories the timber

The report of the director of the geological survey is a document of unusual interest. The consolidation of the various geological and geographical surveys and exploring enterprises, each of which has heretofore operated upon an independent plan, without concert, cannot fail to be of great benefit to all those industries of the country which depend upon the development of our mineral resources. The labors of the scientific men, of recognized merit, who compose the corps of the geological survey, during the first season of their field operations and inquiries, appear to have been very comprehensive, and will soon be communicated to Congress in a number of volumes. The director of the survey recommends that the investigations car-The director of the survey recommends that the investigations carried on by his bureau, which so far have been confined to the so-called public-land States and Territories, be extended over the entire country, and that the necessary appropriation be made for this purpose. This would be particularly beneficial to the iron, coal, and other mining interests of the Mississippi Valley, and of the Eastern and Southern States. The subject is commended to the careful consideration of Commence. sideration of Congress

The Secretary of the Interior asks attention to the want of room in the public buildings of the capital, now existing and in progress of construction, for the accommodation of the clerical force employed and of the public records. Necessity has compelled the renting of private buildings in different parts of the city for the location of public offices, for which a large amount of rent is annually paid, while the separation of offices belonging to the same Department impedes the transaction of current business. The Secretary suggests that the blocks surrounding La Fayette Square on the east, north, and west be purchased as the sites for new edifices for the accommodation of the Government offices, leaving the square itself intact; and that, if such buildings were constructed upon a harmonious plan of architecture, they would add much to the beauty of the national capital, and would, together with the Treasury and the new State, Navy, and War Department building, form one of the most imposing groups of public edifices in the world.

The Commissioner of Agriculture expresses the confident belief that his efforts in behalf of the production of our own sugar and tea have been encouragingly rewarded. The importance of the results attained have attracted marked attention at home, and have received the special consideration of foreign nations. The successful cultivamake a difference of many millions of dollars annually in the wealth of the nation.

The report of the Commissioner asks attention particularly to the continued prevalence of an infectious and contagious cattle disease known and dreaded in Europe and Asia as cattle plague, or pleuropneumonia. A mild type of this disease in certain sections of our 1880.

country is the occasion of great loss to our farmers and of serious disturbance to our trade with Great Britain, which furnishes a market for most of our live stock and dressed meats. The value of neat cattle exported from the United States for the eight months ended August 31, 1880, was more than $12,000,000, and nearly double the value for the same period in 1879, an unexampled increase of export trade. Your early attention is solicited to this important matter.

The Commissioner of Education reports a continued increase of public interest in educational affairs, and that the public schools generally throughout the country are well sustained. Industrial training is attracting deserved attention, and colleges for instruction, theoretical and practical in agriculture and mechanic arts, including the Government schools recently established for the instruction of Indian youth, are gaining steadily in public estimation. The Commissioner Government schools recently established for the instruction of Indian youth, are gaining steadily in public estimation. The Commissioner asks special attention to the depredations committed on the lands reserved for the future support of public instruction, and to the very great need of help from the nation for schools in the Territories and in the Southern States. The recommendation heretofore made is repeated and urged, that an educational fund be set apart from the net proceeds of the sales of the public lands annually, the income of which and the remainder of the net annual proceeds to be distributed on some satisfactory plan to the States and the Territories and uted on some satisfactory plan to the States and the Territories and the District of Columbia.

The success of the public schools of the District of Columbia, and the progress made, under the intelligent direction of the board of education and the superintendent, in supplying the educational requirements of the District with thoroughly trained and efficient teachers, is very gratifying. The acts of Congress, from time to time, donating public lands to the several States and Territories in aid of educational interests, have proved to be wise measures of public policy, resulting in great and lasting benefit. It would seem to be a matter of simple justice to extend the benefits of this legislation, the wisdom of which has been so fully vindicated by experience, to the District of Columbia. trict of Columbia.

I again commend the general interests of the District of Columbia to the favorable consideration of Congress. The affairs of the District, as shown by the report of the commissioners, are in a very satisfactory condition.

In my annual messages heretofore, and in my special message of December 19, 1879, I have urged upon the attention of Congress the necessity of reclaiming the marshes of the Potomac adjacent to the capital, and I am constrained by its importance to advert again to the subject. These flats embrace an area of several hundred acres. They are an impediment to the drainage of the city, and seriously impair its health. It is believed that with this substantial improvement of its river front the capital would be, in all respects, one of the most attractive cities in the world. Aside from its permanent the most attractive cities in the world. Aside from its permanent population, this city is necessarily the place of residence of persons from every section of the country, engaged in the public service. Many others reside here temporarily, for the transaction of business with the Government. It should not be forgotten that the land acquired will probably be worth the cost of reclaiming it, and that the navigation of the river will be greatly improved. I therefore again invite the attention of Congress to the importance of prompt provision for this much-needed and too long-delayed improvement.

The water supply of the city is inadequate. In addition to the ordinary use throughout the city is inadequate.

The water supply of the city is inadequate. In addition to the ordinary use throughout the city, the consumption by Government is necessarily very great in the navy-yard, arsenal, and the various Departments, and a large quantity is required for the proper preservation of the numerous parks and the cleansing of sewers. I recommend that this subject receive the early attention of Congress, and that, in making provision for an increased supply, such means be adopted as will have in view the future growth of the city. Temporary expedients for such a purpose cannot but be wasteful of money, and therefore unwise. A more ample reservoir, with corresponding facilities for keeping it filled, should, in my judgment, be constructed. I commend again to the attention of Congress the subject of the removal from their present location of the depots of the several railroads entering the city; and I renew the recommendations of my roads entering the city; and I renew the recommendations of my former messages in behalf of the erection of a building for the Congressional Library, the completion of the Washington Monument, and of liberal appropriations in support of the benevolent, reformatory, and penal institutions of the District.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Monday, December 6, 1880.

This being the day designated by the Constitution, the members of the House of Representatives of the Forty-sixth Congress assembled in their Hall for their third session. At twelve o'clock m. the Speaker, Hon. Samuel J. Randall, a Representative from the State of Pennsylvania, called the House to order.

PRAYER.

The Chaplain, Rev. W. P. HARRISON, D. D., offered the following

Almighty God, our heavenly Father, we thank Thee that Thou hast permitted so many of Thy servants, the representatives of the people, to assemble in this House this day. Thou hast graciously blessed them and preserved them in life and health. May it please Thee to continue unto them every blessing of Thy good providence, and direct them with the spirit of wisdom, that all their actions may promote the prosperity of our common country.

May the Divine blessing abide upon the President and the Vice-President, upon all the officers of the Government and upon all our people. May they fear God, and mayest Thou continue every blessing of the heaven above and of the earth beneath unto them. And to Thy name be all praise for ever and ever, through Christ Jesus our Redeemer. Amen.

DAVID W. JONES.

Mr. MORTON introduced a bill (H. R. No. 6504) for the relief of David W. Jones; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

CHINESE IMMIGRATION, ETC.

Mr. COX introduced the following resolution of inquiry; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs:

Resolved, That the President of the United States, if not incompatible with the public service, communicate to this House any correspondence and treaties with the Empire of China having reference to immigration and commerce between the two countries.

VOID REGISTRATION OF TRADE-MARKS.

Mr. COX also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 6505) to provide for refunding of fees in all cases of void registration of trade-marks; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

ORGANIZATION OF MILITIA.

Mr. BAILEY introduced a bill (H. R. No. 6506) providing for the organization of the militia of the United States; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Militia, and ordered to be printed.

THE TARIFF.

Mr. HURD introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 334) relating to the tariff; which was read a first time by its title.

Mr. HURD. I ask that the joint resolution be read at length, and that it be referred to the Committee on Ways and Means.

The joint resolution was read the second time at length.

Mr. CONGER. I ask that the title of this resolution, or whatever the paper is termed, be read. The Clerk read the title, as follows:

A joint resolution relating to the tariff.

Mr. CONGER. What is the reference that is proposed?

The SPEAKER. The joint resolution is introduced for reference to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. CONGER. I only heard the closing part of the paper read, and I supposed it was something different from a resolution. I would be anxious to inquire in what town in Pennsylvania that paper has been discussed

The SPEAKER. The Chair is unable to answer that question, having heard the resolution now for the first time.

Mr. ROBESON (to Mr. CONGER.) You think that is a "local" question. The joint resolution was referred to the Committee on Ways and Means and ordered to be printed.

SECTION 153 REVISED STATUTES.

Mr. CONVERSE introduced a bill (H. R. No. 6507) to amend section 153 of the Revised Statutes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

PENNSYLVANIA NATIONAL GUARD.

Mr. O'NEILL introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 335) authorizing the Secretary of War to exchange the arms of the National Guard of the State of Pennsylvania; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

MONUMENT TO GENERAL LA FAYETTE.

Mr. WARD introduced a bill (H. R. No. 6508) providing for the erection of a monument in memory of General La Fayette on the field of the battle of Brandywine, in the State of Pennsylvania; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

JOHN PEDLOW.

Mr. WARD also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 6509) making an appropriation to repay John Pedlow for moneys lost or stolen in the United States mails; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

CATHARINE HALL

Mr. WARD also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 6510) granting a pension to Catharine Hall; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

WIDOW AND CHILDREN OF JOHN W. JUDSON.

Mr. ALDRICH, of Rhode Island, introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 336) for the relief of the widow and children of John W. Judson, agent of the United States at Oswego, New York, for public works on Lake Ontario; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

NEWPORT HARBOR.

Mr. ALDRICH, of Rhode Island, also submitted the following resolution of inquiry; which was referred to the Committee on Com-

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the United States. That the Secretary of War is hereby requested to communicate to the House of Representatives information as to the present condition of Newport Harbor, Rhode Island, and what work is necessary to be done to make the harbor available for the purposes of commerce, with an estimate of the cost of the requisite dredging or other work.

MARY GODSEY.

Mr. DIBRELL introduced a bill (H. R. No. 6511) granting arrears a pension to Mary Godsey, of Meigs County, Tennessee; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

AGENTS INVESTIGATING SOUTHERN CLAIMS.

Mr. DIBRELL also submitted the following resolution of inquiry; which was referred to the Committee on War Claims:

Resolved. That the Quartermaster-General of the United States Army be, and he is hereby, requested to furnish to this House, at the earliest day practicable, a list of the agents in the employ of that department investigating southern claims, with the salary and expenses of each agent per annum, and the average number of claims investigated by each agent per annum.

YORKTOWN CENTENNIAL CELEBRATION.

Mr. GOODE introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 337) authorizing and requesting the President to extend to the Government and people of France an invitation to join the Government and people of the United States in the observance of the centennial anniversary of the surrender of Lord Cornwallis and the British forces at Yorktown, Virginia; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Select Committee on Yorktown Celebration, and ordered to be printed.

ADMISSION OF DAKOTA AS A STATE.

Mr. BENNETT introduced a bill (H. R. No. 6512) to enable the people of Dakota to form a constitution and State government, and for the admission of the State into the Union on an equal footing with the original States; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Territories, and ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The call of States and Territories for the introduction of bills and joint resolutions has been completed. The Chair will now recognize gentlemen who were not in their seats at the time their States were called for the introduction of bills, &c., for reference and printing.

NATIONAL RAILWAY FROM NEW YORK TO COUNCIL BLUFFS.

Mr. GILLETTE submitted the following; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to furnish this House, at as early a day as practicable, from such information as he has at hand, an estimate of the cost of a double track steel railway to run from New York City, New York, to Council Bluffs, Iowa, the terminus of the Union Pacific Railroad, the road to be thoroughly built and properly equipped for a great national and military highway.

DISEASES OF CATTLE.

Mr. RYAN, of Kansas, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 6513) to provide for the prevention and suppression of infectious and contagious diseases of domesticated animals; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Agriculture, and ordered to be

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I move that the House now take a recess for thirty minutes.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at one o'clock and five minutes p. m.) the House took a recess.

The recess having expired, the House resumed its session at one o'clock and thirty-five minutes p. m.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. BLOUNT, Mr. Speaker, the committee on the part of the House, appointed to act with a similar committee on the part of the Senate, to wait upon the President and inform him that the two Houses were ready to receive any communication he might desire to make, have discharged that duty and were informed by the President that his annual message would be forthwith transmitted to Congress.

ELECTORAL COUNT.

Mr. BICKNELL. I desire to ask if it would now be in order to call up the concurrent resolution of the Senate in reference to a joint rule for counting the electoral vote for President and Vice-President? The consideration of that resolution was, by order of the House, fixed for

The SPEAKER. The Chair learns, by reference to the Calendar, that the consideration of the concurrent resolution, to which allusion is made by the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. BICKNELL,] was fixed for to-day.

Mr. BICKNELL. If in order, I would like to call it up now.

Mr. KEIFER. For what purpose is it to be called up now? For

Mr. BICKNELL. For the purpose of having a vote upon it.
Mr. KEIFER. I desire to submit some remarks upon that subject before a vote is taken.

Mr. CONGER. I suppose—

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to state that he is advised that this is not a continuing order.

Mr. CONGER. I suppose that the rule requiring business coming over from the last session to be taken up at the end of six days would cover this case, if objection is made to the present consideration of this subject.

The SPEAKER. This is a fixed order for to-day by action of the House in June last, not in the nature of unfinished business as provided for under Rule XXVII of the House, and also the joint rule. Business will be suspended to receive a message from the President.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message in writing, with accompanying documents, from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. Rogers, his private secretary.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will now read the message just received from the President of the United States.

The Clerk read the annual message.
[It will be found in the proceedings of the Senate, page 2.]
Mr. FERNANDO WOOD submitted the following; which was read, considered, and agreed to: Ordered, That the message of the President be committed to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and, with the accompanying documents, printed. Mr. FERNANDO WOOD also submitted the following resolution; which was referred, under the law, to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That there be printed — thousand extra copies of the President's annual message for the use of the House.

COUNTING THE ELECTORAL VOTE.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BICKNELL] was on the floor when the message of the President was received, and yielded to permit the reading of the same.

Mr. BICKNELL. I move to take up the concurrent resolution of the Senate which was under consideration before—the resolution reg-

the Senate which was under consideration before—the resolution regulating the count of the electoral vote.

Mr. PRICE. I make a point of order on that. Mr. WEAVER. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER] will state his parliamentary inquiry. The Chair will thereafter hear the point of order of the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. PRICE.]

Mr. WEAVER. I believe the gentleman from Indiana cannot take the floor for the purpose indicated, and thereby deprive members of the opportunity to offer resolutions under a motion to suspend the rules, that being a special right designated by the rules to be ever. rules, that being a special right designated by the rules to be exercised at this time.

The SPEAKER. The House on the 14th day of last June expressed an indisposition to consider then this concurrent resolution, but by a yea and nay vote indicated this as the day on which it would consider the resolution. In view of that vote the Chair felt it his duty to give the gentleman from Indiana the opportunity of placing this concurrent resolution with reference to the electoral count in such an attitude before the House as that it should receive at some reasonable attitude before the House as that it should receive at some reasonable time consideration. The Chair based his recognition of the gentleman from Indiana because of this vote of the House.

Mr. CONGER. I desire to say on this point that the motion agreed to by the House was to postpone the resolution until to-day. The record speaks of making it a special order; but that of course would require a two-thirds vote, though the motion was made, or so stated by the Chair, to postpone the subject and make it a special order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair, upon an examination of the Calendar, finds no mention there of making the resolution a special order. The finds no mention there of making the resolution a special order. The question that arises (which the Chair does not now decide) is whether this resolution is a question of privilege?

Mr. CONGER. That point does not now arise. But certainly post-

Mr. CONGER. That point does not now arise. But certainly postponing the resolution until to-day would simply postpone it subject to the rules regulating business to day; and this kind of business does not come up in this order to-day.

Mr. COX. I call for the reading of the order.
The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the House will better understand the position of the question if the order be read.
The Clerk read as follows:

The regular order being demanded, the Speaker stated the same to be the concurrent resolution of the Senate proposing a joint rule for counting the votes of electors for President and Vice-President, pending when the House last adjourned, the pending question being the demand of Mr. BICKNELL for the previous question thereou;

the pending quantitation of the House.

And being put,
No quorum voted thereon.
On motion of Mr. Bicknell.
Ordered, That there be a call of the House.
The roll having been called, the following named members falled to answer to their names, namely, On motion of Mr. Bicknell, all further proceedings under the call were dis-pensed with.

The question recurring on the demand of Mr. Bicknell for the previous ques-

The question recurring on the demand of Mr. BICKNELL for the previous question; When,
No quorum voted thereon.
And then,
Mr. BICKNELL withdrew the Paid demand and moved that the further consideration of the said resolution be postponed until the first Monday in December, immediately after the morning hour.
Mr. BICKNELL demanded the previous question; which was seconded and the wair question ordered.

main question ordered.
And being put, namely,
Will the House agree to the said motion?
It was decided in the affirmative; yeas 90, nays 75, not voting 127.

Mr. CONGER. Now, Mr. Speaker, the RECORD as printed has not been corrected to correspond with the statement of the Journal. The Journal, as I understand, states correctly that this resolution was simply postponed until to-day; but in the RECORD it is said that the resolution has been made a special order. To make it a special order would of course have required a two-thirds vote, and there having been no such vote it cannot have been properly stated in the RECORD that the resolution was made a special order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Weaver] raises the point of order that this is the time fixed by the rules for motions to suspend the rules, and that such a motion would take the gentle-man from Indiana off the floor. If the gentleman was properly rec-ognized, and the matter was up, the question of consideration could be raised, and it would only require a majority vote to refuse to consider. It seems to the Chair the motion to suspend the rules should have to-day equal force with a majority vote in the House. The Chair recognizes the right of a member to move to suspend the rules as being to-day of higher order by the rules.

Mr. PRICE. That is just what I make and that is the one in reference to which I arose to make the point of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the House had better permit this question to lie over until to-morrow, or some day later in the week, so as to afford opportunity to him to examine fully as to the point of order whether this is a privileged question growing out of the requirements of the twelfth article of the Constitution of the United States for counting the electoral vote.

Mr. COX. Is this a continuing order?

The SPEAKER. It is not; and that is the difficulty. If the House should permit this to have the characteristic of a continuing order,

Mr. CONGER. Our objection is decided against the course which the Chair has suggested. We do not wish to have any continuing order.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman from Michigan unwilling to have this go over without loss of right for a single day so as to give the Chair the opportunity to examine the point of order as to whether this is a privileged question growing out of the requirements of the twelfth article of the Constitution of the United States?

Mr. CONGER. In our point of view no advantage could accrue to the friends of this resolution if we did so permit. It would stand as to-day with the disadvantage on our part of laboring for a whole day to defeat what we can now do in an hour or half an hour.

Mr. COX. Then give us a vote on it.

Mr. COX. Then give us a vote on it.
Mr. CONGER. No.
The SPEAKER. The Chair could decide that point now if it is

Mr. ROBESON. Will the Chair permit me to ask him a question?
The SPEAKER. Certainly. The Chair does not wish to decide until after reflection and further examination.

until after reflection and further examination.

Mr. ROBESON. Will the Chair permit a question?

The SPEAKER. Certainly.

Mr. ROBESON. If the Chair decides it to be a privileged question, can not it be brought up at any time?

The SPEAKER. The Chair would like in that connection to have read a decision on an analogous proposition.

Mr. ROBESON. If it be not a privileged question, it is not necessary for the Chair to take time to consider it. If it is a privileged question, the Chair can rule on it.

question, the Chair can rule on it.

Mr. SPARKS. It is not a continuing order.

Mr. ROBESON. But if it is a question of high privilege it will come up

Mr. SPARKS. The Chair wants it to pass over with that privilege, and that only.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would have preferred that the House take the matter into its own charge instead of requiring him to make a decision. The Clerk will now read for the information of the House law the present occupant of the chair. a former decision made by the present occupant of the chair.

The Clerk read as follows:

TUESDAY, February 27, 1877.

Mr. Field, from the Select Committee on the Privileges, Powers, and Duties of the House of Representatives in Counting the Vote for President and Vice-President of the United States, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4893) to amend the Revised Statutes of the United States in respect to vacancies in the office of President and Vice-President, and demanded the previous question thereon.

Mr. Horatio C. Burchard made the point of order that the committee had no authority to report the said bill.

The Speaker overruled the point of order, on the ground that the resolution creating the said committee authorized it "to ascertain and report what are the privileges, powers, and duties of the House of Representatives in counting the votes for President and Vice-President of the United States," and also gave the committee the right to report at any time. The Speaker further stated that he could not conceive of a question of higher constitutional and parliamentary privilege than was involved in the bill under consideration, and he therefore held the bill to be in order at this time.

Mr. CONGER. The Chair will recollect the right of the committee.

Mr. CONGER. The Chair will recollect the right of the committee to report at any time made by the decision on the question of privilege, as remarked by gentlemen on the floor at that time, was of no importance then. The decision which was made was not necessary to settle that question then. It came by virtue of the right and power of the committee to report at any time without any reference to the question of privilege.

The SPEAKER. The twelfth article of the Constitution provides that the two Houses of Congress shall count the electoral vote, which is according to past practice.

Mr. ROBESON. It does not. I beg your pardon. [Cries of "No" from the republican side of the House.] It does not. That is just where we differ.

Mr. COX. Has the Chair ruled this is a question of privilege to come up to-morrow?

The SPEAKER. If the point of order is made, the Chair will rule.

Mr. CONGER. How can that question be ruled on now? In regard to the matter before the House, here is a simple postponement of a matter of business till to-day—

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the House understood what they wanted to do when they voted by a yea-and-nay vote to postpone the consideration of this subject till to-day.

Mr. CONGER. The postponement is simply a question whether the House desired to consider it, if it be indefinite at all, or if to a day certain, to get rid of it for the time being. It gives it no privilege whatever. The House wanted to get rid of the question and they put whatever. The House wanted to get rid of the question and they put it off past the recess, and to-day it stands here because it was post-poned till to-day. But the rules forbid this being taken up. The SPEAKER. Privileged questions are capable of being post-

Mr. CONGER. But they cannot come in on a Monday in this way.
The SPEAKER. The Chair has ruled, on the suggestion of the gentleman from Iowa, that a motion to suspend the rules would at this time interrupt the consideration of this subject.
Mr. PRICE. I move to suspend the rules and offer the following bill.

The SPEAKER. The question of consideration can be raised and I determined by a majority vote; and certainly if two-thirds are willing to suspend the rules, then that vote should in like manner interrupt the consideration of the resolution. The Chair, in the spirit of a fair consideration of this subject, suggested to the House to permit this matter to have attached to it the characteristic of a continuing this matter to have attached to it the characteristic of a continuing order. If the House refuse to do that, then the gentleman from Indiana will be driven, of course, to claim the consideration of this subject as a question of privilege, and when he does the Chair will be ready to decide it.

Mr. BICKNELL. Then I will claim that privilege now.

Mr. CONGER. I move that the House adjourn.

Mr. COX. If this question is to come up to-morrow, then I will move that the House now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan moves that the House adjourn, pending which the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIGGS] desires to be recognized.

Mr. COX. I made an inquiry of the Chair which I would like to have answered. I desire to know if the Chair would recognize this question to-morrow; if so, I will move to adjourn now.

The SPEAKER. If the point be raised and the claim made that this presents a question of privilege, and the point of order is made against it, the Chair will then decide.

Mr. BICKNELL. I do claim that it presents a question of privilege. Mr. CONGER. I have already moved that the House adjourn.

Mr. WEAVER. The motion to adjourn is not in order while the gentleman from Indiana is on the floor.

gentleman from Indiana is on the floor.

The SPEAKER. One motion to adjourn pending a motion to suspend the rules is in order under the rules.

Mr. BICKNELL. I ask that the question of privilege be decided

Mr. CONGER. I have not withdrawn the motion to adjourn.

The SPEAKER. Pending that motion to adjourn, the gentleman from Indiana desires to make this inquiry as to whether this matter presents a question of privilege or not.

Mr. CONGER. Prior to that I made the motion to adjourn.

The SPEAKER. It is not material whether the motion to adjourn comes before or after the point of order. The motion to adjourn will

Mr. CONGER. It is important for the reason that this question might otherwise be regarded as pending when the House adjourned, and that would give the matter a status which I do not wish it to I therefore ask that the motion to adjourn which I have made be considered in its proper order.

The SPEAKER. That is the gentleman's right, if he insists, and the point of order will have to be made anew.

DEATH OF HON. EVARTS W. FARR.

Mr. BRIGGS. I ask the gentleman from Michigan to yield to me for a moment to introduce a resolution.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is advised that the gentleman from New Hampshire desires to announce the death of his late colleague,

Mr. FARR.

Mr. CONGER. I have no objection to yielding for that purpose.

Mr. BRIGGS. Mr. Speaker, it becomes my painful duty to announce the death of my late colleague, Hon. Evarts W. Farr, and I desire to present the following resolutions in connection therewith.

I wish also to give notice that at some future day I will ask to present the customary resolutions, in order that appropriate remarks may be heard in relation to the life and services of the deceased.

The SPEAKER. The resolutions proposed by the gentleman from New Hampshire will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That this House has heard with sincere regret the announcement of the death of Hon. Evarts W. Farr, late a Representative from the State of New Hampshire, and a member-elect to the Forty-seventh Congress from said State.

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House be directed to communicate the foregoing resolution to the Senate.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect to the deceased this House do now address.

The resolutions were agreed to; and accordingly (at three o'clock and forty-five minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and other papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows, viz:

WITHERS, a Senator from the State of Pennsylvania; and ROBERT E. WITHERS, a Senator from the State of Virginia, appeared in their seats to-day.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. J. BULLOCK, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

COMMITTEES OF THE SENATE.

On motion of Mr. WALLACE, it was Ordered, That so much of the forty-sixth rule of the Senate as requires the appointment of the standing and other committees of the Senate to be made by ballot be suspended.

Mr. WALLACE submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the standing committees of the Senate as constituted at last session be revived and continued for this session, and that Mr. Pugh, of Alabama, be assigned to the places thereon made vacant by the retirement of Mr. Pryor; Mr. Blair on Pensions in lieu of Mr. Ingalis; and Mr. Blair on Education and Labor in lieu of Mr. Sharon; and that the positions of Messrs. Ransom and Lamar on the Committee on Railroads be reversed; and that of Messrs. Lamar and Jonas on the Improvement of the Mississippi River and its Tributaries be reversed.

Mr. WALLACE also submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent:

Resolved. That the following select committees be appointed for the present session with the powers heretofore given to each on the subjects to which they respectively relate; that is to say: To Examine the Several Branches of the Civil Service; to take into consideration the state of the law respecting the ascertaining and declaration of the result of the Elections of President and Vice-President of the United States; to inquire into frauds in late elections, with power to report as given by resolution of June 1, 1880; to investigate and report the best means of preventing the introduction and spread of epidemic diseases; on the bill (S. No. 227) to provide that the principal officer of each of the Executive Departments may occupy a seat on the floor of the Senate and House of Representatives; to make provision for taking the Teuth Census; Joint Commission on the Library; on the Freedman's Savings and Trust Company; to inquire into all claims of citizens of the United States against the government of Nicaragua; and that the membership of each of said committees be as at the last session.

Mr. BLAIR. If I caught the language of the resolution correctly, the special committee to investigate frauds in elections, of which the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALLACE] was the chairman, is dropped from the list. That committee has not completed its labors, I believe. It has taken testimony, but not reported.

Mr. WALLACE. If the Senator will permit me, he is in error. The committee is not dropped; it is revived with power, as authorized.

committee is not dropped; it is revived with power, as authorized by the resolution of June 1, to report at this session; and the com-

LAWS OF NEW YORK-BY AUTHORITY.

[Every law, unless a different time shall be prescribed therein, shall commence and take effect throughout the State on and not before the twentieth day after the day of its final passage, as certified by the secretary of state.—Section 12, title 4, chapter 7, part 1, Revised Statutes.]

CHAPTER 213.

An act to ratify and confirm the agreement in relation to the boundary-lines be-tween the State of New York and the State of Connecticut, entered into by commissioners on the part of said States.

Passed May 8, 1880; three-fifths being present.

The people of the State of New York, represented in senate and assembly, do enact as follows:

SECTION 1. The agreement for the settlement of the boundary-lines between the State of New York and the State of Connecticut entered into by the commissioners appointed for that purpose on the part of said States respectively, a duplicate original of which is on file in the office of the secretary of state, and a copy of which has been reported to the Legislature, is hereby ratified and adopted. The said agreement is as follows, namely: "Memorandum of agreement by and between the subscribers, commissioners of the States of New York and Connecticut, respectively, to settle the question of the boundaries between said States, being thereunto authorized by the resolutions of said States respectively passed by them as hereunto annexed, that is to say: We, Allen C. Beach, secretary of state; Augustus Schoommaker, jr., attorney-general; and Horatio Scymour, jr., State engineer and surveyor, commissioners of the State of New York; and we, Origen S. Seymour, La Fayette S. Foster, and William T. Minor, commissioners of the State of Connecticut, have agreed, and do hereby agree, to fix, determine, and establish the boundaries between our respective States, subject to the approval and ratification of the Legislatures of our respective States, in the following manner: We agree that the boundary on the land constituting the western boundary of Connecticut and the eastern boundary of the State of New York shall be, and is, as the same was defined by monuments erected by commissioners appointed by the Legislature of the State of New York and completed in the year 1860, the said boundary-line extending from Byram Point, formerly called Lyon's Point, on the south to the line of the State of Massachusetts on the north. And we further agree that the boundary on the sound shall be, and is, as follows: Beginning at a point in the center of the channel about six hundred feet south of the extreme rocks of Byram Point, marked No. 0 on appended United States Coast Survey chart; thence running in a true southeast course three and one-quarter statute miles; thence in a straight line (the arc of a great circle) northeasterly to a point marked No. 1 on the annexed United States Coast Survey chart of Fisher's Island Sound, which point is on the long east three-quarters north

DAVID TORRANCE

Mr. HAWLEY. I ask unanimous consent also, at this time, to present a bill in relation to the subject-matter of the memorial just read, providing for the assent of Congress to the agreement, and move that it be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, with leave to report at any time.

The SPEAKER. The title of the bill will be read. The Clerk read as follows:

A bill concerning settlement of boundary-lines between New York and Connecticut.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. Mr. Speaker, I must object to granting

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. Mr. Speaker, I must object to granting leave to the committee to report at any time.

Mr. HAWLEY. If the gentleman from New York will allow me to state the reason, I think he will withdraw his objection. I am instructed by the governor of my State to ask legislation upon this subject by Congress. I understand the Legislatures of both of the States named contemplate some legislation upon the subject, and some action will be needed to adapt themselves to the circumstances. Both Legislatures must in the subject of the states are most in the subject of the states. latures meet in January

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. There are certain bills pending which Congress must pass during this session; and the giving this power to report at any time is giving a privilege which may overthrow more report at any time is giving a privilege which may overthrow more important questions.

Mr. HAWLEY. I think the gentleman from New York will see, if he will look at the papers, and I believe I can assure him, that there is no probability of argument in this matter. I cannot imagine that anybody will object. The boundary commissioners of the two States have unanimously agreed upon this settlement; both Legislatures have sanctioned it by large majorities; both governors ask that it be submitted to Congress now; the governor of Connecticut, certainly, and I presume the governor of New York, would like to have it taken up and disposed of before the recess, that the Legislatures when they meet in January may legislate on the subject.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. If the gentleman from Connecticut will state that this will lead to no debate I will not object.

Mr. HAWLEY. I cannot conceive it possible that it will.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. Then I withdraw the objection.

There being no further objection, the bill (H. R. No. 6514) was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

and ordered to be printed.

REPRINT OF INTERSTATE-COMMERCE BILL

Mr. REAGAN. I ask unanimous consent for an order to reprint House bill No. 4748, to establish a board of commissioners of inter-state commerce, and for other purposes, and the two substitutes. There being no objection, it was so ordered.

CONGRESSIONAL RECORD FOR LEGATIONS ABROAD.

Mr. PRICE, by unanimous consent, introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 338) directing one copy of the Congressional Record to be sent to each of our legations abroad; which was read a first and second time

Mr. PRICE. I ask unanimous consent that the joint resolution be now put upon its passage.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Public Printer be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to forward, free of charge, one copy of the Congressional Record to each of our legations abroad, commencing at the beginning of this session, and continuing each day until the 4th day of March, 1881.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

JOINT COMMITTEE ON YORKTOWN CELEBRATION.

Mr. GOODE. There is on the Speaker's table a Senate concurrent resolution authorizing the employment of a clerk by the Joint Committee on the Yorktown Centennial Celebration. I ask unanimous consent that the resolution be taken from the Speaker's table for present consideration.

Mr. CONGER. Let it be read.

The resolution was read, as follows:

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES, June 14, 1880.

Resolved, (the House of Representatives concurring.) That the Joint Committee on the Yorktown Centennial Celebration be authorized to sit during the recess of Congress, at such times and places as may be necessary, and to appoint a clerk, whose compensation, at the usual rate of clerks to committees of the Senate, shall be paid equally out of the contingent funds of the Senate and House of Representatives.

Mr. HAYES. I would suggest that the time during which that resolution provides the joint committee may sit has already passed. The resolution provides that the committee be authorized to sit during the recess of Congress. What is the object of passing such a resolution at the present time?

Mr. GOODE. I will state to the gentleman from Illinois that there is a great deal of business before this committee. In the first place they have to select a site for the proposed monument at Yorktown; they have to select a model for the proposed monument; and they have a good deal of correspondence in regard to the celebration which is proposed to be held on the 19th October, 1881. Up to this time the joint committee of the Senate and of the House have been acting without any clerk at all.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would state to the gentleman from Virginia that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HAYES] makes the criticism that the resolution provides for the committee sitting during the recess of Congress and that time has passed.

Mr. GOODE. The resolution was passed by the Senate before the adjournment of last session. In sending it back to the Senate I think we should not change the phraseology. The material part of the resolution is that which authorizes the employment of a clerk.

Mr. HAYES. It seems to me the phraseology should be changed.

Mr. GOODE. I think there can be no objection to authority being given to the committee the sit during the recess.

given to the committee to sit during the recess. We will have but one recess before this Congress expires; that is during the Christmas holidays, and there may be a necessity for having a sitting of the committee during the holidays.

The SPEAKER. The Chair supposes the payment of the clerk is to begin from the time of his selection in the future.

Mr. GOODE. Yes sir.

There being no objection the concurrent resolution was taken from the Speaker's table and agreed to.

ASSISTANT SECRETARY OF WAR.

Mr. WARD, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 6515) to provide for an assistant Secretary of War; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

REPRINT OF JOINT RESOLUTION.

Mr. POUND. The supply of joint resolution H. R. No. 131, proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, has been exhausted. I ask that the usual number be reprinted.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

ARREST OF CHIEF DOUGLASS.

Mr. BELFORD, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved. That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed, if compatible with the public interests, to inform this House under what law or warrant of what authority Douglass, a sub-chief of the Ute tribe of Indians, is confined in the military prison at Fort Leavenworth, and what steps, if any, have been taken by the United States authorities to bring him to trial for alleged complicity in the murder of M. C. Meeker, late Indian agent at the White River agency in the State of Colorado.

SCHOONER-YACHT NETTIE.

Mr. McLane. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table, for consideration at this time, Senate bill No. 1583, to change the name of the pleasure-yacht Nettie to Nokomis.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read.

The bill was read.

Mr. CONGER. Will the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. McLane] state whether that is a pleasure-yacht only, or a passenger vessel?

Mr. McLane. I stated that it was a pleasure-yacht.

Mr. CONGER. I did not hear the gentleman's statement. I heard the bill read, and that styles it a schooner-yacht.

Mr. McLane. It is a pleasure-yacht, now lying in the harbor of Baltimore. It is just such a bill as the House has frequently passed.

Mr. GIBSON. Not used for carrying passengers?

Mr. McLane. Not used for carrying passengers.

There being no objection, the bill was taken from the Speaker's table, read three several times, and passed.

table, read three several times, and passed.

FUNDING BILL.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I ask unanimous consent that an order be made to reprint the bill (H. R. No. 4592) to facilitate the refunding of the national debt, the old print having been exhausted.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

IMPROVEMENT OF THE MISSISSIPPI RIVER.

Mr. GIBSON. I ask unanimous consent that the bill (H. R. No. Mr. GIBSON. I ask unanimous consent that the bill (H. R. No. 6326) for the improvement of the Mississippi River be made a special order for the first Wednesday in January next after the morning hour, to be discussed from day to day until disposed of, not to interfere with appropriation bills or the funding bill.

Mr. REAGAN. I will have to ask the gentleman to also except the interstate-commerce bill, which is a special order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that is a continuing special order, but is not certain. The resolution of the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. GIBSON] will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved. That the bill (H. R. No. 6326) making appropriations for the construction, repair, completion, and preservation of certain works on the Mississippi River be made a special order for the first Wednesday in January next after the morning hour, and from day to day thereafter until disposed of, not to interfere with general appropriation bills or the funding bill.

appropriation bills or the funding bill.

Mr. REAGAN. Or the bill regulating interstate commerce.
Mr. GIBSON. I accept that.
Mr. CONGER. To be discussed from day to day?
The SPEAKER. The words of the resolution, "and from day to day thereafter," would indicate discussion.
Mr. CONGER. I understood the gentleman from Louisiana, [Mr. GIBSON,] in making his request, to state that it was to be discussed from day to day until disposed of.
Mr. GIBSON. To be considered from day to day.
Mr. CONGER. I do not like to consent to a special order which will continue the consideration of any bill from day to day until disposed of. Let the gentleman fix it for a day certain, and I presume there will be no objection to giving him all the time necessary for the due consideration of the bill.
Mr. GIBSON. I think the House should dispose of this bill one way or the other. It has been before the country for four or five way or the other. It has been before the country for four or five years, and is an important bill for the Mississippi Valley.

Mr. CONGER. The gentleman knows that I am in favor of it as far as may be.

Mr. GIBSON. It will not interfere with other important business before the House. It is the first bill we have ever had for the improvement of the Mississippi River, and I hope the gentleman will withdraw his objection.

Mr. CONGER. I do not object. My point was that it gave too long time for the consideration of the bill.

Mr. GIBSON. I understand the gentleman from Michigan makes no objection.

Mr. BAYNE. I will have to object.

Mr. BAYNE. I will have to object.

The SPEAKER. To what portion of the order does the gentleman object? Or does he object to the whole of it?

Mr. BAYNE. I object to fixing a day for the consideration of this bill, because I think there cannot be given during this session adequate time for the discussion of so important a measure. If adequate time could be awarded for the discussion I would not object.

Mr. GIBSON. I will assure the gentleman that I will give him all the time he desires for the discussion of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Under the rules.

The SPEAKER. Under the rules.

Mr. GIBSON. I have no desire to force the measure through without proper discussion.

Mr. HUMPHREY. We can have plenty of time evenings for the discussion of this bill. It is as important as any other that can come

Mr.GIBSON. I hope the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr.Bayne] will withdraw his objection upon the assurance that ample time will will withdraw his objection upon the assurance that ample time will be given for the discussion of the bill.

Mr. BAYNE. There are a great many important provisions in the bill, and one very great objection to it is that it proposes to make a very large appropriation of money. There is a commission now considering the practicability of any scheme for this purpose, and we have no evidence at all that this scheme is practicable. I think the measure had better go over to a more convenient season, when we are have full everything to discuss and understand it.

measure had better go over to a more convenient season, when we can have full opportunity to discuss and understand it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands the gentleman to make an absolute objection.

Mr. BAYNE. Yes sir.

Mr. WEAVER. If this order is to be made, I would like to have withdrawn one statement which has been made by the gentleman from Louisiana—the statement that this business is not to interfere with the funding bill. If the order be made I desire that it shall interfere with the funding bill.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made absolutely; so that the measure does not acquire any right other than what it now possesses. It is now on the Calendar in the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BICKNELL. If this proposition will interfere with the consideration of the Senate resolution as to the counting of the electoral vote, I shall have to object to it.

The SPEAKER. It has already been objected to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HASKELL. I desire to ask the consent of the House to take a Mr. HASKELL. I desire to ask the consent of the House to take a bill from the Private Calendar for present consideration. The beneficiary of the bill is a venerable lady, and if this relief be not granted within six months to come, it will never be of avail to her. The bill is a unanimous report of the Committee on Indian Affairs, and has been passed in a previous Congress.

Mr. ATKINS. I object.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour now begins at twenty minutes before one o'clock. The committees will be called for reports to take their places on the appropriate calendars.

their places on the appropriate calendars.

their places on the appropriate calendars.

Mr. COX. Inasmuch as no committees are ready to report, I move to dispense with the morning hour.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York moves that the morning hour of to-day for the call of committees be dispensed with. Several members objected.

The SPEAKER. The motion is in order, but its adoption will require a two-thirds vote.

The question having been put, The SPEAKER said: The Chair is of opinion that two-thirds have not voted in the affirmative.

Mr. COX. Well, if gentlemen desire to waste time, I withdraw my proposition.

The SPEAKER. The motion has failed.

WILLIAM T. PATE & CO.

Mr. CARLISLE, from the Committee on Ways and Means, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 5417) for the relief of William T. Pate & Co. which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

The call of committees was continued and completed, no further reports being presented.

COUNTING THE ELECTORAL VOTE,

Mr. BICKNELL. I rise to a question of privilege. I claim the right to call up now the Senate resolution in regard to the counting of the electoral vote. I call up that resolution as a question of privi-

Mr. KEIFER. I make the point of order that it is not a question of privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio makes the point of order that this is not a question of privilege. The Chair is willing to hear discussion on that point if any gentleman desires to be heard, or if not, he is ready to decide it.

Mr. CONGER. I make the further point of order that undetermined business before the House at the last session (and this is undetermined business) cannot be taken up at this session, until the termination of the first six days, unless by consent. I refer to Rule

XXVII.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Keifer] makes the point of order that this resolution is not a question of privilege, and that the gentleman from Indiana has not the right to call it up.

Mr. SPRINGER. What is the point of order made by the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. CONGER?]

The SPEAKER. The Chair prefers to entertain one point of order to the control of the contr at a time.

Mr. CONGER. I will withhold my point until the other question is disposed of.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. If the resolution is ruled to be a question of privilege, that disposes of the gentleman's point.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan withholds his point of order, and gives notice that he will make it in due time.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Speaker, I do not desire to enter into any general discussion of the point of order; but I wish to say that while it may be true that under the Constitution of the United States and the statutes the counting of the electoral vote, when the time arrives, may become a question of privilege, I deny that a resolution (such as this at least) undertaking to regulate the manner of the count is a question of privilege. In other words, in my opinion the Constitution of the United States, together with the laws on the statute-book, regulates the whole subject of counting the electoral vote. I deny also that it is a matter of proceeding of the two Houses in joint session to count the electoral vote. The proceedings for the purpose of counting that vote, when the two Houses are assembled, are the proceedings of the President of the Senate in the presence of the Senate and the House of Representatives, and nothing is required to be done by the Senate and the House. I think the rule—if we were permitted to look at that; a rule that is to be established without having the force and effect of law, but a mere rule of the two Houses—cannot confer constitutional power such as is attempted to lee conferred by this and effect of law, but a mere rule of the two Houses--cannot confer constitutional power such as is attempted to be conferred by this resolution on the two branches of Congress.

But I did not rise to elaborately argue this question. I repeat what I said before, that the manner of counting the electoral vote may be a question of privilege whenever it may come up in either branch of Congress; but the matter of a concurrent resolution which undertakes to confer extraordinary power on the Congress, or, as this resolution does, upon one branch of Congress, is not a question of privilege.

Mr. BICKNELL. Mr. Speaker, the twelfth article of the Constitution requires that the two Houses shall ascertain and declare the result of Presidential elections. Whatever relates to that right of the two Houses is a question of privilege, and that has been so decided by the present occupant of the chair.

Mr. CONGER. Will the gentleman refer to the section of the Con-

Mr. BICKNELL. The twelfth article of the Constitution.
Mr. ROBESON. Does the gentleman mean to say that is contained in the twelfth article of the Constitution? I think I can repeat the words. All the certificates shall then be opened in the presence of the two Houses of Congress. The votes shall then be counted, and the person having the majority of the votes shall be the President of the United States.

The SPEAKER. Has not the action of the two Houses in appointing tellers to count the electoral vote employed, as it were, those tellers as its agents in making that count?

Mr. ROBESON. This is a constitutional question, and it cannot be decided by the mere appointment of tellers by any transient House.

Mr. SPRINGER. Will the gentleman from New Jersey let me ask him a question?
Mr. ROBESON.

Mr. ROBESON. Yes, sir. Mr. SPRINGER. He did not quote the Constitution correctly, if he will pardon me.

Mr. ROBESON. I beg his pardon, I quoted it correctly in substance and spirit.

Mr. SPRINGER. I will quote a clause which the gentleman has omitted.

Mr. ROBESON. If you please.
Mr. SPRINGER. "The person having the greatest number of votes for President shall be the President."

Mr. ROBESON. Shall not be declared by the two Houses, but shall be."

"shall be."

Mr. SPRINGER. "Shall be the President if such number be a majority of the whole number of electors appointed; and if no person have such majority, then from the persons having the highest numbers, not exceeding three on the list of those voted for as President, the House of Representatives shall choose immediately, by ballot, the President." Now, who is to determine the fact as to whether any person shall have a majority of all the votes cast? That is a ques tion for the body to determine which is to act after the preceding question has been determined, to wit: the House of Representatives. This body has powers and duties connected with this count of the electoral vote

Mr. ROBESON. The gentleman asks me a question and I will answer him.

Mr. SPRINGER. This House must determine when the contingency arises which is contemplated in the Constitution, when it shall act in the matter and choose a President. Now I will hear the gen-

Mr. ROBESON. Do I understand the gentleman to say the House can make the centingency and declare it has arisen, and then elect the President? If that be so, then the gentleman contends that the President of the United States is to be elected by the House of Representatives practically, and nothing else.

Mr. SPRINGER. He is to be elected by the House of Representatives upon the continuous relief.

ives when this contingency arises.

Mr. ROBESON. The very fact when the contingency arises the House has the right to act, confronted with the fact the Constitution does not give the House the power to elect the President, shows the House of Representatives has not and can not have anything to do

House of Representatives has not and can not have anything to do with the fact of making the contingency.

Mr. SPRINGER. The House of Representatives is the sole judge of the fact as to when that contingency arises. No other body can decide that question of fact. This body must determine under the Constitution when it must choose the President, and when this House does determine that fact, that the contingency has arisen, it will then proceed to elect the President, and the person so elected will be the President of the United States.

President of the United States.

Mr. ROBESON. I admit this House must determine for itself when the time and contingency will arise when it will undertake to choose the President, but it cannot determine for itself whether after the time has really arisen—that is an action which must be determined afterward—whether that is constitutional. That fact depends on other things. I do not mean now to be drawn into an elaborate discussion on this question. We are standing here now on a question of privilege as to whether this is a question of privilege or not. That is all.

Mr. SPRINGER. In reference to the question of privilege let me say that from the foundation of the Government to the present time the question as to the proper time and manner of counting the electoral vote has been held to be a privileged question. In the First Congress it was so treated without objection. Gentlemen may cite the fact that the Vice-President, or the President of the Senate, counted the votes at the first election, yet he counted them in pursuance of a resolution of the two Houses and by virtue of the authority ance of a resolution of the two Houses and by virtue of the authority conferred upon him by the two Houses, and by no other authority.

From that time to this the two Houses of Congress have exercised the jurisdiction over this question which is now denied. The two Houses exercised it during the time the republican party had possession of both branches of Congress. There was no question raised then as to their exercising it. They counted Mr. Lincoln in twice under the operation of a joint rule which had been adopted by both Houses of Congress. They counted General Grant in twice by virtue of the same joint rule, and this rule was in force until the last counting of the presidential vote. At that time a bill was passed by both Houses of Congress which was bottomed upon the idea that the mode of counting the electoral vote was subject to the control of Congress The Constitution, as heretofore construed, requires the count to be made by the Senate and House of Representatives. This makes it a question of the highest privilege, a privilege so high as to override all other questions of privilege.

Mr. LAPHAM. Will the gentleman from Illinois permit me to ask

Mr. SPRINGER. Certainly.
Mr. LAPHAM. I desire to ask the gentleman whether he does not remember that there have been but two instances in the history of remember that there have been but two instances in the history of this country in which there was a failure to choose a President by the people, in each of which cases the House of Representatives, be-fore it acted in the premises, was informed by a message from the Vice-President and President of the Senate of the failure to choose by the people; and if he does not know, also, that it never has undertaken to act except in such a contingency?

Mr. SPRINGER. That action on the part of the Vice-President was not a matter of substance, but a mere formality. The House of Representatives itself must be the judge of the failure to choose.

Mr. LAPHAM. Butitis a matter of substance, and not of mere form, and the House has never assumed to act in such a case, and there is no instance where it has attempted to do so in the whole history of the country, except where the Vice-President has officially an-nounced to the House that there was a failure to choose on the part of the people. Under other circumstances the House could not act

In 1801 and 1825 the precedents are as follows, (I read from pages 30 and 62 of the Counting of the Electoral Votes from 1787 to 1876, compiled by order of the House of Representatives:)

Again, in 1825:

The President of the Senate then rose and declared that no person had received a majority of the votes given for President of the United States; that Andrew Jackson, John Quincy Adams, and William H. Crawford were the three persons who had received the highest number of votes, and that the remaining duties in the choice of President now devolved on the House of Representatives. He further declared that John C. Calhoun, of South Carolina, having received 182 votes was duly elected Vice-President of the United States to serve four years from the 4th of March next.

Mr. SPRINGER. Will the gentleman from New York allow me to ask him whether this body can not determine the question as to ask him whether this body can not determine the question as to whether a contingency has arisen requiring its action in the premises until the fact has been found by, and the information is conveyed to it by, the Vice-President of the Senate?

Mr. LAPHAM. Never.

Mr. SPRINGER. I do not agree with the gentleman on that point.

Mr. LAPHAM. It never has undertaken to do so without this information from the Vice-President.

Mr. SPRINGER. Suppose that the Vice-President should determine that the contingency had not arisen, does the gentleman from New York mean to say that the House would have no authority to act under the Constitution when the fact was patent that there was a failure to choose?

at failure to choose?

Mr. LAPHAM. I do. That is the only way the House can become aware of the fact that it has a right to choose.

Mr. SPRINGER. Does the gentleman mean to say that the Vice-President has the sole power to determine who is elected President?

Mr. LAPHAM. If the Vice-President, in pursuance of his functions under the Constitution, declares the President is elected by the people, then by the Constitution he is the President, and no power on earth can take his office away from him.

Mr. SPRINGER. Suppose the Vice-President does not declare that any one is elected President?

Mr. LAPHAM. It is impossible that a contingency like that could

Mr. SPRINGER. Suppose the Vice-President declares contrary to the facts of the case, as it was assumed would be done during the last count of the electoral vote?

Mr. LAPHAM. That I hold to be an impossible contingency.

Mr. LAPHAM. That I hold to be an impossible contingency.

Mr. SPRINGER. But it was supposed that such an event would take place at the last presidential election, and the electoral commission bill was passed upon the assumption that a danger of that kind was imminent. That bill was passed by the two Houses of Congress in order to avoid the very danger to which I have alluded.

Mr. LAPHAM. That commission did not contemplate such a continuous

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. Speaker, the twelfth article of the Constitution rescribes the manner of casting the vote for President and Viceprescribes the manner of casting the vote for President and Vice-President by the electors. It prescribes how they shall be returned, that is, to the Vice-President. It makes him the means by which the transmission of that vote and its opening before the two Houses is to be accomplished. When that is done I think the precedents in Presidential elections in past years is the best interpretation of the true meaning of the Constitution. When the Vice-President has performed those functions of the opening the returns, as the medium between the electors and the Congress, when he has opened the returns, they are to be counted; but it could never have been contemplated that he should also have the power to count the presidential vote without the consent, approbation, or assistance of the two Houses of Congress. the consent, approbation, or assistance of the two Houses of Congress.

Else how could we, when questions arise as to the legality or admissibility of votes, ever settle them? They would have to be settled on bility of votes, ever settle them? They would have to be settled on the theory presented here, and be determined by the President of the Senate. But the precedents of past years in the counting of the electroral vote recognizes the President of the Senate simply as the vehicle for the transmission of the votes for President and Vice-President to the two Houses of Congress, and delegates to him no other authority or power whatever. When he has performed that function the votes are to be counted under the supervision of the two Houses of Congress and his power in the promises terminates.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to state—
Mr. CONGER. Before the Chair gives his decision, I desire to make remark on this question.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will listen to the gentleman from Mich-

Mr. CONGER. Very lately the House of Representatives has de-termined in a very formal and careful manner its rules. After careful action of a committee and long consideration in the House, this House determined what its rules should be, and gave definitions to the rules, their objects, and results. Among other things, the question was determined as to what matters were privileged matters. The House expressed its opinion upon that question and embodied it in a rule for the government of the Chair and of the House. I desire to read the conclusion to which the House of Representatives came as its last formal, definite, undisputed action as to what were and should be questions of privilege in this House; and I think if there had been any disposition to enlarge the rule to embrace other matters as mat-ters of privilege they would have been omitted in the careful revision

Questions of privilege shall be, first, those affecting the rights of the House collectively, its safety, dignity, and the integrity of its proceedings; second, the rights, reputation, and conduct of members individually in their representative capacity only; and shall have precedence of all other questions, except motions to fix the day to which the House shall adjourn, to adjourn, and for a recess.

I submit Mr. Speaker, that in the very careful revision of our rules, in view of the multitudinous questions of privilege which have arisen and been decided in this House, even during the term of the present Speaker's occupancy of the chair, the Committee on Rules would have settled any doubtful question, the House would have settled any doubtful question and would have determined what were questions of privilege more fully than appears in this rule if the House had desired to include other questions than those which appear here. I submit, sir, that in Rule IX there is not by the most far-fetched construction possible anything to indicate that the resolution called up by the gentleman from Indiana, or its subject-matter, is included in Rule IX. The rule states that questions of privilege shall be, first—

Those affecting the rights of the House collectively, its safety, dignity, and the integrity of its proceedings.

It relates entirely and solely to the peculiar conditions and rela-It relates entirely and solely to the peculiar conditions and relations of the two Houses, not in their respective capacities as separate branches of the Legislature, but in their collective capacity as a convention of the two Houses, assembled as witnesses permitted by the Constitution if they desire to be present during the interesting ceremony in connection with the declaration of the election of the President of the United States.

If my point be well taken we have no rule of privilege that can possibly apply to this case. There is not in the joint rules anything which would make this a question of privilege, either in the Senate or in the House, or both. If the demand be sustained that this shall be treated as a question of privilege, it stands here unparalleled and treated as a question of privilege, it stands here unparalleled and without an example in the history of this House, that the Speaker may make questions of privilege which the rules do not make; that the power of the Speaker on that point transcends all the authority which the House has conferred upon him by its rules. In other words, it permits that most dangerous and that most revolutionary thing to occur in this House, that after the House of Representatives has solemnly and after careful consideration and after the lapse of years and the practice of the House for years, and after a careful revision of all the powers which they desire to place in the hands of their Speaker, there is still left an opportunity for him to go beyond all rules, to transcend all the permission which the House has given to him, and to set aside what the House has demanded at his own option, at his own suggestion, and by his own mere will, exercising a power which the rules have withheld from him.

If the question embodied in this resolution can be declared by the Speaker a question of privilege-and I say what I have to say now to illustrate the absurdity of that proposition—there is no man on this floor but may once, twice, a thousand times, during this short session, introduce some bill or some resolution, or make some motion session, introduce some bill or some resolution, or make some motion which shall have some reference to the counting of the electoral vote or the mode of declaring it, and demand from the precedent established, if the claim of the gentleman from Indiana be sustained, that as a question of privilege his bill, resolution, or motion shall take precedence of all other business before this House, that it shall shove aside every other proposition except a motion to adjourn, a motion to fix the day to which this House shall adjourn, or a motion for a recess. I call the attention of the Speaker to this simple proposition to show the absurdity of the claim that any proposition emanating from the other House or originating in this which may embody in it any control of the count of the electoral vote, the mode of proceeding in the convention of the two Houses, or the declaration in the ing in the convention of the two Houses, or the declaration in the convention of the two Houses of the declaration in the convention of the two Houses of the persons elected President and Vice-President, may be made here successively, and successfully, too, by each and all of the members of this House, and may occupy the time under that right of privilege from now until the 4th of March, to the exclusion of all other possible business except questions of adjournment.

Why, sir, there is no man on this floor but under such a ruling of the Chair, under such a construction of this right of privilege, may call up daily and hourly resolutions and bills and demand the attention of the House and invoke the ruling of the Speaker that they are questions of privilege, and as such shall be considered and disposed of. Can there be any doubt of that proposition? When this resolution is disposed of, or even when it is laid over, another proposition varying a little from this, but embodying enough to make it a privileged resolution, if this is such a resolution, may be introduced by any gentleman, and may take the place of all other business. That is a proposition which I think the Speaker is bound to look at with some degree of attention. No ruling of the Chair can be properly made, or ought to be made in any event, which, if persisted in and enforced, would lead to the occupying the time of this House continuously on successive propositions of that kind. Under the rule this is not a privileged question by any possible construction whatever. It does not come within any of the propositions of Rule IX. I have suggested to the Chair the importance of such a decision, for under it every member might follow this up with a similar proposition, and occupy with it the time of the House in spite of the Chair, unless he reverses his decision, and in spite of the House, unless they raise the question of consideration; and that question being raised and the matter set aside, it only opens the way for another proposition to occupy time until the House should vote on the question of consid-

I submit to the Chair that a ruling by him that this is a question of privilege, going outside of the rights, the dignity, the safety of this House, will open the way necessarily for that opportunity which our rules were intended to prevent, for that opportunity which the Speaker should never give to individual members to obstruct the progress of legislation for such a ruling would give and should never give to individual members to obstruct the progress of legislation, for such a ruling would give such an opportunity, and would virtually destroy the efficiency, the activity, and the capacity of this House for proper legislation. The principle involved is a very serious one, a very important one. I do not refer to the result of the action of the House at all; that is a matter to be determined hereafter. But I do refer to it for the purpose of impressing upon the Chair my conviction of this proposition; that if this and kindred propositions, however important, however desirable to be settled, however much the attention of the Senate and of the House and of the country has been, is, or may be called to them; whatever dangers we have escaped; whatever dangers threaten, this House must preserve its integrity, this House must preserve its power to transact business. No ruling must be given by the Speaker, no rule must be sanctioned by the House that will prevent its being ready and capable at all times to properly perform its legislative business. These are the points to which I desire to ask the attention of the Chair.

Yesterday the Chair very properly remarked that this subject was of such importance that it was desirable he should have an opportunity to examine it. It is sprung again this morning without time for nity to examine it. It is sprung again this morning without time for reflection, without time for the arrangement of thought, suddenly, as if it was a measure so important from some cause that it must be as it it was a measure so important from some cause that it must be thrust upon this House at once, and perhaps through the rulings of the Speaker, without sufficient time for reflection, without sufficent time for thought, and perhaps by the action of the members of the House a rule may be adopted here by a passing vote of the House which shall overturn all its other rules and give precedence to outside subjects which this House by its rules has determined shall not come in as privileged questions.

I therefore, from the little time and thought I have been able to give this subject since the question was sprung yesterday, have come to consider the decision of this proposition merely in its effect upon the rights of this House and of its members and upon its power to legislate properly for the country, as one which should not be hastily given. I ask the careful consideration of the Chair to the propositions I have submitted, and to the reasons which I have had time merely to suggest without further illustration.

In my judgment, to sustain the proposition which is asked for here will revolutionize this House. It is not simply a question of what shall be done with this or that single proposition. There are a thousand kindred subjects of vital importance to the nation-that is, they embrace propositions that are vital, although this particular thing may not be essential to the dignity or safety or rights of this House—there are a thousand kindred subjects that may be introduced here under the guise of questions of privilege. And I submit that the mind of the Speaker from this time until the end of the session—if this proposition be admitted to be a correct one, and the Speaker rules that it is a question of privilege—the Speaker's mind from this time until the end of the session must be occupied, if the occasion arises, continually and almost exclusively with determining what kindred and cognate questions introduced here are questions of privilege. This is but one of hundreds that might be introduced under the same claim and with the same right to the ruling of the Chair in

In my judgment the House, in the adoption of its rules, has spoken upon this subject calmly, considerately, and dispassionately. The Speaker of the House was a member of the committee which reported speaker of the House was a hemoer of the committee which reported those rules. There was required long thought and long study to place in our rules those provisions which should govern us in our action. This House, after long consultation and deliberation, adopted as a finality a provision determining what shall be questions of privilege, and within those rules so adopted by the House there is no possibility now, shall the Speaker go beyond the rules? Shall be on some wild theory—because our Government is a republican government, because great interests are at stake, because the election of President because great interests are at state, because the election of resident is an important matter, because we have walked along the very verge of inevitable danger, if not of ruin, and barely escaped; because that danger threatens us again and again—shall the Speaker, by a ruling above and beyond the rules which this House has adopted, determine above and beyond the rules which this House has adopted, determine that the occasion has come when he may be revolutionary, when he may go beyond rules and beyond the Constitution under the pretense of avoiding danger to the nation, under the pretense of saving the country? For that is all the argument in this proposition.

There is a way to reach this subject by legislation, by law under the Constitution and within the Constitution, with the approval of the Executive, and not by putting in our little code of by-laws, a by-law of one House, a by-law of this branch of the Legislative Department, by our action and by the independent action of the other branch of the Legislature; a rule, a mere mode of doing business which may override the Constitution, override the law, and introduce into our Government revolutionary elements not dreamed of by duce into our Government revolutionary elements not dreamed of by its founders, and I trust not to be submitted to by their successors.

Mr. HOOKER. I desire to say a word or two in answer to what has fallen from the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Conger] and the gentleman from New Jersey, [Mr. Robeson.] The argument of the gentleman from Michigan is that this is not a question of privilege, because of the inconvenience which must necessarily arise under a ruling making it a question of privilege, and that any member under such a ruling might occupy the attention of the Speaker and the attention of the House to the exclusion of all other business.

attention of the House to the exclusion of all other business.

In answer to that, I have only to suggest to the Speaker's mind, as bearing upon the determination of this question, that if this be intrinsically from its nature a question of privilege, then the argument arising from inconvenience cannot prevail against it. I submit that the rules which have been adopted upon this subject will have to be observed by the Speaker and by the House in making a decision, whenever a question rises on the state of the subject will be a subject with the subject will be a subject with the subject will be subject with the subject will be a subject with the subject will be a subject with the subject will be a subject with the subject will be subject with the sub observed by the Speaker and by the House in making a decision, whenever a question arises as to what is a question of privilege. Rule IX of the House declares what constitutes a question of privilege, and provides that such questions shall have precedence of all other questions. When you look, Mr. Speaker, to the Journal to see what have been the precedents upon this question and what subjects have from their nature been regarded as questions of privilege, you will find on page 331 of the Digest, under the heading "Questions of Privilege," this provision:

Whenever the Speaker is of the opinion that a question of privilege is involved in a proposition, he must entertain it in preference to any other business. [Such opinion of course being subject to an appeal.] And when a proposition is submitted which relates to the privileges of the House—

And could there be, Mr. Speaker, any proposition more pre-eminently referring to the privileges of the House than the one embraced in the proposition presented by the gentleman from Indiana? I cannot conceive of a question which ought to be regarded as a question of privilege if this is not such.

And when a proposition is submitted which relates to the privileges of the House it is his duty to entertain it, at least to the extent of submitting the question to the House as to whether or not it presents a question of privilege.

Now, in answer to what fell from my friend from New Jersey, [Mr. Robeson,] who quoted upon this subject from the Constitution, to which, of course, all laws must conform, I will say that, if I heard the gentleman correctly, he omitted, in quoting from the Constitution, one expression which, in my judgment, is important to its honest and fair construction. I know that the omission was unintentional, for I believe the gentleman quoted simply from memory. But the Constitution provides that—

The President of the Senate shell—

The President of the Senate shall-

Using similar imperative language to that which the Digest uses with regard to the House or the Speaker:

We are all aware of the difficulties which arose in regard to the construction of the Constitution upon this question some years ago; and the proposition which the gentleman from Indiana now seeks to bring up, which has received the consideration of his committee, is intended simply to make clear the power and duty of the two Houses when they shall assemble to perform the most important function that they are ever called upon to perform, whether in their legisla-that they are ever called upon to perform, whether in their legislative capacity as joint bodies or as separate ones.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF, of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I have listened in vain for some reason upon which the claim that this is a question of privilege can be based. It certainly is not made a question of privilege by any rule of this House. Rule IX defines what are questions of privilege, and this is not among them. No man here claims that this proposition is among those questions which are defined as questions of privilege by the rules.

Mr. HOOKER. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him a single moment?

Mr. HOOKER. Will the gentleman ask the gentleman this question: How is this made a question of privilege?

Mr. HOOKER. Will the gentleman allow me to answer? If he will look at page 331 of the Manual, he will find that in declaring what constitutes a question of privilege it is said that—

An enumeration of the various questions of privilege that may arise cannot, of course, be given, but the following list embraces nearly all that have arisen, viz: Election of a Speaker.

Right of a member to be seated.

Election of President.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF, of Iowa. The book from which the gentleman reads is simply a digest of former practices, under former codes of Mr. HOOKER. And decisions made by the Chair and the House.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF, of Iowa. I have asked the gentleman upon what ground this is claimed to be a question of privilege, and he fails to answer. It is not made a question of privilege by our present code of rules. Then what makes it a question of privilege?

I agree that if the Constitution commanded a thing to be done with

I agree that if the Constitution commanded a thing to be done with reference to the electoral count on a particular day or at a particular time, that might make it a question of privilege. But this proposition has no special reference to any particular count, to any particular election. It is a general resolution applicable to all elections; and if this is held to be a question of privilege because it has reference to the election of President, then any law which has any reference whatever to the election of a President, on any occasion or at any time, becomes a question of privilege. It is true that among questions held to be questions of privilege are those relating to the elections of members; that is, questions relating to the election of particular members. But a law regulating the election of members generally can never be held to be a question of privilege. The question of privilege covers simply some action which the House may be required to take with reference to a particular election. If the Constitution imposed upon this House some duty to be performed at this time with reference to the next election, there might be some ground to claim that this is a question of privilege, and that position might be based upon the Constitution. But this resolution is proposed as a general rule applicable to all elections, and therefore it cannot be a question of privilege.

I ask the particular attention of the Chair to this consideration: that this is a proposed general rule applicable to all elections and therefore all the applicable to all elections; that it does not refer to the next election any more than it refers to every that this is a proposed general rule applicable to all elections; that it does not refer to the next election any more than it refers to every other election that is to occur hereafter; and that this House to-day has no constitutional duty to perform with reference to the next presidential election, or with reference to the counting of that elect-

One word more. A question relating to the rights, or reputation, or the conduct of members is defined to be privileged under our present code of rules. That must always be applied to particular cases, to individual cases. If a bill were proposed here to-day to regulate generally the rights and duties of members of this House it could not be claimed to be a privileged question, because it would be a general law applicable to all cases. In my mind, that is the distinction which we must draw; and there can be no doubt that this is in no sense a privileged question, and cannot be made a privileged question except in obedience to the rules as they now exist, or to some command of the Constitution or statutes requiring this duty to be performed at this particular time.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. A word, Mr. Speaker, as to the proposition whether this is a question of privilege or not. The attitude of the gentlemen on the floor informs the Speaker as well as the country there is a claim under the Constitution that the Vice-President of the United States alone has the right or authority to count the electoral vote. The Speaker and the country are informed by past legislation and practices and customs heretofore prevailing that the House of Representatives and the Senate have asserted their right to do this thing. Now, in this proposition submitted by the resolution of the Senate is a question directly going to the merits of this dispute and in which are involved the highest privileges of this House. The attitude of gentlemen on the other side is a denial of this privilege of the

Again, the Speaker is aware under the law and the Constitution this House at this session must decide that question. It is therefore rightly before you, and must be met by the House as one directly affecting their authority and power in the performance of one of its highest and gravest duties, and I submit that the mere statement of the proposition shows that it involves a question of privilege.

But, Mr. Speaker, I did not rise for the purpose of even stating that proposition. I rose merely for the purpose of saying to the Speaker and to the gentlemen on the opposite side of the House the question involved has no reference to the present presidential election. I for one shall vote to sustain the motion made by my friend from Indiana; and I declare, sir, to you and to the country, and I speak for the peoone shall vote to sustain the motion made by my friend from Indiana; and I declare, sir, to you and to the country, and I speak for the people I represent, I speak for my State, and I believe I speak for the democratic party of the country, that it has nothing to do with the election of General Garfield. He has been elected by the people of the United States, and I for one, representing that people and that section, shall see that he is inaugurated, having been elected by the people. [Sensation.] No technical objection or mere formality should ever thwart the will of the people expressed under the law and the Constitution. Constitution.

That is not involved in this question; it is not that at all. That out of the way, we come back to the simple question, What is the privilege, what is the authority of this House? These we are charged by our solemn obligations to preserve and maintain; and taking that view, independent of present or party considerations, I submit to the House it is a question of privilege which the Speaker must

Mr. SPRINGER. In answer to the arguments of the gentleman from Michigan and the gentleman from Ohio, as to whether this is a question of privilege, I desire to call attention to the proceedings of this House at former counts of the electoral vote. At the first election for President of the United States there was no objection made tion for President of the United States there was no objection made to the question being put in reference to the proceedings in the count of the votes. At the second election for President of the United States a motion was made, without objection, that a committee be appointed to join such committee as may be appointed by the Senate to ascertain and report the mode of examining the votes for President and Vice-President, and of notifying the persons who shall be elected of their election, and to regulate the time, place, and manner of administering the oath of office to the President. If gentlemen will examine the proceedings of the several counts as they occurred will examine the proceedings of the several counts as they occurred from time to time thereafter, they will find a similar resolution was entertained without objection at every election of President down to the present time, or to the last count—

Mr. KEIFER. Let me ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. SPRINGER. With one exception, to which I will now call the

Mr. KEIFER. Was not that when the time had arrived for counting the vote, immediately preceding the time for counting the vote, when those resolutions were introduced, when the two Houses were to on into joint convention?

Mr. SPRINGER. I will state, on the contrary, that I find at the third election the usual resolution was moved on the 31st of January, 1797. I find on the 23d of January, 1800, Mr. Ross, a Senator from Pennsylvania, offered a resolution in the Senate on this subject without objection as a question of ordinary business. I find several bills and joint resolutions to regulate this matter permanently were offered without objection from time to time, coming on down through the several counts to 1861, when the first republican President of the United States was counted in by the two Houses.

Mr. ROBESON. Not by the two Houses, but by John C. Breckinsides.

Mr. SPRINGER. I will cite you the rule by which it was done.
Mr. SPRINGER. I will cite you the rule by which it was done.
Representatives, February 2, Mr. Washburne, in the House of Representatives, February 2,

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. Did not John C. Breckinridge, as Vice-President of the United States, certify that he had counted the vote and that Abraham Lincoln was declared by him elected President?

Mr. SPRINGER. I will state the fact. In the House of Representatives, February 2, 1861, the following proceedings were had, as will appear :

Mr. Washburne, of Illinois, rose to a privileged question and moved to take up the resolution of the Senate in relation to the mode of counting the vote for President and Vice-President.

This is Mr. E. B. Washburne, of Illinois.

Mr. Garnett said, I object to taking up that resolution now.
Mr. Washburne, of Illinois. I think it is a privileged question. It is in reference to carrying out a constitutional provision, and I shall press the resolution on the part of the House, following the precedents of forty years, without variation.

Mr. Washburne confirms what I have just stated, that the precedents for forty years, without variation, had been in accordance with that practice. I read further from the Globe:

Mr. GARNETT. I submit that it is not in order to submit that motion except by unanimous consent. It is perfectly competent for the gentleman, following the rules of the House, on Monday to move to suspend the rules, or else to proceed to the business upon the Speaker's table, thereby reaching that resolution in the regular way.

Let it be observed that this was a resolution from the Senatelying upon the Speaker's table and never had been considered by the House. Mr. Garnett continues:

A question of privilege is a question touching the rights of some member of this House, or touching the privileges of this House. This, like many other duties imposed upon us by the Constitution, is to be exercised in the regular way.

in conformity to the rules of the House. It does not touch the privileges of the House or any of its members.

The Speaker. The Chair supposes that it is a constitutional requirement that the votes shall be counted on a certain day; and in that aspect of the case it seems necessary that arrangements should be made for that purpose. The Chair is therefore of the opinion that this is a privileged question.

Mr. Garnett. I doubt not that the decision of the Chair will be affirmed by the House; but I feel so confident that it is wrong—I say it with great deference to the Speaker—that I respectfully take an appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. Washburne, of Illinois. I move to lay the appeal on the table.

A MEMBER. Who was Speaker at that time?

Mr. SPRINGER. The Speaker at that time, I am informed by a member who sits near me, was Mr. Orr, of South Carolina. This was a question raised by the House at that time and decided in the interest of the counting in of the first republican President.

Mr. ROBINSON. I would like to ask the gentleman a question in this connection.

Mr. SPRINGER. After I have concluded the reading of this extract I will be glad to answer the gentleman. I continue to read from the Globe

Mr. McClennand. I wish simply to say that, while I have no objection to the passage of the resolution, I think the point of order is well taken.

Mr. Garnett. That is precisely my own position. I have no objection to the resolution, or to the counting of the votes in a perfectly regular way; but I am unwilling to afford any facilities against the rules of the House for that purpose. I demand the yeas and nays on the motion to lay the appeal on the table; and I call for tellers on the yeas and nays.

Tellers were not ordered.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. Garnett called for tellers on the motion.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. Garnett, and Washburne of Illinois, were appointed.

Tellers were ordered; and the tellers reported—ayes 106, noes 19.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 106, noes 19.

So the appeal from the decision of the Chair was laid upon the table.

The resolution of the Senate was read.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the House agree to the appointment of a committee, to consist of five members, to join said committee on the part of the Senate.

Here, Mr. Speaker, is an adjudication by the House of Representa-Here, Mr. Speaker, is an adjudication by the House of Representatives upon the very question raised by the point of order submitted by the gentleman from Ohio, as to whether a resolution providing for the manner of counting the electoral vote is a question of privilege. That, as I have shown, has already been decided by the House, and an appeal taken from the decision of the Chair was laid upon the table. I desire to call the attention of gentlemen to the remarkable unanimity with which the House laid that appeal upon the table, the vote being 106 ayes to 19 noes.

Mr. CONGER. Considerably less than half of the House voted upon it.

Mr. SPRINGER. I wish to make a correction. I find I was mis-informed as to the name of the Speaker at that time. Mr. Penning-ton was the Speaker instead of Mr. Orr, and the House was controlled by a republican majority at that time.

That House was proceeding to adopt a joint rule for the counting of the votes for President and Vice-President, and the rule which was then adopted remained in force and was substantially the rule by then adopted remained in force and was substantially the rule by which Mr. Lincoln was twice and Mr. Grant was also twice counted in as President of the United States. This was considered in the House as a question of privilege, as I have shown.

Mr. KEIFER. The gentleman from Illinois is mistaken. The twenty-second joint rule was adopted in February, 1865.

Mr. SPRINGER. The twenty-second joint rule was adopted, as the gentleman from Ohio says, but a rule to enable the electoral votes to be counted was adopted, as I have shown, by the House where a republican President was to be counted in; and, as I have already said, I desire again to call the attention of the House to the large majority by which the question of privilege was sustained.

I will also read the action of the joint committee in reference to the same question. I read from the Globe:

In Senate, February 5, 1861.

Mr. Trumbull, from the joint committee, reported in part the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the two Houses will assemble in the Chamber of the House of Representatives on Wednesday, the 13th day of February, 1861, at twelve o'clock, and the President of the Senate shall be the presiding officer; that one person be appointed a teller on the part of the Senate and two on the part of the House of Representatives to make a list of votes as they shall be declared; that the result shall be delivered to the President of the Senate, who shall announce the state of the vote and the persons elected to the two Houses, assembled as aforesaid, which shall be deemed a declaration of the persons elected President and Vice-President of the United States, and, together with a list of the votes, be entered on the Journals of the two Houses.

This was than a senate the senate of the two Houses.

This was then agreed to, and Mr. Trumbull was appointed a teller on the part of the Senate.

Mr. ROBESON. I wish to ask the gentleman from Illinois a question, whether there is anything which authorizes either House to nullify the vote of a State?

Mr. SPRINGER. I have read the resolution and the proceedings of the House, and the gentleman can determine that for himself.

Mr. ROBESON. I understand the resolution. That governs simply the procedure, but gives or assumes no power on the part of either House over the vote as it comes in on the electoral certificate.

Mr. SPRINGER. I will state to the gentleman from New Jersey the twenty-second joint rule—

Mr. ROBESON. I am not speaking of the twenty-second joint rule. I admit that under the pressure of the war and the reconstruction which followed it the republican party made a great deal of false legislation. I admit that they were weak and precipitate in much of the action that they took; and I admit that they are suffering from that to-day. But the fact that they do suffer from it should encouragement to those to whom they generously gave those advantages to turn and use them in attacking the Government under which they were too hastily admitted.

The SPEAKER. The twelfth article of the Constitution provides for the counting of the electoral vote. The Clerk will read the one hundred and forty-second section of the Revised Statutes.

The Clerk read as follows:

Congress shall be in session on the second Wednesday in February succeeding every meeting of the electors, and the certificates, or so many of them as have been received, shall then be opened, the votes counted, and the persons to fill the offices of President and Vice-President ascertained and declared agreeable to the Constitution.

It will be observed that this law fixes the time The SPEAKER. The SPEARER. It will be observed that this law ixes the time for the counting of the vote and fixes this session as the one at which the count shall be made of the last presidential election. And the Chair may be permitted to say that the practice, almost without variation—certainly the recent practice—goes to the extent of showing that the two Houses have heretofore counted the electoral vote. In this connection the Chair will cause to be read an historic message from one of the Presidents of the United States.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives:

The joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution declaring certain States not entitled to representation in the electoral college" has been signed by the Executive in deference to the view of Congress implied in its passage and presentation to him. In his own view, however, the two Houses of Congress convened under the twelfth article of the Constitution have complete power to exclude from counting all electoral votes deemed by them to be illegal; and it is not competent for the Executive to defeat or obstruct that power by a veto, as would be the case if his action were at all essential in the matter. He disclaims all right of the Executive to interfere in any way in the matter of canvassing or counting electoral votes; and he also disclaims that by signing said resolution he has expressed any opinion on the recitals of the preamble or any judgment of his own upon the subject of the resolution.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, February 8, 1865.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, February 8, 1865.

The SPEAKER. The two Houses of Congress in the first session of the Thirty-eighth Congress agreed upon the twenty-second joint rule for counting the electoral vote. The Senate in the first session of the Forty-fourth Congress re-enacted all the joint rules of the Forty-third Congress except the twenty-second; the House taking no action thereon, the Senate then declared there were no joint rules in force. Now the situation is this: The House seems to have adhered to the twenty-second joint rule, while the Senate has declared it vacant. The Senate now sends a joint rule to supply the place of the twenty-second joint rule; and in view of the argument which has been had, the Chair will say in this connection the Senate decided in the Forty-fourth Congress, by a vote of 38 to 7, that the President of the Senate had no power to count the vote. The Chair will cause to be read from the Journal of the Senate of the first session of the Forty-fourth Congress the action taken by that body. Forty-fourth Congress the action taken by that body. The Clerk read as follows:

On motion by Mr. Maxey, to amend the bill by inserting at the end of section 2 the following:

"But if the two Houses fail to agree as to which of the returns shall be counted, then the President of the Senate shall decide which is the true and valid return, and the same shall then be counted,"

After debate, it was determined in the negative—yeas 7, nays 38.

Mr. SPRINGER. Let the yeas and nays be read. The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

The yeas and nays being desired by one-fifth of the Senators present, those who voted in the affirmative are—

Messrs. Bogy, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Hamlin, Maxey, Robertson, Sargent, and Withers.

Those who voted in the negative are—

The SPEAKER. The Chair will repeat here a decision which was read yesterday, made by the present occupant of the chair. It is as

Tuesday, February 27, 1877.

Mr. Field, from the Select Committee on the Privileges, Powers, and Daties of the House of Representatives in Counting the Vote for President and Vice-President of the United States, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4693) to amend the Revised Statutes of the United States in respect to vacancies in the office of President and Vice-President, and demanded the previous question thereon.

Mr. Horatio C. Burchard made the point of order that the committee had no authority to report the said bill.

The Speaker overruled the point of order, on the ground that the resolution creating the said committee authorized it "to ascertain and report what are the privileges, powers, and duties of the House of Representatives in counting the votes for President and Vice-President of the United States," and also gave the committee the right to report at any time. The Speaker further stated that he could not conceive of a question of higher constitutional and parliamentary privilege than was involved in the bill under consideration, and he therefore held the bill to be in order at this time. order at this time.

The Chair also directs attention to the following decision a few days later:

FRIDAY, March 2, 1877. Mr. Field, from the Select Committee on the Privileges, Powers, and Duties of the House of Representatives in Counting the Vote for President and Vice-President of the United States, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4698) to provide an effectual remedy for a wrongfulintrusion into the office of President and Vice-President of the United States; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. Conger made the point of order that the said bill could not be reported or considered pending a motion to suspend the rules, which motion he claimed to have made before the said bill was read.

The Speaker held the report made by Mr. Field from the said committee to be first in order, a question of high constitutional privilege being involved.—Journal of the House of Representatives, second session, Forty-fourth Congress, page 628.

The Chair also refers to the decision of February 2, 1861, quoted by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. Springer.] It is as follows:

The Chair also refers to the decision of February 2, 1861, quoted by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. Springer.] It is as follows:

Mr. Washburne, of Illinois, rose to a privileged question and moved to take up the resolution of the Senate in relation to the mode of counting the vote for President.

Mr. Garnett said, I object to taking up that resolution now.

Mr. Washburne, of Illinois. I think it is a privileged question. It is in reference to carrying out a constitutional provision, and I shall press the resolution on the part of the House, following the precedents of forty years, without variation.

Mr. Garnett. I submit that it is not in order to submit that motion except by unanimous consent. It is perfectly competent for the gentleman, following the rales of the House, on Monday to move to suspend the rules, or else to proceed to the business upon the Speaker's table, thereby reaching that resolution in the regular way.

A question of privilege is a question touching the rights of some member of this House, or touching the privileges of this House. This, like many other duties imposed upon us by the Constitution, is to be exercised in the regular way, in conformity to the rules of the House. It does not touch the privileges of the House or any of its members.

The Speaker. The Chair supposes that it is a constitutional requirement that the votes shall be counted on a certain day; and in that aspect of the caseit seems necessary that arrangements should be made for that purpose. The Chair is therefore of the opinion that this is a privileged question.

Mr. Garnett. I doubt not that the decision of the Chair will be affirmed by the House; but I feel so consident that it is wrong—I say it with great deference to the Speaker—that I respectfully take an appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. Washburne, of Illinois. I move to lay the appeal on the table.

Mr. Garnett. That is precisely my own position. I have no objection to the passage of the resolution, I think the point of order is well taken.

Mr. Ga

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 106, noes 19.

So the appeal from the decision of the Chair was laid upon the table.

The resolution of the Senate was read.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the House agree to the appointment of a committee, to consist of five members, to join said committee on the part of the Senate.

The House will observe that if the Chair were to refuse upon technicalities to allow an adjustment between the two Houses as to the government of the two Houses when in joint session to count the government of the two Houses when in joint session to count the electoral vote such a proceeding on his part might lead to chaos, confusion, perhaps commotion. But the Chair, on the question strictly of privilege, is of opinion that it makes no difference by whom the counting shall be done, so far as the question of privilege is concerned. If it is done by the two Houses, it is the highest duty they have to perform, one imposed directly by the Constitution, as the Chair thinks, relating to the election of a President and Vice-President, and the very existence of our form of government might depend thereon. If done by any other authority, it must be done in the presence of the two Houses, and without their presence it cannot be done at all; so that all laws and all rules relating to the joint meeting which in any event is indispensable to a count must be of the highest privilege, affecting as they do the exercise of a most important function of the two Houses, the ascertainment of the choice of electors for President and Houses, the ascertainment of the choice of electors for President and Vice-President.

In answer to the point made by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. UPDEGRAFF] as to the rules of this House, the Chair desires to say that it is not competent for the House to make any rule which impairs in any degree the execution of the terms of the Constitution of the United States. Chair therefore considers, for the reasons given and in view of past practice, that this is a question of privilege; and he accordingly en-tertains the proposition of the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. Bick-

NELL.]
Mr. VAN VOORHIS. Will the Chair allow me to ask him a ques-

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. In rendering this decision does the Chair

The SPEAKER. The Chair will say to the gentleman as he said more fully in reply to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Conger] and the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. UPDEGRAFF,] that it is not competent for this House to adopt any rule which if carried out would impair the due execution of the Constitution or take from or add to that instrument in any respect whatever.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. My question is whether in the judgment of the Speaker this Rule IX does that?

The SPEAKER. The Constitution and the law overrides all rules.

The Chair has over and over again so decided, and conspicuously so decided at the time of the report of the electoral commission.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. The Chair does not seem to understand my question. Conceding what the Speaker says, my question is whether in reaching the conclusion which he has reached he feels obliged to override the language of Rule IX?

The SPEAKER. The Chair takes no cognizance of any rule when the Constitution of the United States and the laws of the land come in conflict with it.

Mr. SPRINGER. Is there any desire for an appeal from the decision of the Chair?

Mr. ROBINSON. Now do not provoke anybody unnecessarily. [Laughter.]

Mr. BICKNELL. I now renew the demand for the previous ques-

Mr. KEIFER. I understood that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Bicknell] desired to call up this concurrent resolution for debate.

Mr. BICKNELL. There was a great deal of discussion upon this subject during the last session.

Mr. KEIFER. There would have been more if we had been permitted to have it.

Mr. BICKNELL. The questions involved in it have been completely worn out by discussion. I suppose that every member of the House has made up his mind upon it, and it would be a waste of time to debate it further.

Mr. KEIFER. If the gentleman will permit me I will say that it is possible that gentlemen older than myself might be improved by a little debate. We have had a long recess since the last discussion of this subject, and during the past summer other subjects have been under discussion. It might be well to freshen up on some things.

I warn the gentleman now that he will reach the end much sooner, if at all, by debate than by any other road he may choose to take.

Mr. BICKNELL. I do not think—

Mr. WHITE. I offer the resolution which I send to the Clerk's

Mr. BICKNELL. I have the floor, and that resolution cannot be in order. I renew the demand for the previous question.

Mr. ROBESON. Will my friend permit me a few moments?

Mr. BICKNELL. I believe we have had all necessary debate on this question.

Mr. KEIFER. I have never said a word upon it except inci-Mr. WHITE. My resolution is to commit this proposition.
The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize that motion.
Mr. BICKNELL. I insist upon my demand for the previous ques-

Mr. STEVENSON. I suggest to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BICKNELL] to agree that the two sides of this House shall have a reasonable time for discussion. I would suggest that perhaps an hour and a half to each side would be acceptable.

Mr. WARNER. Will the other side agree to fix a time?

Mr. ROBESON. This is admitted on all sides to be the most im-

Mr. ROBESON. This is admitted on all sides to be the most important question that can occupy the attention of this or any other Congress. Fortunately we are able to-day to approach it without the exigency of political excitement.

Mr. BICKNELL. I have not yielded for any argument.

Mr. ROBESON. We can now dispose of it calmly and judiciously, and we ought not to be bothered in the future by any precedents about which there may be dispute.

Mr. BICKNELL. I rise to a point of order. I have not yielded.

Mr. ROBESON. I think we are entitled to an opportunity to discuss this question. If we are not allowed to discuss it, then I think we are entitled to defeat it by every means known to parliamentary law.

Mr. BICKNELL. I demand the previous question.

Mr. KEIFER. I understand the gentleman who has charge of this measure to refuse an opportunity for debate.

Mr. HERBERT. How much time do you want?

Mr. KEIFER. I am unable to speak for any person but myself.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that the two sides—if there are two sides—should come to some agreement in regard to time.

Mr. SPRINGER. How much time does the gentleman desire?
Mr. KEIFER. I want an hour—just what the rules give me.
Mr. SPRINGER. How much time do the gentleman's colleagues want? Mr. KEIFER. I am not able to speak for them; we have had no consultation upon the subject.

Mr. SPRINGER. Will the gentlemen on the other side name a time when we may have a vote?

Mr. KEIFER. I cannot name a time myself.

Mr. KEIFER. I cannot name a time myself.

Mr. SPRINGER. Then we will take a vote now.

Mr. ROBESON. Is there anything pressing of more importance than this? Why should we be shut off from debating this question?

Mr. SPRINGER. There is nothing else so important as this; therefore we desire to dispose of it now.

Mr. ROBESON. Without discussion? I know that all the gentleman knows on this subject is contained in the book which he holds in his hand, [Precedents of the Count of Electoral Votes,] and I have obtained a great deal of information from it: yet I want discussion. obtained a great deal of information from it; yet I want discussion on the subject.

Mr. SPRINGER. I commend this book to the gentleman. I think he will be improved in his knowledge of the subject if he will read it.

Mr. CONGER. All that we can say is to repeat the prayer, Oh that all the rest of our enemies had written a book! [Laughter.]

Mr. WARNER. How long would it take the gentleman from Michigan to write his book?

Mr. KEIFER. Do I understand the gentleman from Indiana yields the floor? If so, I desire to be recognized.

Mr. ATKINS. Mr. Speaker, who has the floor?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BICKNELL] is on the floor. on the floor.

Mr. ATKINS. I hope he will proceed.

Mr. BICKNELL. I ask gentlemen on the other side whether they will fix any time at which they will agree to come to a vote? [Cries of "No!" "No!"]

Mr. KEIFER. I am unable to say now certainly.

Mr. KEIFER. I am unable to say now certainly.
Mr. ATHERTON. Will you make any effort to find out?
Mr. KEIFER. I am unable to do it now.
Mr. BICKNELL. Then I demand the previous question.
Mr. KEIFER. The gentleman had better wait until he sees how soon we shall get through speaking.
Mr. WHITE. I insist on my resolution to commit this proposition to the Committee on the Electoral Count, with instructions. Mr.

Speaker, I make a motion—

The SPEAKER. The Chair has heard the motion, but is looking at the language of Rule XVII. The Chair will cause to be read the resolution sent to the desk by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. WHITE.]

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. The gentleman from Indiana has

mr. Flow Sheller, of Thinois. The gentleman from Indiana has not yielded the floor.

Mr. BICKNELL. I have never yielded the floor.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana demands the previous question; but the Chair thinks (although he wishes to examine the language of the rule before making a positive decision) that under Rule XVII a motion to commit is in order notwithstanding the pendency of a demand for the previous question.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Let the rule be read.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will cause the rule to be read; but the resolution will be read first.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved. That this resolution be committed to the Committee on the Electoral Count, with instructions to report a bill regulating the counting of the electoral votes for President and Vice-President of the United States in pursuance of article 12 of the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. WHITE. I ask to modify my resolution by striking out the words "this resolution" and inserting "the pending resolution."
The SPEAKER. The gentleman has the right to modify his res-

The Chair will now cause to be read Rule XVII.

The Clerk read as follows:

It shall be in order, pending the motion for or after the previous question shall have been ordered on its passage, for the Speaker to entertain and submit a motion to commit, with or without instructions, to a standing or select committee.

The SPEAKER. The Chair entertains the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. White.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair decided at the last session that under the rules the motion to commit can be once made during the pendency of the previous question.

Mr. SPRINGER. There is no doubt that decision is correct; but if the motion to commit has been already made at this stage and voted down, it is not in order now to make it again.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has not the record before him, and does not like to trust his memory on such a matter.

Mr. KEIFER. It does not make any difference, I apprehend; for this is a renewal of the demand for the previous question. The right to make the motion to commit comes in every time the previous question. tion is called.

Mr. SPRINGER. If the motion was withdrawn, it would be in order to make it now.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will have the Journal examined.

Mr. KEIFER. At the last session the motion to commit was in effect or actually withdrawn and a motion made to postpone until the first day of this session.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it a fair construction to put upon the rule to allow an opportunity to any member to move to commit pending the previous question, just as one motion to adjourn (the two cases being somewhat analogous) is allowed pending a motion to suspend the rules.

tion to suspend the rules.

Mr. WHITE. This is a new call of the previous question.

Mr. CONGER. The RECORD shows—I have a copy of it in my

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman be kind enough to read it?

Mr. CONGER. (Reading.)

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana withdraws the demand for the previous question on the adoption of the resolution, and now moves to postpone the resolution and make it a special order for the first Monday of December next, on which motion he demands the previous question.

Mr. WHITE. That is right.

The SPEAKER. Was that a proceeding as to this resolution or some other?

Mr. CONGER. As to this resolution. I send the volume to the Chair. What I have read is followed by the action of postponement. The SPEAKER. The Chair is advised by the journal clerk that no actual vote ever was taken on the motion to commit. That vote, if demanded, must be taken, under the rules, some time pending the previous question. Under this state of facts, without going further, without deciding the question whether the right exists now, in view of the previous question having been withdrawn, the Chair entertains the motion

Mr. WHITE. The Speaker decides, then, the motion can be made? The SPEAKER. He does. Mr. WHITE.

Mr. WHITE. Then I withdraw the motion for the present and will renew it at some future time.

The SPEAKER. The vote, then, will be taken on seconding the demand for the previous question.

Mr. WHITE. Very well; I withdraw, for the present, the motion

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has the right to withdraw it.

Mr. KEIFER. I now inquire whether the gentleman from Indiana is willing the debate shall proceed?

Mr. BICKNELL. If you will fix the time on your side on which you will agree a vote shall be taken—that is, a reasonable time—I

Mr. KEIFER. It is impossible for me to do that now; but we are willing to proceed, and we will reach an end sooner by a discussion than by doing something else.

Mr. BICKNELL. If you cannot agree to some time, I will call for

Mr. ROBESON. Speaking for myself, will the gentleman agree to one week from to-day at four o'clock? We may discuss much less important questions than counting the electoral vote.

Mr. BICKNELL. I cannot accept that. I call for a vote, Mr.

Speaker, on seconding the demand for the previous question.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 98, noes 1.

Mr. CONGER. No quorum has voted.

The Speaker ordered tellers, and appointed Mr. BICKNELL and Mr.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 102, noes 4. The SPEAKER. No quorum has voted, and the only motions in order are, that there be a call of the House, and to adjourn.

Mr. CONGER. I again ask the gentleman from Indiana to withdraw his motion and allow debate to proceed.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Name your time.
Mr. CONGER. The gentleman will recollect we were in this exact position when we adjourned. The last action on this subject, just before we adjourned, was the demand for debate, which was refused. Since that time, in my judgment, the people of the United States have decided that we may debate the subject, and we intend to do it.

Mr. HUNTON. I wish to ask a question of the gentleman from Michigan and the other side of the House, whether four days' discussion will estimate them?

Mr. CONGER. We have sent this question to the people, and they have determined we may debate it.

Mr. HUNTON. There is no desire on this side of the House to suppress debate on this question. We believe the subject was fally discussed at the last session of this Congress, but our opinion on this subject does not seem to be concurred in by some gentlemen on the other side. Some of them indicate a purpose to further discuss this question.

We are not unwilling on this side of the House to such discussion, but we want to have some idea when filibustering is to cease on the other side and we shall be allowed to come to a vote. If we can get other side and we shall be allowed to come to a vote. If we can get an indication from the other side of the House when they will be willing to come to a vote on this question, then it will be for this side of the House to say whether they will grant the time asked for discussion. If it be reasonable I think I can guarantee it will be granted. But we are not willing to consume the time of the House in a short session and the last session of this Congress in debate, and then at the end of the time have the same scenes begun here this morning. And I desire gentlemen on the other side of the House to understand that if the settlement of the count of the presidential election in that if the settlement of the count of the presidential election in February, when the law fixes it, is obstructed, it shall not be by any action on this side of the House.

Mr. CONGER. The demand of the gentlemen on this side of the House for a right to speak on this resolution is not a recent thing. For days and for weeks during the last session gentlemen asserted here their desire to discuss this question. They asked the other side of the last session gentlemen asserted here their desire to discuss this question. of the House, then in the plenitude of its power and in the expectation of a continuance of it, to give them at least the privilege of speaking on this proposition, and they refused. Yesterday, on the very first day of this session, this measure, after an interim, was attempted to be forced upon us, and it is pressed to-day without any offer of debate. The gentleman from Indiana demands the previous question to shut off all debate. He is asked to give time. My friend from Ohio [Mr. Keifer] says he wants an hour to talk on this very important question, and he is refused. Gentlemen all around me on this side of the House now and on former occasions have said they wished to debate this question.

Ah! the gentleman says, you may debate with the collar around your neck, to come home when we draw you in. You cannot talk like independent men here—the question cannot be opened here without conditions; that is what the other side of the House, not in the plenitude of power as in the last session, but humbled by the voice of the people, demand of us to-day. We do not accept the prop-

The gentleman says we filibuster. Sir, we take the constitutional and legal modes of meeting any proposition here which invades or infringes our right to debate any question presented. Our right to debate here is above party dictation. If the laws and rules of this House are to be invoked to prevent or abridge our privileges, then we are forced to compel by silence our right to talk. There we stand, sir. Without condition and without promise, I think I express the view of every member of this side of the House, when I say that we will be heard, or our silence shall be equally effectual to force it. [Applause on the republican side.]

Mr. CARLISLE. Do we understand the gentleman from Michigan to announce that his side of the House seriously declines to fix any time or any limit to the discussion of this question?

Mr. CONGER. Not at all, sir. We indicate most decidedly that when we finish talking upon the subject gentlemen upon the other side may proceed in any manner they desire with the proposition.

Mr. CARLISLE. Will the gentleman indicate any time or about what time they will finish talking?

Mr. CONGER. My impression is—and I say it with a great deal of Mr. CONGER. My impression is—and I say it with a great deal of reluctance and hesitation—that when each member on this side of the House has had an opportunity to say all he desires to say on this question, we shall be done talking, at or about that time. [Laughter on the republican side.]

Mr. CARLISLE. Does the gentleman mean, then, that every member on that side of the House desires to discuss this question?

Mr. CONGER. I do not know. I am not informed as to that. I only know that it seems to me there is a very universal expression of sentiment on this side to discuss this matter fully. They come here only know that it seems to me there is a very universal expression of sentiment on this side to discuss this matter fully. They come here, as gentlemen upon the other side of the House have come, full of information which they have just gathered from the people during this last campaign, and the intimation there gathered shows them, as it has shown to other gentlemen running for office and brought in contact with the people in that way, that we have the right to be heard here and to express our views in the interest of our several constituencies.

Mr. CARLISLE. I think that gentlemen on this side of the House are entirely willing to allow a reasonable time for debate on this proposition.

Mr. CONGER. Very probably they are.
Mr. CARLISLE. And I think if gentlemen on the other side of the House will indicate any reasonable time or probable time when they would be willing to close the debate, we could very readily arrive at would be willing to close the debate, we could very readily arrive at some adjustment of it.

Mr. CONGER. Then our right to debate depends upon our willingness to quit talking. [Laughter on the republican side.]

Mr. CARLISLE. When you are through talking.

Mr. CONGER. Ah! I have already asserted for my side of the House that they will stop talking when they get through.

Mr. CARLISLE. But surely gentlemen on the other side of the House insisting upon the right to debate this proposition must have some idea of the time when they will conclude.

some idea of the time when they will conclude.

Mr. CONGER. I think, as nearly as I can understand, that I would be safe in saying the time required on this side of the House will not probably exceed one hour for each member. [Laughter on the republican side.]

Mr. ROBESON. If my friend from Kentucky will permit me—

Mr. CARLISLE. Certainly.

Mr. ROBESON. I stand in opposition to this measure, Mr. Speaker, upon grounds of principle. I am not here specially to prevent action. On this side of the House we, in the first place, deny the power tion. On this side of the House w of Congress to make such a rule.

Mr. CARLISLE. That is a matter for discussion.

Mr. ROBESON. And secondly, we deny the constitutional power to make a rule in that way. That governs the whole question, and we desire to discuss that question. The weakness of this rule, as presented to the House, seems to me to be so great that I think after free and full discussion the judicial mind of my friend from Kentucky will waver toward our side; and then I fear, if we shall have fixed any limit to the debate, or left any power on the other side of the House to cut it off, his colleague will pull the string and not allow him time to come over. Therefore we desire to discuss this question on our constitutional rights as members of this House without submitting to a limitation which the other side chooses to put upon it.

Mr. CARLISLE. We on this side of the House have asked gentlemen on that side to fix the limitation themselves.

Mr. ROBESON. Yes; and they say also when we do indicate the

Mr. ROBESON. Yes; and they say also when we do indicate the time they will grant it. Now, we say we will not enjoy that freedom by their grace or permission, but claim it as our constitutional right. [Applause on the republican side.]

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer this proposition to gentlemen on the other side of the House.

Mr. KEIFER. I am waiting to proceed with the debate if the Chair will recognize me. I make the point of order that if this is to be discussed the Chair ought to recognize me. [Laughter.]

be discussed the Chair ought to recognize me. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair will do so.

Mr. KEIFER. I am ready to go on now.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask unanimous consent that the resolution which I send to the desk may be read for information, as it may be the means of arriving at a solution of this question.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be read.

The Clark read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That debate be allowed on the pending resolution from day to day until Tuesday next at two o'clock p. m., when the question shall be taken upon agreeing to the resolution, to the exclusion of all other questions.

Mr. SPRINGER. This allows one week for debate upon this question, during which time I think the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. Robeson] can fully express all of his views on the constitutional questions that may arise, and the gentleman from Michigan will also be able to express his.

Mr. CONGER. I desire to ask the Chair if the pending question is not the demand for the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The Chair supposed the House was trying to reach an understanding as to the length of debate. Mr. CONGER. Then let the demand for the previous question be withdrawn

Mr. SPRINGER. If gentlemen on the other side will listen to the

Mr. SPRINGER. If gentlemen on the other side will listen to the proposition I think they will admit it is a fair one.

The SPEAKER. The proposition will be again read.

The Clerk again read the proposition submitted by Mr. SPRINGER.

Mr. KEIFER. Is that resolution now in order?

The SPEAKER. The resolution is not in order. It is a proposition made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] to which be asked appropriate consent. he asks unanimous consent.

Mr. KEIFER. I think it likely that the debate will not last the length of time there specified; but I cannot agree to that resolution. Mr. STEVENSON. I wish to inquire if the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. ROBESON] did not make the proposition that debate should close within one week from to-day?

Mr. ROBESON. I said I was willing so far as I was concerned to agree that the debate should then close. I do not want to occupy more than half an hour myself.

Mr. SPRINGER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Keifer] suggests we may desire to vote upon this question earlier than the time specified in the proposition I have submitted. If so we can agree at any time by unanimous consent to vote upon the question before the day specified in the resolution is reached.

Mr. CONGER. I demand the regular order.

Mr. KEIFER. The proposition submitted by the gentleman from Illinois cannot be agreed to in the form in which it is presented.

Mr. SPRINGER. Will the gentleman from Ohio suggest a different form or a definite term?

Mr. CALKINS. I would suggest that the gentleman from Illinois strike out the latter clause of his proposition.

Mr. SPRINGER. What is that?

Mr. CALKINS. The clause that on Tuesday next the debate shall olose and a vote be taken.

Mr. SPRINGER. That is the proposition itself.

Mr. CARLISLE. I do not understand that the gentleman from Illinois by the proposition he has submitted intends to exclude votes on amendments

Mr. SPRINGER. Surely gentlemen on the other side of the House

Mr. SPRINGER. Surely gentlemen on the other side of the House do not desire to place themselves in the attitude of obstructing the passage of necessary legislation to secure a count of the electoral vote.

Mr. CONGER. I have demanded the regular order three times.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has been listening to suggestions from the floor as to settling the time during which the debate shall continue.

Mr. CONGER. The remarks of the gentleman from Illinois, making reflections on our conduct, form no part of the proposition for settling the question as to time. I demand the regular order.

settling the question as to time. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order, a quorum not having voted—
Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to inquire of the Chair if my proposition has been objected to?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan practically objects by demanding the regular order.

Mr. CONGER. We have proposed to have free debate upon this question without restriction. The proposition of the gentleman from Illinois seems to be based on the supposition that we do not mean discussion.

Mr. KEIFER. We are losing a great deal of valuable time in this discussion.

Mr. DAVIS, of North Carolina. I desire to say a word. The proposition made by this side of the House is certainly fair and could not be disapproved by any fair-minded man; and the gentlemen on the other side ought to bear in mind that the time will come when the minority may not be on that side, and when they may find themselves in the power of a minority, if that minority shall disregard the public interest, as gentlemen on the other side are now doing.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF, of Ohio. I believe it is generally understood we on this side are not to be permanently in the minority; that we are not to continue in a minority long.

The SPEAKER. The gentlemen from Michigan demands the reg-ular order. The regular order, a quorum not being present to vote, is a motion to adjourn or a motion for a call of the House. Mr. SPRINGER. I move there be a call of the House. Mr. KEIFER. I hope the gentleman on the other side will allow

Mr. KEIFER. I hope the gentleman on the other side will allow the debate to go on.

Mr. SPRINGER. I have already proposed the debate shall go on for one week. The gentlemen on that side are not satisfied with that. I might be willing to listen to them all winter on this question. I could stand it, but the country could never endure such an infliction.

Mr. WILBER. I suggest to the gentleman from Illinois that we proceed with the debate, and if we are through before Tuesday we can take the vote. If not, we can proceed until we get through.

Mr. SPRINGER. What is the gentleman's proposition?

The SPEAKER. That debate be allowed to go on without limitation; but the gentleman from New York supposes it may close be-tion; but the gentleman from New York supposes it may close before next Tuesday.

Mr. SPRINGER. If the gentleman from Michigan had not claimed an hour for each of the gentlemen on that side of the House, and no gentleman having disclaimed his intention to occupy it, we might have agreed to the proposition of the gentleman from New York.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan has not the power to claim an hour for each gentleman under the rule.

Mr. CONGER. The gentleman from Michigan will keep within his rights under the rules without having them defined precisely by the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has the right to explain what is or what is not permissible under the rule.

Mr. WARNER. All we want to know is, whether the gentlemen on that side, after having debated this question as long as they wish, will come to a vote without further obstruction.

Mr. McLANE. I ask the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Bicknell] to withdraw his motion for the previous question. I do not see why we on this side should object to just as much debate as either side desires. I for one do not want to appear as an obstacle to the fullest possible debate on this question. If the other side of this House are really sincere in their willingness to vote upon this question, that will be apparent within the time that both sides are willing to concede. If they shall choose to carry on this debate beyond a week, or two weeks, or three weeks, let them do so, and let them take the responsibility of so obstructing legislation. The country will perfectly appreciate upon which side of the House the responsibility will rest, and if they shall choose to so occupy the time of this House until the very day of the counting the electoral vote, I for one will not make myself unhappy.

I appeal to my friend from Indiana, if he has not any well-digested and decided opinions of his own on this question, not to persist in his attempt to have any understanding with the other side of the House. Let the call for the previous question be withdrawn for the present. It will be within the power of my honorable friend to make it again whenever he may find that the time of the House is being unduly wasted or consumed. Let us go on with the debate without any limit. I do not want, on this side, to be embarrassed with an understanding to which I am no party and to which I can have no opportunity of being a party; an understanding made in the face of the whole House, being a party; an understanding made in the face of the whole house, it is true, but by half a dozen members only. Let the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. Robeson] take his time and debate this question.

Mr. ROBESON. My time will be very short.

Mr. McLANE. That may or may not be the case. The gentleman is not in the habit of treating any question very superficially. He has propounded to this House two very material propositions, and certainly if he would do justice to himself he will not be able to dispose of those questions much within the time which the rules of this House would give him. And I have no doubt he would occupy the hour to which he would be entitled.

I do not understand that there is any such pressure upon this House that we as a political organization here should take it upon ourselves to make an issue with the other side of the House about counting the electoral vote. If they choose to let the debate go on until the day of the count, as I have already said, well and good. The two Houses will then make their count as they please to make it, as they think it wise and reasonable to make it; and gentlemen will find that they can make it without any rule, the action of the House being a rule for itself.

I do not feel that we are justified either in the eyes of the country or in our own, as two political organizations here, in making the point or in our own, as two political organizations here, in making the point that we are making to-day, and commencing a scene which can but be discreditable, by opening this session with filibustering, with refusing to vote, whether upon the yeas and nays or by passing between the tellers, and that upon no material issue at all, merely because gentlemen upon the other side do not choose to agree to a week's time to discuss this question. They have said in their seats, as well as in the discussion during these efforts to have an understanding, that they do not want a week's time for debate, that a few days may do.

Well, let a few days confirm that assertion, or let them show that it is an insidious effort to waste the time of the House and to avoid any action at all upon the subject. Until some such fact is apparent,

I think we upon our side of the House are unjustified in making any such issue with them, and I, for one, do not want to make it. Therefore I appeal to my friend from Indiana [Mr. BICKNELL] to relieve me from the necessity of following him in any such effort by withdrawing the motion for the previous question, as he can renew it whenever he may think it necessary.

The SPEAKER. It can be renewed at the end of every hour.

Mr. BICKNELL. While I will say that I am perfectly satisfied that further debate upon this question would be a necless waste of time.

further debate upon this question would be a useless waste of time, yet, inasmuch as gentlemen on both sides of the House seem to be inclined to debate it, and as we have no quorum here now by which we can pass this resolution without the aid of some gentlemen on the

we can pass this resolution without the aid or some gentlemen on the other side, in answer to the appeal of the gentleman from Maryland, [Mr. McLane,] I will withdraw the demand for the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. Keifer.]

Mr. REAGAN. I want to say one word. We are here in a short session. We have all the appropriation bills to pass and a great deal of other important legislation, if we would avoid an extra session of Congress

I am not able to advise my friend from Indiana [Mr. Bicknell.] or the kind-hearted and credulous gentleman from Maryland [Mr. McLane.] But there is no man here who does not in his heart know that we are not to have a vote on this question. The proposition is simply to sacrifice that much of the time of the House without any simply to sacrince that much of the time of the House without any profit, the debate to be followed by a renewal of filibustering. I regret very much that the gentleman from Indiana should consent by his action, by withdrawing his motion, to the sacrifice of that much of the time of the House. We will not get a vote on this proposition to-day; we will not get a vote upon it during this session. He had better withdraw the resolution as soon as it is demonstrated by factious opposition that the other side of the House have determined to defeat this beneficent and necessary measure.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Keifer] is recognized for one hour.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I desire to offer a resolution.

The SPEAKER. It is not in order now.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. It is in order, I submit.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Ohio yield?

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. It is a question of privilege.

The SPEAKER. There is already one question of privilege pend-

The SPEAKER. There is already one question of privilege pending. If the gentleman's proposition is an amendment to the pending resolution, that is another matter.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. It does affect the present proposition.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. The gentleman from Ohio is on the floor.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio is on the floor. The resolution is now open to debate. The time will come when it will be proper to move to amend.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I rise to a point of order. Is not a resolution to postrope the pending proposition in order?

to postpone the pending proposition in order?

The SPEAKER. It is not now. The gentleman from Ohio will proceed.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Speaker, this resolution passed the Senate at its last session, and this House was then, with great zeal, pressed to concur therein. Failing to force the resolution through the House before the last adjournment, it was made a special order for the opening day of this session. Its prompt passage was supposed to be important, because we were in a presidential election year.

On every hand we were warned that under its provisions this Congress, with a democratic majority in each House, would count in the democratic candidates of 1880 for President and Vice-President of the United States. Leading democrats outside of Congress openly proclaimed to the country such a purpose. But now, fortunately, the people of this country, having in their sovereign capacity given a judgment so unmistakable as to hush to silence all further talk of this kind, it seems as though wisdom would dictate that we should again plant ourselves on the plain provisions of the Constitution as

In the consideration of this question partisan spirit should be forgotten. A remembrance of the fact that after the presidential election of 1876, on account of a division of opinion on this question, not confined to party, this nation was brought to the brink of anarchy and civil strife, business was paralyzed, and faith in the perpetuity of the Government was shaken, should force us to a solemn realization of our duty as legislators and cause us to anxiously inquire what can be done to prevent a repetition of like scenes and events.

I propose now to give some reasons why I am unalterably opposed, not only to this proposed joint rule, but to legislation in every form which undertakes to withhold from the President of the Senate his constitutional powers and vest them in Congress, or one branch thereof, and which also proposes to provide a means by which the vote of the electors of a State may not be counted. I deny that the power not to count the electoral vote belongs anywhere.

I know the ground I purpose to tread has been trodden in recent years by some of the great statesmen and political giants of this country, and I am conscious that I shall be charged with attempting to parry with a rapier the broadsword cuts of political friends as well as political foes. I shall, however, endeavor to show, as an excuse for my temerity, that the construction of the Constitution which I maintain is the one given it by the convention that framed it, by individual members of that convention after its adjournment, by the almost uniform course pursued under the Constitution, and by statesmen who figured prominently in the political arena in the early days of the Republic.

PROPOSED JOINT RULE.

The first section of the resolution provides for the meeting of the two Houses to witness the count, which the Constitution and laws already provide for. Sections 4,5, and 6 relate to wholly immaterial matters, such as the preservation of order, arrangement of seats, &c., in joint session. The material parts of the resolution are these:

Appointment of tellers.

SEC. 2. Two tellers shall be previously appointed on the part of the Senate and two on the part of the House of Representatives, to record and compute the votes of electors.

Appointment of tellers.

Sec. 2. Two tellers shall be previously appointed on the part of the Senate and two on the part of the House of Representatives, to record and compute the votes of electors.

Opening the list of votes and receiving and counting them.

Src. 3. The certified list of votes of electors shall be opened by the President of the Senate in the presence of the Senate and House of Representatives and in the alphabetical order of the States, beginning with the letter A. He shall open all the occitified list of votes of electors, (or papers purporting to be such certified list of votes,) of each State respectively, which shall have been delivered to him, in the order herein prescribed, and shall deliver them to the tellers, by whom they shall be read in the presence and hearing of the two Houses.

When the papers in one of such certified lists shall have been so read, and before mother sealed package or list of votes of electors from the same or any other State shall be or expected in the presence and hearing of the two Houses.

When the papers in one of such certified lists shall have been or any other State shall be or evided, such list shall be received and the votes be counted, and no other package or any or either of them. If no objection is made, in the manner hereinather provided, such list shall be received and the votes be counted, and no other package purporting to be a certified list of votes of electors from such State shall be opened. If objection is made, shall each be submitted in writing and shall state the grounds of objection is made, shall each be submitted in writing and shall state the grounds of objection secretarily and without argument, and must be signed in duplicated and one of said duplicates shall be handed to the President of the Senate and the other to the Speaker of the House of Representatives; and the said objection shall be stated by the President of the Senate in the presence and hearing of the two Houses; wherepon he shall proceed to speak and one of said duplicat

An analysis of the proposed rule will show its startling character. It is sought by a concurrent, not a joint resolution, to adopt a joint rule that casts new and inconsistent duties on the President of the Senate—an officer whose duties are defined by the Constitution—by requiring him to open "papers purporting to be certified lists of votes" whether they are such or not, and this in the face of the constitution—in the second constitution of the constitution. tional provision only requiring him to open actual certificates of votes, all of which votes are required to be counted. It is proposed to give Congress the right not only to count the electoral votes for President and Vice-President, but also the power not to count them at all. To do this, would, by a concurrent resolution, confer extraordinary and dangerous powers on the bodies passing it, and without ordinary and dangerous powers on the bodies passing it, and without a reasonable pretense of constitutional warrant.

The last clause of section 8, article 2 of the Constitution authorizes Congress to make all necessary laws to carry into execution certain enumerated powers, "and all other powers vested by the Constitution in the Government of the United States or in any department or officer thereof." The right of Congress to make laws to carry into effect every provision of the Constitution will not authorize it to confer power on itself. A joint rule adopted by a concurrent resolution, such as the one now being considered, and without the President's approval, could in no sense be regarded as a law. This is a bold scheme to enable Congress to select the President and Vice-President of the to enable Congress to select the President and Vice-President of the United States from the persons voted for, regardless of the one receiving the highest number of electoral votes.

I do not admit by any means that the foregoing or any clause of the Constitution gives the right to Congress to by law confer such high power on itself.

The grounds of objection (if indeed any are required under the rule) to the certified list of votes of electors are left to the whims and partisan views of members of Congress. Whatever the objection may be the two Hunses must senarate and consider it and if tion may be, the two Houses must separate and consider it; and if there be a genuine certificate from a State and a paper purporting to be a certificate from the same State, the electoral vote of such State cannot be counted at all, on objection being made to each, without the concurrent action of both Houses. Under the rule, then, either House of Congress could prevent the vote of a State from being counted. This would result in one House (not Congress) controlling by its negative action the election of President and Vice-President of the United States. Under such a rule the case could arise where or the United States. Under such a rule the case could arise where by the Senate and House acting together, or separately, no electoral vote would be counted, and there would then be no power to elect a President or Vice-President, and the country would be without either. The House cannot elect a President, or the Senate a Vice-President, except from persons who have received counted electoral votes. The resolution then goes to the extent of giving to each House the right to count or not to count the electoral votes of any or all of the States; and I agree there is as much warrant in the Constitution for this as for the authority to give Congress such right, especially by a joint rule of the two House

The member from Indiana [Mr. Bicknell] in charge of this measure was once in a speech here (June 10, 1880) candid enough to say:

In my [his] judgment no joint rule will meet the existing emergency. Where an obligation rests on Congress to provide the legislation necessary to carry into execution constitutional provisions, a joint rule is not legislation. A joint rule in such a case is a mere make-shift, a temporary expedient; it binds nobody. Either House adopting it to-day may abandon it to-morrow. It carries no moral force with it.

Still with these views the distinguished member presses this resolution as its chief advocate. Constitutional obligations at times are made to set easy.

I am surprised that the advocates of the right of Congress to count the electoral votes should be willing to support that part of this "make-shift" which allows electoral votes to be counted without the concurrence of both Houses of Congress. I refer to this language of the resolution:

If but one list of votes of electors from any State has been submitted to each House for its decision, and it shall appear that the Houses have not concurred in rejecting said list, the same shall be received.

In such case who will count the electoral vote? Will not the President of the Senate count it?

But the measure of this proposed usurpation of power is to be found in that clause of the resolution which gives to one branch only of Congress the power to reject, with or without grounds, any and all electoral votes.

Two sets of certificates can be furnished for any State. Any person can make and return "papers purporting to be a certified list of votes," and then one House could throw out the entire vote of the State. A simple illustration of the workings of the rule in this respect may be given: Suppose a presidential candidate received 214 electoral votes Two sets of certificates can be furnished for any State. including the States of New York and Pennsylvania, and another had 155, and two sets of certificates were placed in the hands of the President of the Senate for each of these States. On objection being made, if one House should vote not to count the votes as shown by either of the certificates, 64 (New York 35, Pennsylvania 29) votes of the leading candidate would be rejected, his remaining vote would be only 150, and the candidate having 155 votes would become President of the United States. A majority of one branch of Congress would thus make a President from those voted for by the electors. A Vice-President dent would be made in the same way.

Having indicated the design, scope, and workings of the proposed rule, and in some measure shown the want of power to adopt it, let us take a broader view and consider who has the right to appoint electors, determine the validity of their votes, and to count their votes.

THE APPOINTMENT OF ELECTORS

is a purely State matter. The language of the Constitution is:

Each State shall appoint, in such manner as the Legislature thereof may direct, a number of electors, equal to the whole number of Senators and Representatives to which the State may be entitled in the Congress, &c.—Section 1, article 2.

The same section of the Constitution provides that-

The Congress may determine the time of choosing the electors, and the day on which they shall give their votes.

Here the power of Congress in relation to the electors begins and ends. It has nothing to do with the manner of appointing them, and it follows that it has no right to establish a mode of determining when the Legislature of the State has appointed them if it has acted at all.

Nothing is clearer than the fact that if electors have been chosen as the Constitution provides, at the time and in the manner fixed by law, and they have cast their vote on the day prescribed by law, that it must be counted as cast; and every attempt to prevent its being counted would be a bold effort to rob the people of this country, in flagrant violation of the Constitution of the United States, of their choice for President and Vice-President.

The proposed joint rule can only be characterized as a measure of usurpation and fraud, the enforcement of which could hardly in the end lead to anything short of bloodshed and war. It proposes to vest Congress, through the rejection of electoral votes, with the prerogative of selecting the two highest officers of the Government from the persons voted for no matter how clearly it may have been determined tive of selecting the two highest officers of the Government from the persons voted for, no matter how clearly it may have been determined by State or other authority that the votes were duly cast. It occasionally happened in republican Rome that her senators, the lords, and aristocrats would appear in the Campus Martius and, with the aid of their armed servants and a hired retinue, prevent on an election day the choice of a consul unfriendly to them. This at least had the merit of boldness compared to a subtle method of depriving the electors of their votes after they were cast. The barbaric methods of two thousand years ago have been adopted in elections in some places in our Republic; they now seem to be giving way to the more bloodless method of not counting the votes cast. In these Halls we should give no countenance to either method.

WHO TO COUNT THE VOTE.

WHO TO COUNT THE VOTE.

If the right to count the electoral vote, or, rather, to decide what vote should be counted, is not given specifically by the Constitution to any authority, it does not follow that Congress can assume it. The debates on the adoption of the Constitution show that it was designed to remove as far as possible the choice of President and Vice-President from the control of Congress.

Charles Pinchton of South Carolina a member of the constitu-

Charles Pinckney, of South Carolina, a member of the constitu-tional convention, January 23, 1800, when speaking on the subject of the election of President of the United States, said:

He remembered very well that, in the Federal convention, great care was used to provide for the election of the President of the United States, independently of Congress, and to take the business, as far as possible, out of their hands.—Elliott's Debates, volume 4, page 424.

It may be observed here that it is quite immaterial who counts the electoral vote. The addition of a few figures is an easy task for any person. It is purely a matter of computation. The privilege of counting the vote, however, carries with it no right to reject it. The uniform construction put upon the language of the Constitution by its framers when adopted and first put in practice justifies the claim that Congress has no duty to perform in relation to counting the electoral vote other than to witness its count.

PRECEDENTS OF CONSTRUCTION.

The Constitution was signed September 17, 1787, and on the same day a resolution passed the convention unanimously directing the mode of putting the constitutional government into operation; and on the matter of counting the electoral vote for the first President,

That the Senators should convene at the time and place assigned: that the Senators should appoint a President of the Senate for the sole purpose of receiving, opening, and counting the vote for President.

Washington, the president of the convention, signed this resolution. Here was a clear construction of the Constitution, before the ink used in writing and signing it was dry, and by the voice of all its framers, which should alone close the mouths of doubters and modern constitutional expounders.

In accordance with the resolution the first Senate chose John Langdon, one of its number, President of the Senate; and, as its order declared-

For the sole purpose of opening the certificates and counting the votes of electors of the several States in the choice of President and Vice-President of the United States.

Accordingly, on April 6, 1789, John Langdon did open the certificates and count the electoral vote for President and Vice-President, and he then declared, and so certified, that George Washington and John Adams were elected, the former President and the latter Vice-President of the United States.

The certificates were prepared by a committee of the Senate, and they recited that-

The underwritten, appointed President of the Senate for the sole purpose of receiving, opening, and counting the votes of the electors, did, in the presence of the said Senate and House of Representatives, open all the certificates and count all the votes of the electors for a President and Vice President, &c.

An extract from the Journal of the House of the last-named date also conclusively shows that the President of the Senate declared what votes should be counted by the tellers. Here it is:

Mr. Parker and Mr. Heister [House tellers] then delivered in at the clerk's table a list of votes of the electors * * * as the same were declared by the President of the Senate in the presence of the Senate and this House.

This is the highest evidence that the President of the Senate not only opened the certificates but declared the electoral votes to be

In both branches of Congress there were then many members of the convention that had but recently framed the Constitution. None were found to protest against the action of the President of the Sen-

Members of Congress of this day who deny the right of the President of the Senate to declare what votes are to be counted must occupy the unenviable position of believing that the makers of the Constitution did not know the cunning of their own child; and, as we shall presently see, they must hold that Washington, John Adams, Jefferson, Madison, &c., were each declared elected President of the United States on a count of electoral votes made in violation of the Constitution.

Constitution.

While the champion of this resolution [Mr. BICKNELL] admits that Mr. Langdon did the counting which made George Washington and John Adams first President and first Vice-President, the member from Virginia, [Mr. HUNTON,] in the face of history, denies that fact; yet they, by some sort of democratic reasoning, bring themselves into mutual embrace and agree that one branch of Congress alone may count or not count the electoral vote. After giving a construction to the Constitution in favor of the President of the Senate's right to count the electoral vote, Congress passed, March 1, 1792, a law regulating the election of President and Vice-President, and therein recognized such construction. The material part of a section relating to the ascertainment of the vote is this: to the ascertainment of the vote is this:

That Congress shall be in session the second Wednesday in February * * * succeeding every meeting of the electors, and the said certificates, or so many of them as shall have been received, shall then be opened, the votes counted, and the persons who shall fill the offices of President and Vice-President ascertained and declared agreeably to the Constitution.

In that act there is no intimation that Congress had any right to count or reject electoral votes. This law hoary with age, but yet in force, it is now proposed to annul by a simple concurrent resolution of Congress. Under it John Adams opened the certificates, counted the votes, (February 5, 1793,) and declared Washington President, and himself Vice-President, to commence the 4th of March, 1793. Again, in February, 1797, John Adams discharged his duty as President of the Senate by opening the electoral certificates and counting the votes, at the conclusion of which he pronounced himself elected President and Thomas Jefferson Vice-President, and thereupon delivered himself of a heatitude, thus: ered himself of a beatitude, thus:

And may the Sovereign of the universe, the Ordainer of civil government on earth, for the preservation of liberty, justice, and peace among men, enable both to discharge the duties of these offices conformably to the Constitution of the United States with conscientious diligence, punctuality, and perseverance.

Mason of Virginia then reported from a committee of the Senate a resolution, which was adopted, requiring a notification of election to be sent to Mr. Jefferson, from which I read an extract:

The underwritten Vice-President of the United States and President of the Senate did, in the presence of the said Senate and House of Representatives, open all the certificates and count all the votes of the electors for a President and for a Vice-President.

No clearer evidence could have been preserved, not only of what John Adams did, but of the judgment of the then Congress as to the duty of the Vice-President to count the electoral vote. In the fourth presidential election Jefferson (February, 1801) as Vice-President discharged his duty in relation to the electoral vote, and signed a certificate in compliance with an order of the Senate from which this appeared that Thomas Jefferson, of Virginia, and Aaron Burr, of New York, had a majority of votes as electors, and an equal number of votes.

The underwritten Vice-President of the United States and President of the Senate did, in the presence of the said Senate and House of Representatives, open all the certificates and count all the votes of the electors for President, whereupon it appeared that Thomas Jefferson, of Virginia, and Aaron Burr, of New York, had a majority of votes as electors, and an equal number of votes.

Here is the most conclusive evidence of Mr. Jefferson's personal action under the Constitution. The distinguished member from Iowa [Mr. UPDEGRAFF] who in June last made an exhaustive argument on this subject has shown that Mr. Jefferson was called on to count the vote of Georgia for himself on a certificate (if it could be so called) which was more than technically defective. An account of his conduct, showing that he directed without consultation with anybody the vote of that State to be counted for himself and Aaron Burr, will be found in Davis's Memoirs of Burr, volume 2, page 71.

The honorable member from Georgia, [Mr. Stephens,] who, as I understand from his public writings and speeches, wholly repudiates the principles of the proposed joint rule and favors both Houses of Congress, while in joint session, exercising the right to settle by a vote per capita all disputed votes, in a published article (International Review, January and February, 1878) says Mr. Jefferson favored legislation by Congress to regulate the electoral count, and he quotes from what is said to be Mr. Jefferson's draught of an amendment to a bill pending before the Senate while he was Vice-President. It is fair to say that Mr. Jefferson's subsequent open public act which resulted in making himself President of the United States is in opposition to such a construction of the Constitution. No public act or speech of his supports this posthumous claim as to his views. It is quite certain that after Mr. Jefferson had written the paper referred to by the honorable gentleman he did not think well enough of it to have it offered in the Senate or to otherwise give it publicity, and he entombed it so thoroughly that its resurrection day did not come for seventy-five years and until grass had grown over his grave above half a century. seventy-five years and until grass had grown over his grave above

In the draught he is made to say that it is to be inferred from the wording of the Constitution that the members of the Senate and House of Representatives are to do the counting, and that they are

The views of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Stephens] and those of Mr. Jefferson are in harmony on the question of the right of the two Houses in joint session to count the electoral vote, if this paper of Mr. Jefferson can be accepted as his settled views, and both are against the usurpation sought to be worked out through the pending resolution.

If we take Mr. Jefferson's draught as a whole, we will find that he did not believe any authority could or should deprive any State of an electoral vote. I quote from it:

That whenever the vote of one or more of the electors of any State shall for any cause whatever be adjudged invalid, it shall be lawful for the Senators and Representatives of the said State, either in the presence of the two Houses or separately and withdrawn from them, to decide by their own votes to which of the persons voted for by any of the electors of their State [or to what person] the invalid vote or votes shall be given, for which purpose they shall be allowed a term of [one hour], and no longer, during which no certificate shall be opened or proceeded on.

This, however, so flatly contravenes the Constitution, which gives to States the right to select the persons who shall cast the electoral votes, that Mr. Jefferson on reflection may well have consigned this fugitive paper to supposed oblivion.

Those who assume to be the guardians of his name and fame should not have disturbed its resting-place or discovered it to the public eye.

not have disturbed its resting-place or discovered it to the public eye.

My friend from Georgia, while he regards Mr. Jefferson as an apostle of strict construction to be followed in the matter of the authority of Congress to ascertain the vote to be counted, could not but repudiate his views set forth in the quotation just made. He does not think Mr. Jefferson should be followed so far outside of the pale of the Constitution as to favor the casting of rejected electoral votes by members of Congress from States having such votes. While some differences of opinion developed early, yet they, on discussion, were dropped, and the uniform course obtained for the Vice-President to count the vote, and this prevailed until modern expediency has found it necessary to try to change it.

I might take up, did time permit, each presidential election succeeding those given, and show the method I now contend for was uniformly pursued. An anology may be necessary for having gone

I might take up, did time permit, each presidential election succeeding those given, and show the method I now contend for was uniformly pursued. An apology may be necessary for having gone into the details of history at all. I should not have done so but for the fact that at a recent session at least one member [Mr. Hunton, of Virginia] confidently claimed that (with a single exception) "the two Houses of Congress have exercised the power of counting the electoral vote." It is a misfortune that we so often read history awry, or that we do not read it at all.

CONSTITUTION.

A recurrence to the language of the Constitution on this subject and the history of its enactment will confirm us in the belief that the early and uniform practice we have shown to have existed was in accordance with its letter and spirit. The language of that instrument (section 1, article 2) is this:

The President of the Senate shall, in the presence of the Senate and House of Representatives, open all the certificates, and the votes shall then be counted.

This same language is found in the twelfth amendment to the Constitution, which is now in force. That amendment was proposed at the first session of the Eighth Congress, (December 12, 1803.) and it was adopted by the required number of States in 1804, after four presidential elections had been held under the Constitution, in which the President of the Senate counted the vote in the presence of the two Houses of Congress. If, as has been claimed, there is a casus omissus in respect to the electoral count, those who set the Constitution in motion did not discern it. No amendment was deemed necessary to change the prevailing construction of the Constitution, or to inaugurate a new policy in the matter of counting the electoral vote. No fears were then felt that the prevailing practice would lead to serious trouble. Why should we now drift from the old moorings? What new light has poured upon us in respect to this question? To use the language of Mr. Dallas in its defense:

The Constitution in its words is plain and intelligible, and it is meant for the home-bred, unsophisticated understandings of our fellow-citizens.

In the original draught of the Constitution, reported to the convention from a committee of eleven (September 4, 1787, Elliott's Debates, volume 1, page 283,) the language used was:

The President of the Senate shall, in that House, open all the certificates, and the votes shall then and there be counted.

Two days later, when the report was under consideration, the convention added to this clause, after the word counted, the words in the presence of the Senate and House of Representatives, thus showing it only intended these bodies to be auditors at the opening and counting of the vote. No vote or other act of the convention indicates any change of such intent on its face. All that appears is that in a reformation or revision of the language of the clause it was thought best, without any change of the sense, to transpose it and insert the words in the presence of the Senate and House of Representatives, in lieu of the words in that House, and also to strike out, as superfluous, the words and there. This left the clause as it now stands. From such revision no possible inference can reasonably be drawn that the convention intended to alter its previously expressed purpose of requiring the votes to be counted in the presence of the Senate and House of Representatives. The language of the clause was improved, the meaning was not changed. Eleven days after this clause was agreed upon, the same convention by resolution, as already shown, gave construction to it in harmony with its plain words. The convention did not, by inference, confer powers on Congress. Its powers were all carefully enumerated. (Section 8, article 1.)

certificates opened by the Vice-President to then be counted. What votes are then to be counted? Only the certified votes, and all these are absolutely required to be then counted. If votes are not certified they cannot be counted; if they are, and the certificate is laid before the joint convention, they must be counted, and then, for the Constitution so says.

If all that was contended for here was the privilege to perform the mere ministerial act of counting the votes as so evidenced, it might be conceded, as no possible harm could come from it. Any person learned in addition could be trusted to do that. There is no objection to tellers doing it, as has always been the practice. The material thing is the declaration of the vote to be counted, and this duty devolves on the President of the Senate. This resolution requires the tellers "to record and compute the votes of electors," and this is all the actual counting needed. What is proposed, I repeat, is, under cover of an alleged power to count the electoral votes, to give Congress, and in certain cases one branch thereof, the right not to count them.

Those who advocate this plan contend that the right to count (or retecount) the vote is not expressly granted to the Vine President, and of the electoral vote. We could not hope for as happy results if Congress were clothed with this important duty.

Those who advocate this plan contend that the right to count (or not count) the vote is not expressly granted to the Vice-President, and hence Congress may assume it. No right is given to Congress to gather to itself all powers not elsewhere conferred. It is said it is dangerous for the power to count the vote to be vested solely in one man—the President of the Senate. Grant this; it is always dangerous to repose power anywhere. If such power must belong somewhere, it will be as safe with him as with Congress. In nearly one hundred years of our constitutional existence no case of abuse of power (unless Mr. Jefferson's acts constitute one) can be or has been charged against a President of the Senate in respect to the counting of the electoral vote. We could not hope for as happy results if Congress were clothed with this important duty.

Large bodies are more tyrannical than individuals. Oppression, tyranny, usurpation, and injustice, as history teaches us, are the offspring of party factions in republics as well as the children of absolute monarchs. The Roman senate in the last two centuries of republican Rome incited, countenanced, justified, and condoned more wanton bloodshed than can be laid at the door of individual monarchy for the same period in the history of any so-called civilized nation. If we turn on the light of the present in our own Republic we are not reassured. We have recently seen, under the dictum of party caucus, crime and fraud, in the presence of which civilized man stands appalled, justified—not only justified, but sought to be legalized. We have witnessed legislative bodies abuse as well as usurp power. We have seen members of both great parties at our recent presidential electoral count united in a commission hermaphroditically organized, partaking of law judges and law makers, divide on every material question—8 to 7—according to party bias. This was not calculated to quiet the sensitive nerves of the Republic. The defeated party cried through the land that the result was a larceny, grand larceny, presidential larceny, and that it would be vindicated. The vindication has not yet come, it is true, and it is not likely ever to come in that case. A bad cause can have no vindication.

It has frequently occurred that a President of the Senate has unflinchingly discharged his duty under the Constitution, by counting the electoral vote and declaring elected a President and Vice-President of the opposite political party. When the fires of civil war were already lighting, in 1861, John C. Breckinridge, (shortly thereafter a leader in rebellion,) himself a presidential candidate, then Vice-President, opened the certificates and counted, (with the aid of the usual tellers,) and so certified, the electoral vote that made the now immortal Lincoln President of the United States.

It is conceded that the President of the Senate, and he only, has anthority to "open all the certificates," showing the electoral votes. This is a more dangerous power than the right to count the votes thus shown. He is to judge of the genuineness of the certificates. Should he decide that a paper purporting to be a certificate of such votes was not what it purported to be, he need not present it, and there would then be no opportunity to count the vote of a State. This has actually occurred. On February 8, 1865, Vice-President Hannibal Hamlin, of Maine, withheld certificates from the States of Louisiana and Tennessee; and when, during the joint session of the Houses, he was called on to submit them, he refused, and they were never submitted, nor the votes counted. It is true, he had the authority of a joint resolution, (approved by the President,) which had the force of a law, for refusing "to receive or count" the votes of these and other States. I refer to the joint resolution President Lincoln approved, (February 8, 1865,) and then sent a protesting message to the Senate, disclaiming all right of the Executive to interfere in the matter of counting the electoral vote.

My friend from Virginia, [Mr. HUNTON,] in a speech here, says President Lincoln approved the twenty-second joint rule, adopted in that year. It was adopted by a concurrent resolution, (February

My friend from Virginia, [Mr. Hunton,] in a speech here, says President Lincoln approved the twenty-second joint rule, adopted in that year. It was adopted by a concurrent resolution, (February 6, 1865,) and it was never submitted to him for his action. Other members have fallen into the same error. I understood the honorable Speaker, to-day, to cite the message of President Lincoln on the "joint resolution declaring certain States not entitled to representation in the electoral college" in support of the power of Congress to count the vote. Errors of judgment track in the wake of errors of history.

I do not justify the long-since abrogated twenty-second joint rule.

The resolution which President Lincoln approved set forth in its-preamble that eleven States, and named them, were then in rebellion and on that account declared that "no electoral votes shall be received or counted from said States." This went to the root of the case, and it was not a regulation of the conduct of the count in joint convention of the Houses. Then democrats, South, were absent, claiming these eleven States were out of the Union for all purposes, and democrats North were agreeing with them in the main; but some of them claimed they were still in the Union far enough to help elect a President of the United States. In that instance, if in no other, the republican party sided with the southern democrats, and accepted their view of the case, to a certain extent.

I am aware that my opinions are not parallel with any party lines. Some members say, in the cases where the President of the Senate has counted the vote, he has done so under the authority of Congress. This cannot be true. Congress cannot delegate the constitutional powers it possesses. John Langdon, the first President of the Senate, had no authority of Congress to count the vote, yet he counted the vote without objection.

The accountability to which a Vice-President would be held in case he should abuse his official power or fail to faithfully perform his duty is a sufficient guarantee that he will never attempt either—certainly not before his party friends in Congress would be ready to do

It may be going too far to hold that Congress has not power to, in the ordinary way, pass a law to guide the Vice-President in opening and counting the electoral vote, but any law or rule which would deprive him of the right to do either would be unconstitutional.

The opinion entertained by Mr. Jefferson, and which my friend from Georgia follows, that whatever is done having relation to the count must be while in joint convention, is undoubtedly sound. It harmonizes with the Constitution. The Constitution absolutely fixes two things: (1) the certificates shall be opened; (2) the votes shall then be counted, and all in the presence of the two Houses.

There can be no counting or agreement to count or not count the vote in second to second.

vote in separate session.

In the adoption of this resolution the text and spirit of the Constitution is to be ignored, the truth of history is to be denied, all good and safe precedents are to be disregarded, and a single doubtful, dangerous, and repudlated precedent which grew out of a wholly unanticipated state of affairs incident to a civil war is to be invoked as a justification of the act.

If the Constitution does charge Congress with the duty of counting the electoral vote, it will exist without the aid of a joint rule; and if it does not exist under that instrument, then Congress cannot and if it does not exist under that instrument, then Congress cannot by joint rule impose that duty on itself.

That it could not have been contemplated that Congress should have the right, by vote, to disfranchise a State in the choice of a President, is plain enough from the whole structure of the Constitution and the division of powers.

The duties of Congress are legislative, and it cannot change itself into a returning board any more than it can resolve itself into a court with jurisdiction to try causes.

What is required to be done is "in the presence of the Senate and House of Representatives," and not by these bodies acting jointly or separately.

A final count of the vote and announcement of the result is very A final count of the vote and announcement of the result is very commonly made in the presence of both houses of a State Legislature, as required by statute or organic law. In Ohio this is done by constitutional requirement, by "the president of the senate in the presence of a majority of the members of each house." No person in that State has yet been crazy enough to start a question of the right of the General Assembly of the State to count the vote or, what is worse, to throw out by its own fiat such votes as it pleased. It is quite convenient and proper for a formal count of votes cast in the election of high officers to be made and the result announced in the presence of a State or national legislature. In the effort to find some justification for the proposed rule some members resort to the clause of the Cona State or national legislature. In the effort to find some justification for the proposed rule some members resort to the clause of the Constitution which says "each House may determine the rules of its proceedings." (Section 5, article 2.) Just what ray of light is thrown on this question by that clause some of us cannot see. Not even the right to make joint rules is given by it, much less a warrant to Congress to impose duties upon and withhold others from the Vice-President of the United States and to confer extraordinary powers on itself. The "proceedings," when the Houses have met in joint session, are not those of either body, but rather of the President of the Senate in the presence of both bodies.

The supreme danger from such a rule can, however, only be seen when we look to the fact that no concurrent action of the Houses is required to reject the votes of a State. When objection is made the certificate is not even prima facie authority for counting the vote cercertificate is not even prima facie authority for counting the vote certified if there is another paper which purports to be a certificate from the same State. The Constitution charges States with the duty of appointing electors in such manner as their respective Legislatures may direct, thus making their appointment a State matter exclusively. It also defines their eligibility. It is binding on States and their Legislatures as much as upon Congress, and we are not in this or any other matter to assume, as does the proposed rule, that they will not obey it as faithfully as Congress. What authority is there in that great charter for making that body the judge of how others upon whom a constitutional duty devolves discharge it? It may be enough for us to be the keepers of our own conscience. are seeking for grounds of apprehension we can soon satiate ourselves. We can find many ways by which the electoral vote of a State may be prevented from being counted. This would result from a failure of electors to meet after they were chesen, or after meeting, if they refused or neglected to vote, or make a certificate of the vote, or to return it if made, &c.; or if the President of the Senate should suppress the certificate, &c.

This resolution, based as it is on the idea that members of Congress can do no wrong, is not broad enough to cover all possible cases of failure of officers to discharge their duty. Bribery, as has been attempted, of a single elector might alter the result of a presidential

I do not say that the President of the Senate would not be bound I do not say that the President of the Senate would not be bound by a law which gave him fixed rules by which to ascertain the genuineness of electoral certificates, and which otherwise directed him in the execution of his duty, but such a law is scarcely necessary. The Constitution requires him to open the certificates, genuine certificates only, of the votes cast, and the counting of them follows as a matter of course. No judgment or suggestion of judgment or discretion is enjoined on this officer or other person or body in this regard, but the power only is given to declare the result of the prior action of the electors in the several States. electors in the several States.

Neither the President of the Senate nor other authority can constitutionally disfranchise, in whole or in part, a State by rejecting cer-tified electoral votes. There are persons who assume that if Congress has not the right to count or reject the electoral votes, that right is left with the President of the Senate. It is a grave error to suppose such right rests anywhere. There are few, if any, boards that are authorized to count and make returns of votes east at any ordinary

The count of the electoral vote everybody has the right to make when the certificates are open, but it must be made once before the joint convention. No formal declaration of the result need be made; the Constitution does not require it. If a majority of the votes are for one man his election follows; if no person has such majority then the House must immediately proceed to elect a President as the Constitution directs, and the Senate in like case a Vice-President. There may be a necessity for some authority to judge finally of the true result in all cases of dispute. This necessity will exist as much in case the Congress counts the vote and in cases where the House and Senate elect the President and Vice-President, where no election has taken place by the electors, as if the President of the Senate counted it.

With appropriate legislation the question might possibly be settled in the Supreme Court of the United States by proceedings in quo warranto or by some other form of contest. To its final judgment all patriotic people would bow in submission. We are forced by the very nature of our Government, free as it is, to have to submit at last to some final arbiter, and often suffer injustice if it is meted out to us; otherwise the pillars of our political structure would go down in the first storm. The judgment of a high court would be more freely acquiesced in than the action of a partisan Congress.

Let us abandon this attempt to exercise powers not granted in the Constitution; let us cling firmly, persistently, and to the end to all our constitutionally granted powers; let us guarantee to all authorities or officers in the Union their properly granted powers, and no more; let us encourage them to faithfully discharge all their duties; let us cease to set bad precedents to others in the matter of usurping powers belonging elsewhere; lastly, if we have been so unfortunate powers belonging elsewhere; lastly, if we have been so unfortunate as to find a weak place in the great charter of our national existence, let us gather around it and devote ourselves to curing its weakness; stand close about it and guard it from attack, strain, or break, so that our Republic, which has already, in, as we hope, the youth of its existence, been compelled to withstand the shock of a political earthquake from which it barely escaped being rent in twain, may never again be rocked in the cradle of civil strife.

Greater devotion to purifying the political morals and to the education, civilization, and Christianization of our people, and less to expedients under the pretense of providing against apprehended wrong, will be more fruitful of happy results. If we find our organic law is defective, let us amend it agreeably to its own provisions. Such a policy will avert any possible danger and transform all our fears to a poincy will avert any possible danger and transform an our lears to hope and confidence.

This country should now only be in the blossoming period of its growth and greatness. The possibilities of the future we do not yet hope to compass, but we may do our duty by strengthening all weak places as they appear, and by not attempting legislation based on an assumption that fraud and wrong will exist generally throughout all the departments of our dual Government.

Time would be well spent here if we devoted ourselves to legislation that would condemn electoral frauds in every part of the Union, and set the seal of infamy upon all persons, whether in high or low places, who practiced, excused, or countenanced them, or accepted the fruits of them.

Political morality ingrained into our national existence will create strength as nothing else creates it. Without an improvement in this respect and an abandonment of expedients by which one or another party hopes to gain, against the expressed will of the people, some advantage over all others, the time may not be far distant when this American Republic, teeming as it already does with above fifty millions of the happiest and freest people of the earth, may be found ready for final judgment. This particular epoch in our history is an auspicious one to adjust persons and parties on a true and patriotic basis; and if it should be found that any party ship has sailed so far out of a true course as to be incapable of being brought back, it should be scuttled, abandoned, and consigned to a deep-sea burial. This Government will roll on in safety upon the old lines if those who control its destiny are content to steer it by the landmarks of the Constitution planted by the patriotic fathers who set it in motion. Mr. EATON presented the memorial of the States of New York and Connecticut, in relation to the boundary-line between those States; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. COCKRELL presented additional evidence and papers to accompany the bill (S. No. 668) for the relief of James J. Faught, late of Company D, Eighth Missouri Cavalry; which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented additional evidence touching the bill (S. No. 1795) for the relief of G. M. Woodruff; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. GROOME. At a former session of the Senate I presented a resolution of the Legislature of Maryland in regard to the improvement of the Chester River, which was laid on the table. I move now that it be taken from the table and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. GROOME. I also presented certain resolutions of the General Assembly of Maryland requesting the Senators and Representatives in Congress from that State to procure an appropriation for the location and preparation of the Choptank and Delaware Ship-Canal Line, and for the survey and location of the Chesapeake Bay and Potomac River Tide-water Canal Line, which were laid upon the table. I now move that they be taken from the table and referred to the Committee on Transportation Routes to the Seaboard.

The motion was agreed to.

PRESIDENTIAL ELECTORS.

Mr. MORGAN asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a joint resolution (S. R. No. 131) proposing amendments to the Constitution relating to the election of President and Vice-President of the United States; which was read the first time by its title.

Mr. MORGAN. I ask that the joint resolution be read at length. The joint resolution was read the second time at length, and referred to the select committee to take into consideration the state of the law respecting the ascertaining and declaration of the result of the elections of President and Vice-President of the United States, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, (two-thirds of both Houses concurring.) That the following be proposed as an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, to be added as section 2 to the twelfth article of the amendments to the Constitution, which, when ratified by three-fourths of the Legislatures of the several States, shall be valid to all intents and purposes as part of the said Constitution, to wit:

SEC. 2. The Congress shall have power by legislation to establish rules and regulations for certifying, transmitting, receiving, and opening the votes of the electors; and for ascertaining and counting such votes by the Senate and the House of Representatives; and for declaring the result of the election; and for the government of the Senate and House of Representatives when they are met to count the votes of such electors. Such laws shall not be enacted or altered, amended or repealed, within the period of one year next before the time fixed by laws of the United States for the appointment of electors in any State.

PRESIDENT'S ANNUAL MESSAGE.

PRESIDENT'S ANNUAL MESSAGE.

Mr. WHYTE submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That 3,000 additional copies of the President's message, without the accompanying documents, be printed for the use of the Senate.

That at the conclusion of the morning business for each day, unless upon motion the Senate shall at any time otherwise order, the Senate will proceed to the consideration of the Calendar, and continue such consideration until half past one o'clock; and bills that are not objected to shall be taken up in their order, and each Senator shall be entitled to speak once and for five minutes only upon any question; and the objection may be interposed at any stage of the proceedings; and this order shall commence immediately after the call for "concurrent and other resolutions," and shall take precedence of the unfinished business and other special orders.

the resolution whether it is in the same form as that under which we acted at the last session?

Mr. ANTHONY. It is substantially the same. There is a little verbal amendment. A question arose as to whether the clause "unless the Senate shall otherwise order" applied to limiting the debate to five minutes or to the whole order itself. The resolution is altered so as to make it conform to the practice of the Senate and apply that clause to the order itself. The order can be suspended on motion at any time.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. As the resolution goes over, it will be printed and we can see it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution goes over for the day.

S. ROSENFELD & CO.

Mr. WHYTE. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill for the relief of Rosenfeld & Co., of Baltimore, Maryland.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 1734) for the relief of S. Rosenfeld & Co. It provides for refunding to Simon Rosenfeld & Co., of Baltimore, Maryland, a sum of money equal to the value of the internal-revenue stamps purchased by them and affixed by them, in accordance with the provisions of the act of July 20, 1868, to a certain lot of cigars, tobacco, and snuff, held by them, and inventoried, according to law, on the 1st day of December, 1868, on condition that the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall be satisfied that Rosenfeld & Co. purchased the cigars tobacco and snuff as tax-roid articles. & Co. purchased the cigars, tobacco, and snuff as tax-paid articles prior to the passage of the act of July 20, 1868.

Mr. COCKRELL. Is there a report in that case?

Mr. COCKRELL. Is there a report in that case?
Mr. WHYTE. There is.
Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read.
The VICE-PRESIDENT. There is no report from the committee reporting the bill, the Chair is informed.
Mr. WHYTE. There is a unanimous report from the Committee on Finance of the Senate and the Committee of Ways and Means of the House of Proposerations.

the House of Representatives.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There is a House report among the papers, the Chair is advised.

Mr. WHYTE. There is a report submitted by the Senator from Delaware, [Mr. BAYARD,] and it is almost the same as the House report.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. CarLISLE, from the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives, April 23, 1880:

LISLE, from the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives, April 23, 1880:

The Committee on Ways and Means, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 290) for the relief of Simon Rosenfeld & Co., of Baltimore, Maryland, respectfully report as follows:

In the year 1868 Messrs. Simon Rosenfeld & Co., dealers in tobacco in the city of Baltimore, had in their possession a large tax-paid stock of tobacco, snuff, and cigars. The act of July 20, 1868, by providing for the use of internal-revenue stamps, introduced a radical change in the method of collecting tax upon tobacco. The change, however, related merely to the form and method of future collection, and did not, so far as tobacco was concerned, impose any new or additional tax. It was, however, provided by this act that "all smoking, fine-cut, chewing tobacco or snuff" should, after the 1st day of January, 1869. "be taken and deemed "as though it had been manufactured after the passage of the said act, and should not be thereafter offered for sale unless put up and stamped as required by the said act. This period was subsequently extended from January 1 to February 15, 1869.

The purpose and effect of these provisions was to give to dealers a limited period in which to dispose of their old stock, before the new method of evidencing payment of the tax by means of stamps went into full effect. The great majority of dealers no doubt succeeded in disposing of their stock, as contemplated by the act, and of course suffered no hardship. But there appear to have been a few cases in which parties were unable to dispose of all their stock within the period prescribed, and they were then compelled to purchase and affix stamps to the balance which they had been unable to sell. They were thus forced to pay a second tax upon the same tobacco.

Messrs. Rosenfeld and Co. were caught in this way with a considerable balance of stock already tax-paid, which remained on their hands on the 15th of February, 1869; and for which they have since been compelled to pu

This representation is verified by several affidavits, the trath of which there is no reason to doubt.

The stamps for which Rosenfeld & Co. ask reimbursement have been purchased at various times since 1869, and a portion of the old stock in question is represented to be still on hand, stamped, but unsold. The claim, therefore, while it relates back to 1e68, is not an old one. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue states, in substance, his belief that cases of this character were exceptional, and that "it is not probable that any considerable number of claims would be presented for a refund in the event Congress saw fit to pass an act directing a refund to the petitioners." Messrs. Rosenfeld & Co. are indorsed by the collector of internal revenue as long-established business men in the city of Baltimore, standing well in the community and with the revenue office.

The question presented in this case has already been considered by both Houses of Congress in the cases of Hibben & Co., and Berthold Lowenthal, of Chicago, and J. E. Robertson & Co., of Indiana, for whose relief special acts were passed. In the case of Hibben & Co. the Committee on Finance of the Senata, in reporting the bill, used the following language:

"Your committee are of the opinion that in a case where manufactured tobacco and snuff, on which all prior taxes and assessments had been paid, have remained in the possession of the dealer without his own fault or negligence after it became unlawful, without paying an additional tax thereon, to dispose of such tobacco or sunff, it is equitable and just to refund the additional tax so paid, and they therefore recommend the passage of the accompanying bill."

The same committee in the case of Lowenthal say:

"The Senate has already decided in the case of Hibben & Co., of Chicago, similar in all respects to the present one, in favor of the justice of such claims.

"The committee see nothing in the present case to take it out of the rule thus established.

"The House has already decided in the see to s established.

"They therefore recommend the passage of the bill."

This House has already concurred in these views, and there would seem to be no reason to deny to the present petitioners the same equitable relief extended to others under like circumstances. Your committee therefore recommend the pasage of the accompanying bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is not the report of a Senate committee. That is a report made in the House. I should like to hear the report of the Senate committee.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The paper read seems to be the only

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The paper read seems to be the only report on the files.

Mr. WHYTE. The chairman of the Finance Committee [Mr. BAYARD] made a report similar in its character, and I thought it was that report which I sent to the table; but it turns out to be the report of Mr. Carlisle, of Kentucky, made in the House. But the facts are as stated in that report, and the committee were unanimous in favor of the passage of the bill. The superintendent of the document-room is ill to-day, and there seems to be some delay in getting the documents out of the office there; but the facts stated in the report just read are identical with the facts as stated in the other report.

Mr. GARLAND. I ask the Senator from Maryland what use there is in the proviso to the bill? As I understand from him, the committees of the two Houses recommend that these parties be relieved. If that is the unanimous conviction of the two committees, why send the matter back to the Secretary of the Treasury or the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to pass upon one of the real facts in the case? My understanding is that these acts for relief are generally passed by Congress itself. The proviso remits one of the material facts to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

Mr. WHYTE. I will explain to the Senator—

Mr. GARLAND. My inclination would be to move to strike out the proviso in the bill and give the parties the relief to which it seems they are entitled seems they are entitled.

Mr. WHYTE. The Senator from Arkansas will see by looking at the bill that no amount of money is appropriated in the bill. The amount is, of course, to be left to the ascertainment of the Commis-sioner of Internal Revenue, and he is to require actual proof that the sioner of Internal Revenue, and he is to require actual proof that the articles claimed for were those articles, in the language of the Senate committee's amendment to the bill, "upon which the tax was actually paid prior to the passage of said act of July 20, 1868, and actually affixed additional stamps thereon at their own cost and expense." The object is to limit it exactly to the doubly-tax-paid cigars, tobacco, &c. The tax having been already paid, the Senate Committee on Finance desire to limit these gentlemen to a claim that is beyond all peradventure a just and righteous one, inasmuch as they have paid two taxes upon the same article.

Mr. GARLAND. The Senator states a fact which is to be referred to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. If the fact be as stated, why cannot the bill assert it explicitly, and let the subject be done why cannot the bill assert it explicitly, and let the subject be done with on the passage of the bill? The Commissioner of Internal Revenue may never find this fact, and the parties may never get relief. I do not object to the bill, because if it suits the Senator it suits me, but the point I make is that the bill should be complete and effective on its passage. Really the men may never get relief after all the attention Congress has given to the case.

Mr. WHYTE. There is no difficulty about that, because the Commissioner of Internal Revenue has recommended the passage of this bill, and is anxious to do justice to the parties. There is no danger about that. The parties will be perfectly content to take the bill as the Senate Committee on Finance have reported it.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to hear the letter of the Commis-

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to hear the letter of the Commissioner read on that point, as the Senate committee made no report that we can find. The letter ought to be with the papers in the case.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair is informed that there is no letter of the Commissioner on file among the papers.

Mr. COCKRELL. It cannot be read, then.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I think we ought at least to have the letter of the Commissioner in regard to this matter read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There is no letter from the Commissioner on the files of the Senate.

on the files of the Senate.

Mr. McMILLAN. The only reason, as I understand, urged here is that these parties did not within the time limited by the act of 1868 sell this tobacco.

sell this tobacco.

Mr. WHYTE. After making great effort to do so.

Mr. McMILLAN. The effort they made does not appear here, or whether they made any, so far as I have discovered, and the amount to be refunded is not indicated with any certainty in the bill. No amount is specified, but it is left to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to determine what the amount shall be. I think there is too much uncertainty about the bill for it to be passed in this way. The Senate should be furnished with some evidence in regard to the amount of the tax, and whether it ought to be paid.

Mr. WHYTE. The report that was read which was made in the House showed what the amount was.

Mr. McMILLAN. I do not so understand. The proviso in the bill authorizes the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to ascertain and authorizes the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to ascertain and determine the amount.

Mr. WHYTE. But it must be less than $6,000, which was the precise amounts, I will state to the Senate the facts which induced the Committee on Finance to report the measure, with the amendments, which are expressly intended to restrict the amount the party may recover. It is simply an attempt to remedy the injustice of double taxation. Under the law prior to 1868, certain taxes were affixed by means of stamps upon manufactured tobacco. Being affixed they could not be removed. The law of 1868 came in affixing other and different duties upon tobacco, requiring all tobacco sold after the passage of that act to have those new stamps affixed, so that the same tobacco would have the old and the new both affixed. It was not the intention of the Government to tax the property doubly; and where in good faith the citizen had performed his duty and paid the taxes then levied, they did not intend he should pay a double tax, but that by complying with the law at each stage of its existence he should be exonerated from any further demand. It was nothing but a case of equity recommending itself to every member of the commitprecise amounts, I will state to the Senate the facts which induced a case of equity recommending itself to every member of the commit-tee, as I am sure it will to every member of the Senate.

In this case, however, the man could not sell his tobacco in time to avail himself of the general act then passed. The House of Representatives propose to exonerate him upon his own statement from the whole amount of the tax, but we thought it safer only to exonerate him from such an amount as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, who carefully guards the interests of the Government, should be satisfied would be a double tax, which was not intended to be exacted. That is all there is in this bill. The limitation upon the amount may not appear in the letter of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, but it will be under his control; and the bill simply prevents a man from being mulcted in a double tax on the same article. If he paid the tax affixed by law at the time the article passed into consumption, that we consider is his legal and full duty; and we should not, because we changed the law, have a double tax put upon the com-

Such were the reasons which affected the action of the Committee on Finance and induced us, I believe unanimously, to report the bill.

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. President, if the explanation of the Senator from Delaware is correct, that this is to relieve from a double payment of tax, then I see the equity of the bill; but from the terms of the bill I would not infer that it was to relieve from the double payment of tax, but rather that it was merely to relieve from the payment of an additional tax upon this tobacco.

As I understand the facts of the case, these persons were owners of tobacco which, prior to the act of 1868, was subject to a certain amount of internal-revenue tax which had been paid After the act of 1868 went into operation, by the terms of that law all tobacco which remained unsold during the period specified in that law was subject to an additional tax, and that additional tax was levied upon this tobacco owned by these parties and paid by them, and this bill is to refund the additional tax paid by these parties. If I am in error in that, then I shall stand corrected.

Mr. BAYARD. I have a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury which I will have read and I think it will satisfy the honorable Senator of the correctness of the bill. The Chief Clerk read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, May 25, 1880.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, May 25, 1880.

SIR: In response to the request of your committee addressed to the Commissioner of Internal-Revenue on the 20th instant, I have the honor to inclose herewith letters of the Acting Commissioner and Commissioner of Internal Revenue, giving the views of that office bearing upon the merits of Senate bill 1734, entitled "A bill for the relief of S. Rosenfeld & Co."

It appears that under the provisions of the act of July 20, 1868, which directed a new method of paying internal-revenue tax on cigars, tobacco, and snuff, certain of these articles held by Simon Rosenfeld & Co. are alleged to have paid duplicate taxes, the refunding of which is the subject of the bill.

The proviso to the bill seems to meet the objection urged by Commissioner Ram as to the necessary proof of the duplicate payment of the tax in question, by leaving the sufficiency of the evidence to be decided by himself after the bill shall have become a law. This proviso, and the opinion of the Commissioner that very few claims of this character will probably arise in the future, would appear to remove all legitimate objection to the granting of the relief proposed in the bill as presented.

Very respectfully,

Very respectfully,

JOHN SHERMAN, Secretary.

HON. THOMAS F. BAYARD, Chairman Committee on Finance, United States Senate.

Mr. McMILLAN. The last clause of the proviso authorizes the Commissioner to determine the amount of additional stamps actually affixed at the cost and expense of these parties. That would not seem to apply to duplicate stamps, but to additional ones.

Mr. WHYTE. That means the additional tax represented by the stamp, which is the double tax. They had already paid the amount of the tax, and this is an additional, meaning a double tax. That is all it means all it means. Mr. McMILLAN. If it is a duplicate tax, I have no objection.

Mr. WHYTE. That is what it means, and the report so shows.

Provided, The Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall be satisfied that said Rosenfeld & Co. purchased the said cigars, tobacco, and snuff as tax-paid articles upon which the tax was actually paid prior to the passage of said act of July 20, 1888, and actually affixed additional stamps thereon at their own cost and expense.

The amendment was agreed to.
The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. George M. Adams, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. No. 1583) to change the name of the schooner-yacht Nettie to Nokomis.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 3191) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to dispess of a part of the Fort Dodge military reservation to actual settlers under the provisions of the homestead

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the concurrent resolution of the Senate authorizing the Joint Committee on the Yorktown Centennial Celebration to sit during the recess of

"D. W. MAHON, Auditor,

"HENRY P. ROLFE, Esq., Concord, N. H."

The memorialist alleges that after his term of service as such United States attorney expired, to wit, from the 1st of April, 1874, until the 23d day of July, 1874, he acted as United States attorney for said district; that during the time he so acted as such district attorney he performed important and valuable services for the Government in procuring the extradition of one William Johnson from Nova Scotia to the district of New Hampshire upon the order of the State Department and the warrant and requisition of the President of the United States; that at the May term of the United States court for said district said Johnson was tried and convicted of passing counterfeit United States. Treasury notes and sentenced to the State prison for the term of three years, and that he is now serving out his sentence.

That immediately upon the adjournment of said term of court the memorialist addressed a note to the Secretary of the Treasury, inquiring for the source to which he should look for his pay for the services rendered, and where he should present his claim for services and expenditures in procuring the said Johnson, and that he received no reply in reasonable time; and that on the 13th day of June he addressed a similar note to the Secretary of State, and the following is a copy of the answer received from said officer:

"DEPARTMENT OF STATE, "Washington, June 19, 1874.

"Sin: Your letter of the 13th instant, in relation to your compensation for services rendered in procuring the extradition of William Johnson, indicted for passing counterfeit United States Treasury notes, has been received and referred to the Attorney-General for proper action thereon.

"I am, sir, your obedient servant,

"HAMILTON FISH.

"HENRY P. ROLFE, Esq., "United States Attorney, Concord, N. H."

That the claimant heard nothing further from the Departments in relation to the matter until the 26th day of Docember following, when the claimant addressed a letter to the Attorney-General, making inquiries about his compensation for said services, and received the following answer:

"Sir: I have received your letter of the 23d instant, relative to your account for services rendered and expenses paid in the extradition of William Johnson from Nova Scotla to New Hampshire, upon the order of the State Department and warrant and requisition of the President.

"Your letter of the 25th filtime, to which you refer, was referred to the State Department, and I have been verbally informed by one of the officers of that Department that the account would be paid at an early day.

"I will, however, transmit a copy of your letter to the Secretary of State.

"Very respectfully,

"GEO. H. WILLIAMS, "Attorney-General.

"H. P. ROLFE, Esq., "Concord, N. H."

In February, 1875, the memorialist came to Washington and had repeated interviews with the Attorney-General, and was then informed by him that his account would be paid by the State and Treasury Departments and the Department of Justice, and gave the claimant assurances that the claim should be attended to immediately after the adjournment of Congress.

That another long delay occurred, and then the memorialist again addressed the Attorney-General, reminding him of his promise, and in reply received a letter from the Attorney-General, of which the following is a copy:

"DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE, "Washington, May 6, 1875.

"Sir: I have received your letter in relation to your account for services and expenses in the matter of the extradition of William Johnson from Nova Scotia.

"There is no appropriation under the control of this Department from which your account can be paid, and, upon inquiry at the Treasury Department, I am informed that they have no appropriation applicable to such expenses; and upon referring the matter to the Secretary of State, he informed me that, after examination, the only item in the account properly chargeable to the appropriation under his control is the last, for $140, which will be paid on rendition by you of an account therefor.

"I regret my inability to have this account allowed, as I believe it to be justly due, but, under the circumstances, I am unable to do so. The only thing that remains is to have the claim presented to Congress at its next session, when I have no doubt, after all the facts in the case are laid before the Committee on Appropriations, a bill will be reported to pay the claim.

"Very respectfully,

"GEO. H. WILLIAMS,

"GEO. H. WILLIAMS, "Attorney-General.

"HENRY P. ROLFE, Esq., "Concord, N. H."

The memorialist further shows that the $140 has been paid to him by the Government, and was paid in December, 1875.

The memorialist files an itemized account, approved by the district and circuit judges of the district of New Hampshire, recommending the payment of such account. It does not appear that the question of appointment of Mr. Rolfe as United States attorney was presented to the court, but Mr. Rolfe was allowed by the court to represent the United States in said court in important matters without objection. On one of the bills is found the following indorsement:

"Examined and approved.

"JULY 16, 1874. "DAN'L CLARK,
"United States Judge."

"United States Circuit Court, January 20, 1877.

"The service charged in the foregoing bill of H. P. Rolfe, late United States attorney for New Hampshire district, was rendered by him to the United States. I should have unhesitatingly appointed him acting attorney of the United States if the fact of the expiration of his term of office had been brought to my notice. He continued to act until the appointment of his successor. His services were faithful and diligent, and I hope Congress will grant him the small compensation charged. "G. F. SHEPLEY, "United States Circuit Judge, First Judicial Circuit."

"United States Circuit Judge, First Judicial Circuit."

The following letter is found with the papers on file:

"Manchester, N. H., January 11, 1877.

"Dear Sir: I very well remember the matter of your account for services from April to July 23, 1874, as district attorney for New Hampshire. I think you should be paid for them, and I trust the Committee on Claims, or some other committee, will recommend an appropriation for that purpose.

"Very truly, yours,"

"DANIEL CLARK,
"United States Judge.

"H. P. ROLFE, Esq."

"H. P. Rolfe, Esq."

One thousand and seventy-two dollars and forty cents of the memorialist's claim was for money paid out and expended in the capture and return of the said Johnson. Of this amount the memorialist has been allowed $410, which leaves a belance on the cash expenditure of $332.40 paid out in the early part of the year 1874. On this sum Mr. Rolfe thinks he ought to have interest. Your committee cannot but admit that it is a great hardship on Mr. Rolfe to wait upward of six years, and then receive the money paid out; but your committee consider the rule that the United States will not pay interest on claims of this character too well sertled to be changed by it, therefore disallow the account for interest. The amount due memorialist, without interest, is $2,519.97.

There is no question as to the fact of service, and the amount rendered appears to be very reasonable, never having been questioned by the Department of Justice, and having the approval of the judges whose duty it was to pass on the account. We think the fact that the court did not, in a formal way, appoint Mr. Rolfe, ought not to prevent the payment of his claim. While the accounting officer was fully justified in not allowing it under the circumstances, yet no reason exists why Congress should not make an appropriation to pay the account. Your committee therefore report the accompanying bill and recommend its passage.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed. FORT LARNED RESERVATION.

Mr. PLUMB. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of

Senate bill No. 193.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 193) to provide for the disposition of the Fort Larned military reservation. It authorizes the Secretary of War to relinquish and turn over to the Department of the Interior, for restoration to the public domain, the Fort Larned military reservation in the State of Kansas. The Commissioner of the General Land Office is directed to have the lands, when transferred, surveyed in like manner as other public lands, and to cause them to be surveyed in like manner as other public lands, and to cause them to be appraised by three disinterested competent persons, and after the appraisement shall have been approved the land shall be sold to actual settlers only, at the appraised price, and as nearly as may be in conformity to the provisions of the pre-emption laws of the United States. No person is to be permitted to purchase more than one half quarter-section, and the Commissioner may, in his discretion, cause the section of the reservation on which improvements are situated to be appraised in a body together with the improvements, and may then sell the same at public or private sale, as he may deem to the best advantage of the Government, except that it shall not be sold at less than the appraised price.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, after the word "approved," in line 6 of section 2, to insert "by the Secretary of the Interior."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the

MARY A. LORD.

Mr. VOORHEES. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. No. 742) for the relief of Mary A. Lord. The bill was read.

Mr. COCKRELL. Is there any report in that case? If so, let it be

The Chief Clerk read the report, submitted by Mr. WITHERS, March 2, 1880, from the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. That is an adverse report, and the case will therefore lead to some discussion. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

The Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After eighteen minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

FITZ-JOHN PORTER.

Mr. RANDOLPH submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. No. 1139) for the relief of Fitz-John Porter, late Major-General of the United States Volunteers and Colonel in the Army; which was ordered to be printed.

LAMPREY RIVER.

Mr. ROLLINS submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he hereby is, directed to transmit to the Senate all reports relating to the improvement of the Lamprey River below New Market, New Hampshire, made in pursuance of act of Congress approved June 23, 1874.

PRINTING OF THE CALENDAR.

Mr. GARLAND. My recollection is that by a rule adopted before we adjourned at the last session the Secretary was required to furnish a printed Calendar every day.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That was the rule.

Mr. GARLAND. I suppose it continues.

Mr. WHYTE. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.
The motion was agreed to; and (at one o'clock and twenty-six minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Wednesday, December 8, 1880.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. P. HARRISON, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

ADDITIONAL MEMBERS PRESENT.

Mr. Bouck, Mr. Jorgensen, and Mr. MITCHELL appeared in their seats to-day.

MEMBER-ELECT SWORN IN.

Mr. SHELLEY presented the credentials of Mr. Newton N. Clements, elected a Representative in the Forty-sixth Congress from the sixth congressional district of Alabama, to fill the unexpired term of Burwell B. Lewis, resigned, and asked, as the member-elect was now present, that he be sworn in.

The credentials were read from the Clerk's desk.

Mr. CLEMENTS presented himself at the Clerk's desk and was duly qualified by taking the oath prescribed by section 1757 of the Revised Statutes.

DISTRICT HEALTH REPORT.

Mr. HUNTON, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring.) That 2,500 extra copies of the report of the health officer of the District of Columbia be printed for the use of said health officer.

FORT DODGE MILITARY RESERVATION.

Mr. RYAN, of Kansas. I move by unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table a bill (H. R. No. 3191) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to dispose of a part of the Fort Dodge military reservation to actual settlers under the provisions of the homestead laws, returned from the Senate with amendments, for the purpose of moving concurrence in said amendments.

There was no objection, and the amendments of the Senate were read, as follows:

read, as 10110Ws:

At the end of the bill insert the following:
"Provided, That the said Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fé Railroad Company shall have the right to purchase such portion of said reservation as it may need for its use, adjoining that now owned by it, not exceeding one hundred and sixty acres, by paying therefor the price at which the same may be appraised under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior."

Amend the title by adding after the word "laws" the words "and for other purposes."

The amendments of the Senate were concurred in.

Mr. RYAN, of Kansas, moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendments of the Senate were concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MORNING HOUR FOR REPORTS FROM COMMITTEES.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. What is the regular order, Mr. Speaker? The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks there should be a morning hour for reports from committees.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I believe the committees are not prepared to make any reports at this time, and therefore I move to dis-pared to make any reports at this time, and therefore I move to dispense with the morning hour.

I will say, Mr. Speaker, that it was my intention to have called up the refunding bill for immediate action, and I give notice that I shall call it up immediately after the pending proposition is disposed of, when gentlemen on the other side have finished the debate which was begun yesterday. With a view to a speedy termination of that matter, in order to get to work on the funding bill, I shall now move to dispense with the morning hour so that we can go immediately to work.

The SPEAKER. That requires a two-thirds vote. The Chair waives the point as to whether the question of privilege comes up before the House in preference to the morning hour.

Mr. CONGER. Will the gentleman from New York be kind enough to repeat the statement which he made in regard to the business in which the House was engaged?

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. If I understand the question of the gentleman from Michigan it is that I repeat what I have already stated with reference to the business of the House.

Mr. CONGER. That was my request.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I propose, Mr. Speaker, to do what I can by my voice and vote to keep this House steadily to its work, and to exclude from our deliberations everything of a partisan or needess character. Inasmuch, therefore, as the committees are not useless character. Inasmuch, therefore, as the committees are not prepared to make any reports in the morning hour, I propose that we shall go on immediately with the bill under consideration on yesterday, which the gentleman from Michigan seemed very desirous of discussing.

Mr. CONGER. I understood the gentleman from New York to say that he desired to get up the funding bill.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. It is my intention to call up the funding bill immediately after the present matter is disposed of.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I did not hear the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CONGER. I say the gentleman from New York proposes to get up the funding bill at some time during this session, I presume.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I propose to call it up immediately after the gentleman from Michigan and his friends on the other side have exhausted the opportunity for discussing the electoral bill.

Mr. CONGER. Why should the gentleman allow a matter of such public importance to be laid aside for a mere political discussion?

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. Well, I am not obliged to answer that question. I therefore move to dispense with the morning hour.

The SPEAKER. That is equivalent to a demand for the regular order.

Mr. FINLEY. I wish to ask a parliamentary question. If the matter under discussion yesterday be a privileged question, does it not come over, and can we have a morning hour?

The SPEAKER. This motion renders unnecessary any decision of that point. The morning hour begins at seventeen minutes past twelve o'clock.

J. D. MORRISON.

Mr. DUNNELL, from the Committee on Ways and Means, reported, with a favorable recommendation, a bill (H. R. No. 6516) for the relief of J. D. Morrison, surviving partner of C. M. & J. D. Morrison, of Rockbridge County, Virginia; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

WARREN MITCHELL.

Mr. BRIGHT from the Committee on Claims, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 625) for the relief of Warren Mitchell; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

The call of committees was continued and completed, no further reports being presented.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not see in his seat the gentleman who is entitled to the floor on the pending question, and as there are several gentlemen who desire to introduce matters to which there will be no objection, the Chair asks liberty to recognize them for that purpo

Mr. CONGER. There is no objection on our part.

PAYMENT TO THE MIAMI INDIANS OF INDIANA.

Mr. COWGILL, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 6517) to authorize the payment of the principal sum due the Miami Indians of Indiana, under the stipulation of the treaty of June 5, 1854, to appoint an agent therefor and provide for his compensation, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

J. L. BURCHARD.

Mr. BERRY, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 6518) for the relief of J. L. Burchard, late agent of Round Valley Indian reservation, California; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be

Mr. McCOOK, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 6519) to place Ulysses S. Grant, late General of the Army and ex-President of the United States, upon the retired list of the Army; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

JUDICIAL DISTRICTS-IOWA

Mr. CARPENTER introduced a bill (H. R. No. 6520) to divide the State of Iowa into two judicial districts; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

LIGHTING CAPITOL AND GROUNDS BY ELECTRIC LIGHT.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio, by unanimous consent, introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 339) relating to lighting the Capitol and grounds by electric light; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

HENRY F. MANN.

Mr. BAYNE, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 6521) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to compensate Henry F. Mann; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

ELEVATOR IN SOUTH WING OF CAPITOL.

Mr. HAWK. I ask manimous consent to submit the resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Architect of the Capitol be, and he is hereby, instructed to report to the House with as little delay as possible the reasons for failure to build the elevator for which appropriation was made at the late session of Congress.

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Buildings proceed at once under direction of the Architect to consider a location for an elevator in the south end of the Capitol building, and without unreasonable delay said Committee on Public Buildings be instructed to cause such elevator to be built.

JAMES MONROE HEISKELL.

Mr. TALBOTT. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table for present consideration the bill (S. No. 1191) for the relief of James Monroe Heiskell, of Baltimore City, Maryland.

The SPEAKER. This is a bill for the removal of political disabilities. The papers will be read and then the bill.

The memorial was read, as follows:

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives in Congress assembled:

The memorial of James Monroe Heiskell, of Baltimore City, Maryland, respectfully shows that he was engaged in the late war in the confederate army as a soldier while he was under the age of twenty-one years, and that he is anxious to be relieved of the bar imposed upon him by the terms of section 1218 of the Revised Statutes, in chapter 1, title 14, of the Revised Statutes; and as in duty bound will ever pray, &c. J. MONROE HEISKELL.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That James Monroe Heiskeil, of Baltimore City, Maryland, be, and he is hereby, relieved from the operation of section 1218 of the Revised Statutes, being in chapter 1, title 14, of said Revised Statutes.

Mr. CONGER. It seems to me the bill is not in the usual form and does not meet the requirements of the constitutional provision. The SPEAKER. There is another memorial accompanying the bill, the reading of which may perhaps furnish the necessary explanation. Mr. CONGER. The memorial which has been read is not exactly

Mr. CONGER. The memorial which has been read is not exactly in the proper form, but I take no exception to that. I suppose relief from the "bar" has some local meaning, and as the applicant closes with a prayer I am willing to let that pass. It was the bill to which I took exception as not being in the usual form.

The SPEAKER. It will be read again, and the gentleman from Michigan will then have an opportunity to offer an amendment.

The bill was again read.

Mr. CONGER. The usual form is, "for the removal of political disabilities incurred," &c.

Mr. TALBOTT. I am willing to accept the modification suggested by the gentleman from Michigan. After the words "operation of" let the words "political disabilities incurred by "be inserted.

The bill was taken from the Speaker's table and read a first and second time.

The amendment was agreed to.
The bill, as amended, was read the third time, and passed, two-thirds voting in favor thereof.

Some time subsequently,
Mr. CONGER said: Before the matter shall pass too long, I desire to say that the bill removing political disabilities, acted upon a short time since, was passed under an entire misapprehension of its object.
I was told privately that it was a mere political disability bill, but upon examination I find that it has another object entirely. I must

The SPEAKER. Yes, and the Chair admitted an amendment to Mr. CONGER. The bill as it passed may carry some other proposition.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. Talbott] who called up the bill is not now in his seat. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Michigan later.

Mr. CONGER. I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

The SPEAKER. It will be withheld for the present, the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. TALBOTT] not being in his seat.

DISTRIBUTION OF CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Mr. SPRINGER, by unanimous consent, introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 340) in reference to the distribution of the Congressional Record; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. SPRINGER. Let the resolution be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

pared in substance, but the Chair has not had time to have it written out in full. In this report the Speaker of the House and the Architect of the Capitol give their reasons why they have not executed the law referred to in the resolution.

Mr. HAWK. I think there can be no objection to letting the resolution go to the proper committee.

Mr. ATKINS. It should go to the committee under the rule.

The SPEAKER. The resolution is an admonition to the Speaker of the House and the Architect of the Capitol that the House would like to hear from them on the subject of the elevator. The report.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

REFUNDING THE NATIONAL DEBT.

Mr. BUCKNER, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 6522) to facilitate the refunding of the national debt; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

W. F. BODINER.

Mr. WARNER, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 6523) for the relief of W. F. Bodiner, late of Company F, Thirty-ninth Ohio Volunteer Infantry; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be AMENDMENT OF ACT.

COUNTING THE ELECTORAL VOTE.

Mr. BICKNELL. I now demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the consideration of the concurrent resolution of the Senate, in regard to the counting of the electoral vote. Under the practice of the House, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. White] is entitled to the floor, but he is not now

Michigan, [Mr. WILLITS.]
Mr. WILLITS. Congress is not a "returning board." Congress does not make the President. He is no more the creature of Congress than is the new-born heir of a dynasty, the child of the nobles and grand functionaries who certify to his birth and his royal lineage. The President comes from the people, through the States. The Constitution has purposely refrained from conferring any executive functions upon the Legislature of the country—it has likewise seen to it that the Executive shall be independent of the Legislature not only in the exercise of his functions, but in his creation. In fact, not only in the exercise of his functions, but in his creation. In fact, to make his creation dependent upon Congress would go far to overthrow his independence. The power to make holds the reins to control. The Constitution has in nothing else been more clear than in the effort to make an Executive who shall be a co-ordinate branch of the Government—not the creature of either. Congress cannot add a single vote to the electoral college. The Constitution is barren of the power in Congress to subtract one. The power to subtract is as potent as the power to add. Both are equally extra-constitutional and equally subversive of the wholesome plan our fathers devised for the election of a President.

Let us examine this plan in the light of the plain provisions of the Constitution. And first as to what it is clear Congress may do in the grand act that shall place at the head of a great nation one of the grand act that shall place at the head of a great nation one of its citizens. It may "determine the time of choosing the electors and the day on which they shall give their votes," and shall be present when the certificates are opened and the votes are counted. In other words, Congress may fix the day when the voters shall meet at the primaries to choose the electors, who, on a day also fixed by Congress, shall elect a President, and shall be present at the cere-monial that shall proclaim the election of a President and who he is an election already made by altogether another tribunal, and a man already designated by the sovereign people. If gentlemen in favor of this resolution can find any other clearly-defined functions in Congress to be exercised in the election of President under the Constitution they will have discovered what I am unable to do. We are not now hunting for implications, but for clearly-defined powers; we will give some attention to the alleged implications, perhaps, further on. These things only is it clear Congress may do in regard to the election and the proclamation of the election of a President.

Now, secondly, what is it apparent Congress, under this plan, can-not do. It is manifest it cannot elect the President by its own vote, as has been the procedure in some of the continental republics; and it is clear that neither branch of Congress can do so in the first in-stance, as has also obtained in other nations. There seems to have stance, as has also obtained in other nations. There seems to have been a studied purpose to divorce this power from Congress, and to place it not only beyond the reach of Congress, but so far as possible beyond its influence, and even beyond the influence of any department of the Government. It is "nominated in the bond" that "no Senator or Representative or person holding an office of trust or profit under the United States shall be appointed an elector." In the grand inquest of a nation for a citizen to execute its will and to wield its scepter, the Constitution expressly excludes from the electoral college the Senator, the Representative, and the pimp who may fawn in the presence of Congress and the patronage at its disposal. On this one day the citizen voter has the floor, has his say, and the official who seeks either is ruled out of order. As a citizen, the latter may vote for and advocate the election of an elector, but neither as a citizen nor as an official may he be an elector. There is neither as a citizen nor as an official may be be an elector. There is nothing clearer than that under the Constitution Congress was to have no voice whatever in the election of President, and that in the have no voice whatever in the election of President, and that in the ultimate the citizens of the several States were the power that evoked the representative, for the time being, of its sovereignty. There seemed no other way to preserve unimpaired the absolute independence of the general co-ordinate powers of the Government, to prevent the absorption of the executive by the legislative, and the usurpation by either of the functions of the other. The purpose is clear, and the plan for the election must be construed all the way through with this purpose in view. Congress was not to participate in the election of President.

But how was the citizen to voice his preference? Manifestly either

But how was the citizen to voice his preference? Manifestly either by a direct vote or through designated agents or through his State. The plan adopted was that of the agent with credentials from the State.

Each State shall appoint, in such manner as the Legislature thereof may direct, a number of electors equal to the whole number of Senators and Representatives to which the State may be entitled in Congress.

These electors, chosen either by the people directly or by the Legislature as their agents, go into the electoral college with the State certificate behind them rather than national and vote for President and Vice-President in their respective States and not at the national capital. They make distinct lists of all persons they vote for as President and Vice-President and of the number of votes for each, which lists they themselves sign and certify and transmit to the seat of the National Government. In this act they voice the sentiment of the citizens of their respective States and in no sense the dictation of Congress, which up to this point the plan has abhorred as the great be provided against.

In this act the electoral colleges are a separate and absolutely independent department of government, beyond the control of Congress or even of the States. They act under the Constitution, which prescribes their duties. And this act of the electoral colleges elects the President. What follows is mere form, and not substance. The records of the votes and the number for the respective candidates, duly signed and certified by this independent body, are at the "seat of government." It is simply a question of mathematics to learn the result ment." It is simply a question or mathematics to learn the result—the mere adding up, the counting of the numbers for the respective candidates. It does not change the result. That was fixed on the day Congress set for the giving of the electoral votes, and by the votes themselves, and "the person having the greatest number of these votes for President shall be the President." So says the Constitution.
Not the person Congress shall declare elected, but the person who has the greatest number of these votes cast by these electors in their respective States, and so certified and transmitted by them. Not even the greatest number of these votes cast by these electors in their respective States, and so certified and transmitted by them. Not even the person whom the President of the Senate, the custodian of the certificates of the votes, and who opens them, shall declare elected, but the person who has the greatest number of these votes. Any tyro in arithmetic can count them. The record is then in the august in arithmetic can count them. The record is then in the august presence of both Houses of Congress and in the view of the great nation. Every citizen can count them. The man who is elected can count them, and, having the greatest number of votes, shall be President. And the citizens of this Republic, recognizing his right to enter into his high station, will demand that he shall do so, and therenpon take up the truncheon of executive power.* It is well to have the form of a declaration of his right proclaimed in that vast audience of Congress assembled in joint convention. But this is not prescribed in the Constitution and the declaration confers no added scribed in the Constitution, and the declaration confers no added right—its absence detracts not one whit therefrom. He is not the person lit for the suffrages of this people who, having these "greatest number of votes," shall hesitate to assume the dignity to which he is called in any event.

Now, if this view of the plan is correct, it is manifest Congress has no power to change the number of votes so cast by the electoral colleges, nor to exclude any of them. This joint resolution assumes to do both, and therefore in my judgment has not the warrant of the Constitution. The specific clauses of said resolution obnoxious to this view of the Constitution are as follows:

this view of the Constitution are as follows:

If but one list of votes of electors from any State has been so submitted to each House for its decision, and it shall appear that the Houses have not concurred in rejecting said list, the same shall be received. But if both Houses shall have concurred in rejecting any vote contained in such list, such vote shall not be counted; otherwise all the votes therein shall be counted.

If more than one list of votes of electors from any State, or paper purporting to be such list, has been submitted to each House for its decision upon objections made thereto, and it shall appear that the Houses have not concurred in receiving either of said lists as the authentic and lawful list, they shall each be declared by the President of the Senate, in the presence of the Senate and House of Representatives, as being rejected; and no list of votes of electors so rejected shall be afterward read in the presence of the two Houses except for information.

It will be seen that if there is only one list of votes of electors from

It will be seen that if there is only one list of votes of electors from any State they shall be counted, unless both Houses concur in rejecting it; then it shall not be counted. The power is claimed to reject all or any of these votes in the exercise of the sweet irresponsible will of Congress, and the friends of this resolution plume themselves upon the fact that they require the concurrent act of both Houses to consummate the scheme to suppress the voice of the citizens of a State in its preference for a Chief Magistrate. This tremendous, unwarranted assumption is in no sense condoned because the actors in it ranted assumption is in no sense condoned because the actors in it have been numerically increased, because it takes both Houses, rather than one, to wipe out the vote of a State. The question is, whence comes the power in Congress to reject the vote of a State at all? It is no answer to say that Congress can be trusted to exercise this great power. In a republic no department can be trusted to exercise powers not within its jurisdiction. The evil is to be measured not by what it will do, but by what it can do, or what it assumes it can do. There is no generosity in the proposition that the usurpers of constitutional rights shall run in couples. Companionship in crime adds courage to the criminal, and what one House of Congress might hardly dare to do, both Houses might not hesitate to do in the plenitude of their reciprocal support.

Again, this rule assumes to throw out all the lists of votes from any State, if there purports to be more than one, unless both Houses conour in receiving either of them. This is but another form of the exercise of the same power; only it asserts the right of a single House of Congress to reject the vote of a State, and is to that extent more obnoxious than the others. Both assume the right of Congress to count or not to count the electoral vote of a State as in its own judgcount or not to count the electoral vote of a State as in its own judgment it sees fit. In my opinion the Constitution does not confer any such extraordinary power, and it is not competent for Congress by a resolution, nor even by a law, to assert, to take, or to exercise it; and I shall feel constrained to vote against any such theory, however much it may be fortified by precedent or have been advocated by the great intellects of either party in the exigences of political affairs. There is no such exigency now, and we ought to be able to approach the dispersion of the whitest party in the resolution of the procedent of the succession. cussion of the subject untrammeled and uncontrolled by precedent.

A few words relative to the reasons given for the exercise of this supervising power in Congress. They are all based upon implications. As I understand them they are claimed to exist in the nature of things.

First. That it would be a senseless proceeding to call Congress into joint convention to be present at the "count" if it had no right to do anything or say anything. I appreciate the anomalous condition of affairs when the average Congressman is placed where he is under the constraint not to do something or say something. But the Constitution says he shall be present at the count, and as it does not provide for any specific action on his part, we are to presume that our vide for any specific action on his part, we are to presume that our fathers thought no great harm could come from the suspension for a fathers thought no great harm could come from the suspension for a few hours, on the second Wednesday in February next, of this impulse. But as the votes are to "be counted" it would appear that something is to be done, and as it is not clear who is to do that something, the most natural thing in the world is that the Congress should assume that it alone has the power to do it—to imply the right itself to "count." I would not object to this implication so much, though I might protest against it mildly, if the implication covered the mere counting. As the actual result is as fixed as the multiplication table, there could no great harm come of its exercise. But when there is based upon this implication to "count" a whole system of jurisprudence, the power to go behind returns, the power to reject, the power dence, the power to go behind returns, the power to reject, the power to count in a man, or the power to count out a person who has the "greatest number of votes for President," so numbered and certified

"greatest number of votes for President," so numbered and certified by the electoral college, I submit that is a travesty on the English language, the largest claim on the smallest pretext I have ever known.

But, secondly, it is claimed that from the inherent difficulties of the case, in the nature of things, Congress must interfere. Suppose an organized political organization assumes to be a State while it is not a State, and transmits its electoral vote to the seat of government, just as Missouri and Michigan and Indiana once tried to do, what shall be done? The President of the Senate is authorized to open only the certificates from States. Manifestly he is warranted in only the certificates from States. Manifestly he is warranted in refusing to open the certificates from political organizations not recognized as States, and their votes will not "be counted." The fact that Congress has or assumes the power to create States confers no power on Congress to control the vote of the State after it is created. And the President of the Senate will take official notice of the States duly recognized as such.

There have arisen difficulties in the carrying out of the provisions of the Constitution for the counting of the electoral vote not anticipated by those who framed it, among them the difficulty arising from the transmitting of more than one alleged certificate of votes from a State. But the fact that this difficulty exists can confer no power upon Congress to exceed the scope of its powers as defined in the Constitution. There is no power to supervise the action of an elect-Its assertion may bring a calamity far in excess of the evil sought to be cured.

The fact that the Constitution has made no provision for such a difficulty is not conclusive that Congress has power to bridge it over. Congress cannot exceed the powers conferred upon it by the Constitu-Congress cannot exceed the powers conferred upon it by the Constitution; and if there is a lapse in the Constitution, if there is a failure in the Constitution to previde for this difficulty, it does not necessarily follow that Congress can cure it. We must trust to the good sense and the patriotism of the people under such a difficulty until the Constitution is amended. I believe firmly, under this view of the Constitution, that there is no power in Congress to annul, to exclude, or to change the vote of a single electoral college; and such being my view, I shall vote against this resolution.

Mr. BICKNELL. If anybody else desires to speak on this subject,
I will not make that demand.

Mr. KEIFER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. White] who desired to speak this morning has left his seat and I do not know just where he is at present. And the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. Robeson] also seems to be out of his seat at this time.

Mr. FINLEY. I suggest the propriety of the House taking a recess until gentlemen who want to speak on this resolution have come in.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. SPRINGER.) The question is on the demand for the previous question.

Mr. CONGER. There seems to me to be an unseemly haste in a matter which has been submitted to this House for discussion. Two gentlemen are prepared to speak on this question.

Mr. BICKNELL. If anybody wants to speak, I am willing to withdraw the demand for the previous question.

Mr. CONGER. The gentleman can try his demand if he wishes to. There is no law to prevent the gentleman from making the demand, even though another gentleman is ready to take the floor; but I think it would not be very judicious.

As it is presented to us under the pending resolution, it involves the whole question of the election of the supreme Executive of the country; whether that election shall be made by the electors appointed by the States, or whether it shall be practically left to the unrestrained will of an irresponsible legislative assembly.

Mr. WARNER. Or of the Vice-President.

Mr. ROBESON. Gentlemen assume too much, and I trust they will wait until I have had time to develop my propositions, for I assure my friend, the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. Warner,] that he will not be able even to guess at them until they are stated.

In the discussion of a constitutional question like this, let me say at the outset that no deliberative body in the consideration of such questions, and no man in assuming his own positions or making up his own mind thereon should consider himself in any way bound by any precedent the effect of which remains a disputed and doubtful question upon the record and in the history of the country. a precedent has been fully established either by undisputed authority or by long and unquestioned acquiescence, then it may perhaps be considered as settling the construction of constitutional law. But until it is so established and admitted without dispute it is valuable only as a record of the opinions of individual men, and carries with it only the weight and sanction of their judgment, their talent, their honesty, and their experience. Therefore I declare that I shall approach the examination of this question, in the cursory manner in which I mean to examine it this morning, without planting myself on precedent or relying second-hand upon the disputed authority and questioned onlyion of other men. questioned opinion of other men.

Mr. WARNER. That is much safer than to rely on precedent—safer for that side of the House.

Mr. ROBESON. I knew that my friend from Ohio would agree with me upon that point; for if there be a man on this floor who outruns all example and is free from all trammels of precedent, it is my friend who so ably represents a portion of that great State. [Laughter.]

Mr. WARNER. Many thanks.
Mr. ROBESON. It often happens, in the history of political and governmental questions before they have been brought to a test of final decision, that many precedents of action grow upon the records of the country, which have been passed sub silentio, either because there was no real practical question involved or no one was interested to oppose or dispute them. Of such precedents we should take no account in judicial investigation. In the history of every government, too, there come times of exigency and danger; times when the public mind is disturbed, when the public pulse has risen to fever heat, and when not only great communities but the individuals who represent them are excited and in careless haste to accomplish what represent them are excited and in careless haste to accomplish what they may think necessary for the present safety or success, without regard to the requirements of the principles on which alone they should act. Such precedents, if they exist in our country, should have no binding influence upon our decision of such important questions relating to the structure and strength of our Government, particularly at a time when, as now, we have neither personal interest nor political excitement to urge us beyond the calm dignity of judicial investigation and decision.

It would be well for our country if the whole history of the years.

It would be well for our country if the whole history of five years of its life could be swept from the records of its history, and I shall neither rest upon the circumstances of those times nor be bound by the precedents which then arose in the discussion of any constitutional question while I am a member of this House. Inter arma silent leges applies not only to the shock of battle, but to the conditions of governments and society which surround and take their color from the contest of which battle is the culminated crisis. It is a maxim of political necessity, not of political philosophy; and I shall never be found here advocating in cool blood any measure of necessity which I am not able to defend to my own satisfaction, at least, in our Government is admitted to be a government of limited powers, and to be clearly divided into co-ordinate branches. Upon each of these is conferred its appropriate duty, and to the duty of each is assigned its definite character and limit. This makes the real strength of our Government. It stands before the world the masterpiece of political construction, without counterpart in the history of governments. It finds no exact analogies in the proceedings and practices of other powers. It is primarily and clearly divided into legislative, judicial, and executive departments; each having its appropriate duty and each excluding the nower and resisting the invasion of the other.

judicial, and executive departments; each having its appropriate duty and each excluding the power and resisting the invasion of the other. We are pointed sometimes by weak or half-educated drivelers to the limited monarchies of Europe as more conservative and better calculated to preserve the rights not only of persons but of property. I unhesitatingly dispute the proposition.

I say to-day that the most conservative of limited monarchies that Europe knows is not half so stable nor half so safe a government for persons and for property as is that which our fathers gave us. Why? Because it is not a government of co-ordinate branches; because all the power of the English government rests ultimately in the House of Commons, unrestrained by written constitutions or organic laws; and because that house is powerful to override time-honored institutions and to govern for itself, according to its own will, the people and the destinies of the English nation. And when the time shall come that the safeguards of suffrage which now make the English House of Commons conservative shall be swept away by the irresistible tide of liberal progress the world will see established there a democracy as free as that of Athens, as fierce and unrestrained as France tide of liberal progress the world will see established there a democracy as free as that of Athens, as fierce and unrestrained as France has ever known. Therefore I say that the teachings of political philosophy and the history of the political life of nations admonish us to be careful that we never for a moment overstep the limitations of the Constitution of the United States. I am not here as a special advocate to any national governmental power which the Constitution does not give to the National Government; I never shall be such an advocate. I am here to maintain by my voice and by my vote every limitation which our Constitution places upon the power of the National Government and every preservative sanction which it gives to tional Government and every preservative sanction which it gives to the reserved rights of the States or of the people. But whatever of power there is given or reserved to the States or given to the nation is written in the Constitution of our country or is to be found in the implications which directly and necessarily flow from its provisions. All the power that either or all of them have is there; that is the source from which the river of their power flows or else runs dry. They have nothing of power given or inherent that is not declared or implied there, except the one power of self-preservation, which inheres to governments as it belongs to men. With that single exception, standing alone in the history of governments as it stands an anomaly in systems of law, everything that there is of power in any branch of the Government is to be found in the Constitution.

ment is to be found in the Constitution.

Now we are asked by this resolution to admit in effect and practically that the Congress of the United States assembled in joint convention, has the right to decide judicially upon the quality, character, and effect of the electoral votes; the right and power to cast which is by the Constitution given to the several States. This resolution calls upon Congress, while assembled in a convention convened for a single purpose, without legislative power, much more without judicial power, to declare that Congress has the right to decide judicially upon questions of the highest importance not only to the States that have cast the votes but of the highest importance to the Government and the people of the country; to decide judicially upon the constitution of a branch of the Government equal and co-ordinate with itself. Do I state that proposition too strongly? Is it not borne out by the letter and by the spirit of the resolution as it is presented here? It is certainly not necessary that I should enter into a detailed argument in opposition to this assumption.

The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. UPDEGRAFF] who stands before me, and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Keifer] who yesterday spoke upon this subject, and others of like opinion with myself, have absolutely exhausted that subject on our side. A most consolidated and strong presentation of all the objections which can be cited against the power of the House to count will be found on the Journals of this Congress, in the discussion of the subject which was made by my friend from Iowa at the last session. And while I am not authorized to adopt it fully as my own, I should feel I was unnecessarily wasting your time if I should go over the same ground. I will therefore only repeat my proposition, that Congress has no power to do anything except what the Constitution gives it the power to do; that it has no inherent, natural, or original authority; that all its power springs from the Constitution, and fails when it is sought to be drawn from any other source. The power given by the sought to be drawn from any other source. The power given by the Constitution to Congress is legislative power, is it not? The two Houses make the Legislature of the nation. The first article declares that "all legislative powers herein granted are vested in a Congress of the United States, which shall consist of a Senate and House of Representatives." Is there anything else there? Is there anything else to be derived from that clause? Is it not the full declaration of their power, and the limit of it also?

else to be derived from that clause? Is it not the full declaration of their power, and the limit of it also?

In a Constitution which goes on to declare that all executive power shall be vested in a President, and all judicial power shall be vested in the courts, do not these provisions, when you bring the three together and present them to the mind of a reasoning man, clearly declare and define the charter and the limit of our power?

Congress is a Legislature, organized to make law, and not a court organized to pronounce on the operations of laws already made. Is there anything else in its nature or its character? Has it any other authority? Yes; it has two or three other authorities, not inherent, however, but specially given. It has authority to determine the rules of its own proceedings. Each House has that authority by the Contitution. This is a special grant of power which gives the authority, but which in giving carries with the grant the limitation of the power. And Congress has another duty: it is required to be present when the

And Congress has another duty: it is required to be present when the electoral votes of the States are counted. This requirement, also, is at once a grant and a limitation. It is required to be present, not in its character as a Legislature—remember that; it is to be present in a joint convention, an attitude, situation, and character which deprives it of all legislative power, because all its legislative power is conferred and defined in the Constitution to be exercised in other relations and

In the first article it is declared that Congress shall have power to make all laws which shall be necessary and proper "for carrying into execution the foregoing powers," not those not included there, and "all other powers vested by this Constitution in the Government of the United States, or any department or officer thereof." They shall have power to "make laws." Why is that put there since they are already created a legislative power, except as the grant and also the limit and determination of their power? Is there any other power to make laws which belongs to them except what is found in the grants of the Constitution, and is there any other grant found in the grants of the Constitution, and is there any other grant found in the grants of the Constitution, and is there any other grant found in the Constitution of power to make laws except what I have cited? As a legislature, have we power growing out of our inherent constitution and character to do anything but make laws? Is there any power which grows out of our nature as a legislature to do anything beyond this? As a legislature we can only legislate; and in legislating we can only legislate on subjects declared to be within our power by the Constitution which created us. Can we step beyond its limitations? Is there any force or virtue in our acts beyond it, unless that force and virtue are given by some other special authority of the instrument itself. I shall not here deny that power may be found in the Legislature of the United States to put in operation all the functions of the Government and to provide for the manner in which the powers given to the Government or any department or of any officer may be carried to the Government or any department or of any officer may be carried out. Such a right, however, whenever it exists, belongs to Congress as the legislative body, and must be executed by legislative means and under the limitations and through the processes of legislative proceedings as declared and limited by the Constitution. Does not this proposition command the assent of every man who is willing to face this question calmly, judicially, and reasonably, and who desires that our Government shall rest forever upon the sure principles where our fethers placed it? fathers placed it ?

On the general principles, then, my first objection to the pending resolution is that Congress has no power to act judicially in receiving or rejecting the vote of any State. The Constitution of the United or rejecting the vote of any State. The Constitution of the United States provides in the first section of the second article that each State "shall appoint in such manner as the Legislature thereof shall direct" a number of electors whose qualifications are therein defined. I am willing to admit that Congress has the right by law to declare what is a State. "Each State shall appoint." The right to admit States, residing in Congress, carries with it the power to declare what is a State. Congress also, under its general authority to put into operation the functions of the Constitution, has the right to declare how the result of the vote of these electors, when appointed by the States, shall be certified and authenticated. I do not dispute that. But when you have provided for these two points have you not provided for everything that is left open in the Constitution, except perhaps one other thing, of which I shall speak hereafter?

"Each State shall appoint electors." They are appointed by the States not as a matter of reserved State rights—I do not contend that—but by the authority of the Constitution itself, which confers it upon them in the broadest terms and prescribes that it shall be done in whatever manner their representatives may determine. The apin whatever manner their representatives may determine. The appointment of those electors is given to the States themselves. Upon that point Congress has no power at all except to provide by law in a legislative manner what is a State, and after they have been appointed by the States and fulfilled their constitutional functions, Congress may provide by law how these electors and their action shall be aumay provide by law how these electors and their action shall be authenticated. But when they have done that the limit of their power is reached. The farthest stretch of authority on this subject which can be argued from the Constitution to belong to and be exercised by Congress itself, is entirely exhausted. There is but one question that can arise when that is done. You have the electors; they have been appointed by the States. You have their election and their action certified and authenticated under the constitutional provision by authority of the States themselves; and after that is done no other question can arise except the one question of dual State government. Everything else is provided for.

Who shall decide upon that question? There, indeed, an important question may arise and call for the judgment and tax the ingenuity of statesmen and legislators. There, and there only, is the real difficult statesmen and legislators. There, and there only, is the real difficult question, and I shall not to-day deny (since it is not necessary now to take any ground upon that subject) but that Congress, acting as a legislature under its legislative power to make laws to carry out the legislature under its legislative power to make laws to carry out the functions of the Constitution, may by law, under the sanction and subject to the limitations of the law-making power, with or without executive approval (with executive approval, unless they have two-thirds in favor of the proposition of which he disapproves) provide a tribunal by which, judicially if you please, this question may be decided. I shall not argue that that authority rests in the Supreme Court of the United States—another co-ordinate branch of our Government; for I am not convinced that it does reside there, unless Congress under its general legislative power sends it there. unless Congress under its general legislative power sends it there. But gentlemen will observe that every one of these powers which I

But gentlemen will observe that every one of these powers which I have enumerated belongs to Congress as a legislature, and is to be carried out and put in force only by law, made subject to the provisions and governed by the restraints and limitations which govern and restrain legislative action.

It is provided by the Constitution also that after the Vice-President of the United States shall have opened "all the certificates in the presence of the two Houses of Congress, the votes shall then be counted." Gentlemen have sought to argue from that language that Congress has judicial power over that subject, though the Constitu-tion is loudly and affirmatively silent in giving and therefore denies such power to Congress; yet from the very fact of its silence they argue that that power is to be implied. Why, the framers of our Constitu-tion considered the question as to how far Congress should have power over this subject. It was at one time suggested, I do not now recollect how far it was actually agreed to, that Congress should elect the Executive, but that proposition, after discussion and consideration, was affirmatively rejected, and that rejection remains an incontrovertible fact, forbidding the idea that Congress shall take power bevertible fact, forbidding the idea that Congress shall take power because the Constitution is silent on the question. In the first place, it can have no power that is not given to it. In the second place, it has no power on this subject except as a legislative body as distinguished from a judicial tribunal. In the third place, it can exercise no power except through and by means of legislative action. How violent, then, would be the assumption that there, in that language of the Constitution which loudly omits to say that Congress shall have any power over the counting of the votes, there can be found any latent power in a congressional joint meeting, which in its very nature excludes all, even legislative, power or action—a convention which in the attempt to exercise any power would do violence to all our ideas of constitutional government and to the independence of the our ideas of constitutional government and to the independence of the two Houses themselves—a convention which not only has no legislative power itself, but which is given nothing by the Constitution except the duty of being present at the opening of the certificates and the counting of the votes. Do not misunderstand me. I do not say that the Vice-President, in the discharge of his ministerial functions in opening all the certificates, has power to act judicially in counting the votes of the States. I limit his power there, by the written words of the Constitution itself, to the mere exercise of ministerial powerjust as I limit the power of Congress there to mere witnessing power. But I will say that every argument in favor of the power of Congress to act on that occasion is doubly strong in favor of the ministerial officer who opens the certificates.

But I do not believe—let gentlemen understand my limitation—I do not believe that judicial power to decide upon the votes of States resides with the President of the Senate or with Congress acting there in that convention.

I am admonished by the lapse of time, Mr. Speaker, that I must hurry on to the consideration of this resolution itself. Assuming for the sake of argument, admitting for the sake of argument, that Con-gress has all the power which is claimed for it in this resolution, admitting for the sake of argument that it has the power to reject or admit the votes of a State, if it has that power it is of course a constitutional power. Congress can have no such power unless it be a constitutional power. If it be a constitutional power, it is either an affirmative or a negative power. It is either a power to reject votes or a power to admit votes. Either one or other of these propositions must be true, and I commend them to my friend who is the chairman of the committee who reported this resolution. Either the votes as they stand certified by the States are to be counted in the first instance, and only rejected if Congress objects, or they are only to be stance, and only rejected it Congress objects, or they are only to be counted when Congress affirmatively admits them to be counted. Do I make myself understood? Either they stand prima facie to be counted unless Congress objects to them—and if that be true, then it will require the joint action of both Houses to reject any vote—if they are prima facie votes to be counted unless Congress objects, then it will require the concurrent action of both Houses to reject a vote. If there be not that concurrent action, then the votes must stand and be counted. If this be not true, then the other principle remains, namely, that the votes are counted by the affirmative assent of Congress and are not votes unless Congress agrees to count them. If that be true, then it requires the concurrent action of both Houses to count a vote. Are these propositions true or are they false? If it be a constitutional right in Congress to act, they must have the constitutional right to act right in Congress to act, they must have the constitutional right to act either affirmatively or negatively, not both ways. The right must rest on one principle or the other. Which do you take? If it be a constitutional right, it is also a constitutional duty, and the right and the duty are restrained by no rules and cannot depend upon any condition or circumstances. Yet this resolution in one clause provides that if there is but one set of lists from a State, the vote shall be counted unless both Houses concur in rejecting it. That proposition rests upon the idea that the votes stand unless Congress affirmatively rejects. In the next provision the resolution provides that tively rejects. In the next provision the resolution provides that when there are two lists, then the vote shall not be counted unless both Houses concur in counting it. Under that provision one House can throw out the vote. Those two provisions stand upon diametrically opposed principles, do they not? Can it be denied that one rests upon the affirmative right of the vote to be counted unless both Houses concur in rejecting, and the other stands upon the idea that no vote shall be counted unless both Houses concur in admitting it. One clause or the other must be unconstitutional. The truth is that if Congress has power at all, the logical and irresistible conclusion must be that no vote can be counted unless both Houses concur in counting it. Give the power to Congress at all, and you give one House of Congress the power to refuse to count. Give it to Congress at all, and you give it to the House of Representatives or to the Sentential Congress where the Congress at all, and you give it to the House of Representatives or to the Sentential Congress where the Congress at all the resulting the Congress where the Congress are the Congress at all the resulting the Congress at all the congress where the Congress are the Congress at all t ate, the very places where the Constitution and its framers refused to put it.

It is ridiculous to say that this constitutional power and duty—for if it is a constitutional power it carries a constitutional duty derived by implication from the Constitution, unlimited by circumstances, unrestrained by conditions—is to be exercised in one way under one set of circumstances and rules and in another way under another set of circumstances and rules. What clause in the Constitution puts that limit on it, and what mere rule has power to limit it? If it be a constitutional power and a constitutional duty, it overrides all rules, silences and governs all conditions. Gentlemen may say, "We go upon the half-way principle. We say that when there is but one list of electors then the vote shall be counted, unless both Houses concur in rejecting it; and we only give the power to one House when there are two lists." By what authority do you limit constitutional powers? Where do you derive from the Constitution the right to make that distinction? Where do you derive the power to limit your own consti-tutional rights and duties? If H. L. Morey sends a bogus list from New York, shall that give to the House of Representatives a constitutional power which it would not otherwise have? Consider that, genthemen. When you are confronted with your own proposition thus contradicting itself you should pause on the threshold before you make a new precedent as valueless as those that went before. I have neither preparation nor time to enter into a protracted and analytical discussion of this subject; but these difficulties lie on the surface of this rule and cannot be ignored nor surmounted.

Mr. HUNTON. Will the gentleman from New Jersey allow me to

Mr. HUNTON. Will the gentleman Holli New Jersey and while to ask him a question?

Mr. ROBESON. Certainly.

Mr. HUNTON. As I understand the gentleman's argument, it is that neither the two Houses of Congress nor the President of the Senate have any power over the subject of the electoral vote, except merely to enumerate, add up, and declare the result. Now I desire to ask him how he would meet the difficulty of this sort under the theory he has propounded on the subject: suppose a committee of this House, appointed to investigate the electoral vote of a given State, should report to this House that the certificate of the State of Louisiana, for instance, is a forged certificate; I ask him in that event who would have the power to pass upon the question, in counting the vote, of the forgery or the bona fide character of that certificate? I take it for granted that the learned gentleman from New Jersey would not have a President of the United States for four years counted in and determined by a forged certificate from any State in the United

A MEMBER. We have got one now.

Mr. HUNTON. Well, I suppose the gentleman who throws in that remark would not admit he would be in favor of that, even if we do have it now. In that event where does the power lie? And does the gentleman from New Jersey mean to say our fathers have framed a government and put into operation a system by which a President may be imposed upon the people of the United States by a certificate admitted or proved to be forged?

Mr. ROBESON. The gentleman has not exactly conceived my proposition, and the fact that my friend who so thoroughly understands this subject and whose mind is so thoroughly informed upon it, has not done so admonishes me that I may not have stated it clearly. I wish first to say to him that I am discussing this resolution as it is now offered before us; and that in opposing it I declare it to be my opinion that the Vice-President of the United States, neither by virtue of any authority in his office nor by virtue of any authority given him by the Constitution of the United States, has a right to pronounce judicially upon the question of the validity or invalidity of any electoral vote. I also declare that the two Houses of Congress have no authority to act judicially themselves upon that subject either as such Houses independently or in joint convention.

Much more strongly do I declare that the two Houses in joint convention, a body unknown to the legislative power of this Government, provided only for a single contingency, outside of the grant of legislative power, have no right to decide at all, either judicially or otherwise, such questions. And still stronger do I declare that the two Houses of Congress, which if they have any power to act at all have only legislative power, have no right to declare or decide anything on this subject by means of a mere rule (which if it has validity at all rests only upon that clause in the Constitution which gives each House authority to determine the rules of its own procedure, which affects no interests outside of the order and conduct of their own business) which can determine no constitutional right, can deprive no individual of a constitutional privilege, and can avoid or limit no conwhich can determine no constitutional right, can deprive no individual of a constitutional privilege, and can avoid or limit no constitutional duties of any man or assembly; much less can strip from a State its direct influence and power in the election of the Execu-

Mr. HUNTON. But my friend—
Mr. ROBESON. I have said this in order that the gentleman may understand the elements of my proposition. Now I will go one step further if he will permit me.

Mr. HUNTON. But I want you to answer my question first.

Mr. ROBESON. I am willing to consider and discuss, and with my mind open to the effect which every gentleman's opinion may have upon me, decide the question whether or not there does reside in Congress, as the legislative power of this Government, under its power to put in operation the functions of the Constitution, and to provide by law for carrying out the duties which are devolved upon any department or officer of the Government, the power to provide by law beforehand, as a legislative enactment, a tribunal which shall settle

Mr. WARNER. That is the point I wish the gentleman to meet.
Mr. ROBESON. I hope and think I can do so. That was the idea which the framers of our Constitution had, I think, which was embodied in the act of 1800, which received the sanction of many of the makers of the Constitution, and which was assented to by the supreme authority of James Madison himself.
Mr. HUNTON. Will the gentleman allow me—
Mr. ROBESON. One moment; let me go on. But the gentleman the limit of the sanction of the supreme must understand the limit of the sanction.

Mr. HUNTON. Will the gentleman allow me—
Mr. ROBESON. One moment; let me go on. But the gentleman must understand the limit of that proposition. Legislatures make laws for future operation. Courts and judicial authorities construe and decide questions as they arise upon laws after they are made.

The legislative authority of the Government, while it may make a law for future operation, can derive no power from this general legislative authority under the Constitution to act judicially upon any present question. It may make a law providing for the future, but it cannot assume to decide upon disputed questions of constitutional law, nor to answer upon the spot judicial questions as they arise.

Now, if such a contingency may arise as the gentleman suggests, let me say to him that it is his duty, as it is mine—and I put nothing upon him which I would not assume for myself—carefully to consider, judiciously to determine, and permanently to fix a tribunal which shall meet this issue, which is the perilous edge of doubt upon which the destinies of our country rest.

But do not seek, gentlemen, to force through here, under the operation of the previous question, a rule which you yourselves have not considered, but which is to decide this primary question of your country's interest, and which is to be put through under the previous question; to decide upon not only the constitutional powers of your Government, but the rights and powers of your States and your vour Government, but the rights and powers of your States and your people.

Mr. HUNTON. Will the gentleman allow me now?

Mr. ROBESON. Certainly.

Mr. HUNTON. I understood the distinguished gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. ROBESON] upon the question that I propounded to him as well before I propounded it as I do now, and no better, because his answer to my question has been a general dissertation upon the powers of legislatures. He and I would not probably disagree about the power of the two Houses of Congress to pass a law regulating the manner of counting the electoral vote. But the time is rapidly approaching when that electoral vote must be counted. It is apparent to this House, to the distinguished gentleman from New Jersey himself, that no law can be passed by the two Houses of Congress in time to meet the counting of the electoral vote in February next.

Now, the point I make is this: without a joint rule and without a law upon the subject, when anybody comes to count the vote, whether it be the Vice-President, under the construction which some gentlelaw upon the subject, when anybody comes to count the vote, whether it be the Vice-President, under the construction which some gentlemen put upon the Constitution, or the two Houses, according to the construction we put upon it, if there should come before either the Vice-President or the two Houses of Congress a certificate proved or acknowledged to be a forgery, is that vote to be counted thus certified, or is it to be rejected?

Mr. KEIFER. Your rule does not touch that question.

Mr. HUNTON. I beg the gentleman's pardon. The rule which I have read does settle the question—that if the two Houses concur in rejecting that vote it shall be rejected; and I take it, sir, that neither House of Congress, however constituted, nor the Vice-President, whatever might be the politics of Congress or the Vice-President, could ever count a vote for President of the United States which was by confession or proof evidenced by a forged certificate alone.

Now I ask the attention of my friend from New Jersey to this point: if in the counting of the electoral vote in February next there should come before the counting power, whether that be the two Houses of Congress or the Vice-President of the United States, a paper purporting to be the certificate of the vote of a State of this Union, but which is confessedly, by proof or otherwise, a forged certificate—

Mr. ROBESON. It cannot be confessed by proof.

Mr. HUNTON. Well, it can be established either by confession or by proof. I stand corrected. I am not so technical in the use of language as the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. ROBESON. I beg the gentleman's pardon; there is an important point right there. The right to decide on evidence is a judicial right.

Mr. HUNTON. But if by confession or by proof the pretended cer-

Mr. HUNTON. But if by confession or by proof the pretended certificate is shown to be a forgery, if it is beyond question a forged certificate, then who is to act upon it and throw it out? Or, under the rule contended for on the other side, shall the counting power, whether the two Houses of Congress or the Vice-President, blindly count that certificate and impose upon the country as President a man who without the counting of that certificate would not be elected, and thus violate the will of the people of this great country?

Mr. KEIFER. Will the gentleman allow me—

Mr. HUNTON. When I get through. I am asking a question.

Laughter.]
Mr. ROBESON. I hope the gentleman from Virginia will go on.
wish light, and there is light in discussion.
Mr. HUNTON. I am only propounding a question.
Mr. KEIFER. May I interrupt the gentleman long enough to call

Mr. KEIFER. May I interrupt the gentleman long enough to call attention to a matter—

Mr. HUNTON. Let me get through, and then I will hear the gentleman with great pleasure.

Now, the point which I wish to make, and to which I would direct the discriminating and great mind of the gentleman from New Jersey, is this: when the Constitution has conferred a power to count, whether upon the Vice-President or upon the two Houses of Congress, does not that power to count carry along with it a power to determine what shall be counted? I hope the gentleman will answer this question. Allow me to enforce it by the plainest sort of an illustration. I beg to be excused for the plainness of it. If I were to send out my friend to count a flock of sheep, and some man should come up and put five goats in that flock to be counted, would the gentleman count the goats as well as the sheep? He would have to determine which were the sheep and which were the goats before he could count the sheep. Is not that so? Mr. ROBESON. I would like to say—
Mr. ROBESON. Now, wait a moment. [Laughter.]
Mr. ROBESON. Then you do not want me to answer that question.

Mr. HUNTON. Oh, yes!
Mr. ROBESON. I trust the gentleman will go on. I am glad he thinks it worth while to debate the question.
Mr. HUNTON. I never expect to impose on my distinguished

Mr. ROBESON. No, no! By discussion of this kind we get light.
Mr. CONGER. I desire to suggest that the gentleman from New Jersey now has the floor. The gentleman from Virginia will have his hour; and we do not intend to cut him off.
Mr. HUNTON. We do not intend to limit the gentleman from New Jersey to an hour. He shall have the whole day if he wishes.
Mr. CONGER. The gentleman from Virginia can have his hour, and can talk in his own time.
Mr. BLACKBURN. I hope the time of the gentleman from New

Mr. BLACKBURN. I hope the time of the gentleman from New

Mr. BLACKBURN. I hope the time of the gentleman from New Jersey will be extended.

Mr. HUNTON. It has been done, and shall be done again.

Mr. ROBESON. I delight in fair discussion; I seek light from the gentleman's thoroughly informed mind on this subject.

Mr. KEIFER. I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from New Jersey be extended.

Mr. HUNTON. That has already been done; and I will say further that the distinguished gentleman from New Jersey can rarely rise to address the House when his time will not be extended if he desires it. desires it

Mr. ROBESON. I trust I shall never ask any improper indulgence of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. SPRINGER.) The time of the gentleman from New Jersey having expired, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Keifer] asks unanimous consent that it be extended.

Several Members. It has been done.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears

Mr. HUNTON. Now, the point to which I wish the gentleman from New Jersey to address his great intellect is this: whether or not the power conferred by the Constitution on somebody to count does not carry along with it a power to determine what is to be counted. The carry along with it a power to determine what is to be counted. The gentleman has answered my question, and said that if sent out to count sheep he would not count goats.

Mr. ROBESON. No, sir; I have not yet answered the question.

Mr. HUNTON. I submit to the gentleman that if he were in the position of the Vice-President, or in the position of the two Houses of Congress, in either event, if he undertook to count the votes, he could not count what was not a vote any more than he could count a goat for a sheep. Therefore, I submit the power to count the electoral vote carries along with it at least some degree of power to determine vote carries along with it at least some degree of power to determine

Now, suppose my friend was occupying the high position of Vice-President, or President of the Senate, and I ask him the question, and there came up to him a certificate from any State in this Union which had been proved by this House, or by the Senate over which he presided, to be a forgery, and there was no conflicting evidence on the subject, and that that vote determined whether Garfield or Hancock was President—the counting of it made Hancock and its rejection made Garfield President—while I have no idea you would be swayed in that high office by any partisan feeling, still I ask you, sir, whether you would feel authorized in that chair to count that vote which you knew to be only indorsed by a forged certificate? I would like an Answer to that question.

Mr. ROBESON. Has the gentleman finished his question?

Mr. HUNTON. I have the floor, you know. [Laughter.]

Mr. ROBESON. Just as long as you please, so far as I am concerned.

Mr. HUNTON. I would like to get an answer before I go further.

Mr. ROBESON. I will yield now to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr.

Mr. HUNTON. But I did not yield to my friend from Ohio.
Mr. PAGE. The gentleman from Virginia will recollect that the gentleman from New Jersey has the floor and that he is speaking in the time of the gentleman from New Jersey.
Mr. ROBESON. Pardon me a moment. I will yield all the time to the gentleman from Virginia that he desires.
Mr. HUNTON. Then I will take another illustration, and I want my friend to address himself to these things, because I know he is a man of reflection.

Mr. ROBESON. I will endeavor to do so.

Mr. HUNTON. I know you will, and I want to have your views on them in that spirit of candor which has characterized your debates on the floor of this House. Now, suppose in 1864 the Vice-President was in the chair of the Senate counting the vote by which the President was to be declared elected, and the State of Virginia had sent up an electoral vote—the State of Virginia according to well-established construction of the two Houses of Congress at that period having no right to vote for President and Vice-President of the United States—suppose Virginia had sent up, while you were in that vice-presidential chair, its electoral vote for President and Vice-President in 1864 would you under the constitutional power vested. President in 1864, would you, under the constitutional power vested in you, according to the construction of some gentlemen, would you have counted the vote? Then, if you would not, you would have to have counted the vote? Then, if you would not, you would have to exercise some sort of judicial power and discrimination to throw it out; because, I take for granted, Mr. Speaker, no gentleman on either side of the Chamber here will maintain the right of anybody, whoever it may be, the two Houses or the Vice-President, to have counted the vote of the State of Virginia, certified up to the Vice-President of the United States in 1864. And I cite this illustration for the purpose of drawing your mind to the fact whether the power of counting does not of itself, proprio vigori, carry along with it the right to determine what is to be counted? Now, that is the question to which I desire to have an answer.

Mr. ROBESON. I will yield to the gentleman from Ohio, and in the mean time I trust the gentleman from Virginia will put down on paper his questions, and I will address myself to answer them.

Mr. KEIFER. I have no doubt that the gentleman from New Jer-

Mr. KEIFER. I have no doubt that the gentleman from New Jersey will answer whatever there is to be found in the several questions which have been submitted by the honorable gentleman from Virginia. I rose for the purpose of calling the attention of the House to an error I apprehend the gentleman has fallen into in relation to the subject-matter before the House. He debates a question that has never been presented here under this resolution. He assumes, Mr. Speaker, that this joint resolution relates to questions which might arise in relation to the genuine character of certificates, whereas the whole frame-work of the resolution is intended to give to Congress the right to reject properly certified votes. No other votes need to be rejected. There is nothing in the scheme which looks toward establishing a rule to determine when a certificate is genuine or not. If I have any time to yield I should like the gentleman to point that out. Mr. KEIFER. I have no doubt that the gentleman from New Jer-

Mr. HUNTON. I will answer him now sir.

Mr. KEIFER. Very well; but I do not expect you to make a three-quarters-of-an-hour speech in way of answer.

Mr. HUNTON. I will answer the gentleman.

Mr. HUNTON. I will answer the gentleman. I stated, sir, under that rule, if the proof were proposed to the two Houses of Congress that a certificate from any given State was a forgery, by the concurrent action of the two Houses that certificate could be rejected.

Mr. KEIFER. The gentleman's answer is a confession there is nothing in the rule which relates to the subject-matter of determining the genuine character of the certificates, because he undertakes to say what he would estimate about it, and not what the rule is. The rule is directed against certified votes, and not forged votes. We all understand that no President of the Senate is going to lay before the joint convention a forged certificate.

Mr. HUNTON. Why?

Mr. KEIFER. Unless the gentleman assumes that he would commit an outrage.

Mr. HUNTON. Why?

Mr. KEIFER. Unless he assumes he would commit a high crime, an impeachable one.

Mr. HUNTON. But why would he not do it?
Mr. KEIFER. Because there is no man so distinguished as to be cleeted Vice-President, or President of the Senate, but in a supposed case, would submit to the joint convention what is proved according to the gentleman's method, or confessed to be, a forgery.

Mr. HUNTON. Why would he not lay it before the House?

Mr. HUNTON. Why would he not lay it before the House?
Mr. HUNTON. Why would he not lay it before the House?
Mr. KEIFER. And therefore there is nothing for us to consider, there is nothing for a joint meeting to consider at all, and his supposed objection is entirely outside of the case.
Mr. HUNTON. The gentleman is mistaken.
Mr. KEIFER. There is no forged certificate or vote to be dealt with. The Constitution specifically directs that the President of the Senate shall open the certificates, and that the votes shall then be counted. Under that clause of the Constitution there is no requirement that he shall apparit anything to the joint convention of the two ment that he shall submit anything to the joint convention of the two Houses but certificates; nothing whatever; and he is to that extent, while the mere fact of opening the certificates is a ministerial act, like all other ministerial officers, compelled to exercise judicial powers under circumstances which might arise.

Mr. HUNTON. The distinguished gentleman does not catch my idea at all

Mr. KEIFER. I do not catch that idea which is outside of the resolution. If the time comes when a law or some other measure resolution. If the time comes when a law or some other measure comes before us fixing rules and regulations to govern the proceedings of the two Houses when they are assembled in joint session, the gentleman and myself may come together a little more closely than we do to-day. But I repeat what I have said before, that this resolution is an attempt to give Congress, by a mere concurrent resolution, power to make a President of the United States or a Vice-President regardless of the result of the electoral votes, and that is the whole purpose and design of the resolution.

Mr. HUNTON. I will just say to the gentleman from Ohio that his very statement of the case is a beging of the question, for this his very statement of the case is a begging of the question, for this reason: he states, Mr. Speaker, that if there be a forged certificate and this certificate is presented to the Vice-President he would not count it because it was not a certificate. Now, that is the whole point in this discussion.

Mr. KEIFER. But, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. HUNTON. Let me conclude.

Mr. KEIFER. But you are talking in my time; and I would like to answer your points as you go on.

Mr. HUNTON. You will have plenty of time.

Mr. KEIFER. Very well, go on.

Mr. HUNTON. When that is opened by the Vice-President, because he cannot open them until the two Houses are assembled as witnesses, when that certificate is opened it appears upon the face of it, if he is not familiar with the signatures, to be as genuine as any other,

Mr. KEIFER. He has the same information that members of the joint convention would have.

Mr. HUNTON. But I ask the gentleman the question. Is not that Mr. KEIFER. I want to answer the question of the gentleman-again, that the President of the Senate has exactly as much informa-tion as to the fact set forth in that certificate, or as to its authenticity tion as to the fact set forth in that certificate, or as to its authenticity as a certificate, as the members of the two Houses themselves have when assembled in joint session.

Mr. HUNTON. I agree to that.

Mr. KEIFER. Then let him decide.

Mr. HUNTON. That is the whole point of the controversy. When the Vice-President is informed, as the two Houses would be informed, that this certificate is a palpable, bold, glaring forgery, according to the testimony taken by the committee of this House, he would act judicially upon that evidence submitted to him and throw out the certificate—would he?

details and the state of the st

Mr. KEIFER. Yes; but the two Houses directed it in a bill to enable the President of the Senate to act in accordance with the Con-

Mr. HUNTON. I ask the gentleman to recollect what took place at the last count of the electoral vote.

Mr. KEIFER. Let me suggest to the gentleman from Virginia that I understand as the count went on, and a long time after it had begun, certificates were prepared and tendered to the President of the Senate which he refused to take, and were never submitted to the joint count of the two Houses at all.

Mr. HUNTON. No; I beg the gentleman's pardon. I happen to know more about that, perhaps, than the gentleman himself.

Mr. KEIFER. Well, Mr. Speaker, I have only stated what is a myself—— Mr. KEIFER. I do not want to speak of gentlemen who were once members of this House and may be again members of it, but I do know that a long time after the count was begun certificates were prepared and presented to the Vice-President which were not submitted to the two Houses of Congress in joint assembly at all.

Mr. HUNTON. Let me give the gentleman the facts, however, before he undertakes to speak on them.

Mr. ROBESON. Was that Morey? [Laughter.]

Mr. KEIFER. Not quite.

Mr. HUNTON. The facts were to this effect: that certificates were sent from the State of Louisiana to the then President of the Sen-

Mr. KEIFER. The gentleman is off the track altogether.
Mr. HUNTON. I know when I am on the track, and I am on it

Mr. KEIFER. The gentleman is not on the track I started. I am not speaking of Louisiana. I yield the floor.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr.

ROBESON] has the floor.

Mr. HUNTON. I ask my friend from New Jersey to yield to me for a moment or two.

for a moment or two.

Mr. ROBESON. Certainly
Mr. HUNTON. I was illustrating the position taken by the gentleman from Ohio by the history of a past electoral count.

Mr. KEIFER. I was speaking of a fact.
Mr. HUNTON. I was speaking as to past occurrences. In 1876—77 the electoral college of the State of Leuisiana sent up a certificate here which was unquestionably informal. It was found out somehow, we do not know exactly by what means, that it was informal. A messenger was sent back and a new certificate was made. Three of the electors could not be found to sign the certificate and their of the electors could not be found to sign the certificate and their names were forged. That was therefore beyond all peradventure a forged certificate. Now, if that certificate was presented to the Vice-President, or to the two Houses, with the evidence that it was a forgery, it must have been rejected either by the Vice-President or the wo Houses.

Mr. KEIFER. It was not rejected.

Mr. HUNTON. And the rejection of that certificate, or refusal to reject it, would have been an exercise of quasi-judicial power.

Mr. KEIFER. If Congress could reject it, the President of the Senate might reject it.

Mr. ROBESON. I yield for a few moments to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. Cox.]

Mr. COX. I presume it is the wish of every gentleman, if possible, to settle this matter in a proper way to the end that the man elected as President of the United States may be inaugurated. I think I have reduced the whole thing down to a nut-shell in a question which will test this whole matter. Here it is: suppose the certificates of the test this whole matter. Here it is: suppose the certificates of the State of New York at some time between the time they should leave Albany and the time they are opened by the President of the Senate should be secretly opened and the names of Garfield and Arthur should be stricken out and the names of Hancock and English be inserted; be stricken out and the names of Hancock and English be inserted; would the President of the Senate or the House be powerless to prevent the fraud and would it be necessary to count the vote of the State of New York for Hancock and English? What body or what person, if any, must determine this question? I believe it embraces the whole subject. And I ask how are we to settle the matter unless we come to meet that proposition squarely?

Now, will my friend from New Jersey bring his knowledge and his logic to bear upon that, and if possible give us a vote on some measure? If not this measure then perfect one yourselves to the end that you may elect your own President.

Mr. ROBESON. I have submitted to the questions from the distinguished gentlemen on the other side of the House, because I defined to the president of the House, because I defined to the president of the House, because I defined to the president of the House, because I defined to the president of the House, because I defined to the president of the House, because I defined to the president of the House, because I defined to the president of the House, because I defined to the president of the House, because I defined the transfer of the House the president of the House the Hou

Mr. ROBESON. I have submitted to the questions from the distinguished gentlemen on the other side of the House, because I desire to understand thoroughly the objections they can suggest against the propositions which I have presented. First, I understand my friend from Virginia [Mr. Hunton] to ask me this question: whether the clause of the Constitution which says that all the certificates shall be opened by the President of the Senate in the presence of the two Houses of Congress, and that the votes shall then be counted, gives to the two Houses the power of deciding which are false and which are true. I understand the gentleman from Virginia to claim for the two Houses of Congress the power of deciding then and there which are false and which are true votes. I deny to Congress that power.

Mr. WARNER. Can the Vice-President exercise it?
Mr. ROBESON. If it resides in either the Vice-President or in Congress, it certainly resides in the Vice-President, because he is affirmatively required to open the certificates and present the votes. I do not tively required to open the certificates and present the votes. I do not say that the Vice-President has that as a general judicial power; but I do say that the Constitution and the laws of the United States provide, and Congress acting by law under its legislative power has also provided, what shall be an authentication of those votes; and that when they are presented to the Vice-President as a ministerial officer charged with the duty of opening the certificates, if they are authenticated in compliance with the provisions of law, then it is his duty to open them. If they be not so certified and authenticated, then to open them. If they be not so certified and authenticated, then they are goats, and not sheep; but if they are so authenticated, bearing the stamp of the certified action of State authority, then they are clothed with the wool of State power, and are sheep, and not

Mr. MARTIN, of West Virginia. How does he know before he opens the certificates?

Mr. ROBESON. By that authentication which is provided by law.

Mr. HUNTON. I would suggest that that was a forgery in the Louisiana case. Mr. ROBESON. Mr. ROBESON. If gentlemen will permit me I want to answer the questions which have been addressed to me, and shall endeavor to answer them all.

I say, then, when a ministerial duty,—and I challenge the gentle-man's reply, if he has any, to this proposition,—is imposed on any officer, such as the ministerial duties imposed upon the Vice-President by the Constitution and laws of opening these certificates, he must act ministerially in the first instance, and decide himself the ques-tions which govern his ministerial action, and if this action is dis-puted, then it is to be judicially decided afterward by such tribunal as the laws and the Constitution of our country authorize to review and decide more his ministerial actions. and decide upon his ministerial actions.

Mr. MARTIN, of West Virginia. By what tribunal?

Mr. ROBESON. By that tribunal which Congress, acting under its legislative power, under its right to put in motion all the functions of the Constitution and to provide by law for carrying out all the powers conferred by the Constitution on any department or any the powers conferred by the Constitution on any department or any officer of the Government, has the right to provide beforehand by law, and not by any power in itself to decide then and there in the exercise of judicial power. And in the absence of any such tribunal, which is a failure on the part of Congress to do its duty, and not the first in the history of our Government, that ministerial right and power exercised by the Vice-President must stand as the full exercise of all the powers of the Government which have been put in force.

For the strength of that position I appeal to no less an authority than that of Chief Justice Kent the most learned American who has than that of Chief-Justice Kent, the most learned American who has ever written upon the subject of constitutional construction. He says in effect that in the absence of proper provision by legislation, the ministerial action of the Vice-President, acting primarily, but not the ministerial action of the vice-Fresident, acting primarily, but not judicially, must stand as the only thing to determine the question. It is a great wrong and a shame in the history of our country; it impeaches our patriotism, mine as well as yours; it impeaches our judgment and our statesmanship that we let it so stand. But it does stand so in the absence of constitutional legislation upon the subject, and this cannot be supplied by a rule. That is my answer to your proposition proposition.

Mr. McLANE. I do not understand that the question is answered. The question propounded to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. Robeson] was this: he having made the argument that Congress had only legislative functions, he having based his whole argument upon that proposition, the gentleman from Virginia interposed an inquiry which suggested to his mind that Congress had other than legislative duties.

Mr. ROBESON. Which I denied.

Mr. McLANE. That was his inquiry. The inquiry of the gentleman from Virginia addressed to the gentleman from New Jersey involved the fact that Congress had other than legislative duties. That inquiry was: supposing that these votes opened by the Vice-President in the presence of the two Houses of Congress, and which were then to be counted by the terms of the Constitution as read by the gentleman from New Jersey, the inquiry was whether the Vice-President or Congress, no matter which—the gentleman from Virginia having conceded to the gentleman from New Jersey that if it were a question of passing a law to enable an officer or a department to perform a duty there might not be any difference of opinion between them—but as that was not the question, as the question was what the Vice-President and the two Houses should do when the certificate was opened, if it should appear that the certificate was a forgery, if it were notoif it should appear that the certificate was a forgery, if it were noto-rious or appeared on the face of the paper that the certificate was a forged one, then the question was whether there was not a judicial duty to be performed. The gentleman from Virginia is of opinion that the performance of a judicial duty was thereby involved, and that the performance of a judicial duty was thereby involved, and he addressed the inquiry to the gentleman from New Jersey whether it was not a judicial duty.

Now the gentleman from New Jersey has not answered that question. He, as a lawyer, knows very well that to determine whether a certified vote should or should not be counted is a judicial duty. The gentleman from Virginia gave him no opportunity to make the point whether that duty devolved upon the Vice-President or upon Congress. He asked only whether that counting of the vote was not a judicial duty. He waived for the moment the question whether the vote was to be counted by the Vice-President or by Congress; he waived that in express terms. The only inquiry he addressed to the gentleman from New Jersey was, whether the counting of the votes was not a judicial duty, and with due respect to the gentleman from New Jersey I submit that that question has not yet been answered.

Mr. ROBESON. Very well, then let me answer it. I thought I had answered it, but perhaps not in terms.

Mr. McLane. You have not in terms.

Mr. McLane. You have not.

Mr. ROBESON. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Hunton] did ask me, though not in terms, whether there did not reside a judicial power, a duty in Congress.

Mr. McLANE. Or in the Vice-President.

Mr. ROBESON. Under the clause of the Constitution which says these certificates shall be opened by the Vice-President in the presence of the two Houses, and that the vote shall then be counted; whether there was not a judicial duty and power residing in Con-

Mr. HUNTON. Or in the Vice-President.
Mr. ROBESON. In Congress or in the Vice-President, to then accide what votes were right and what were wrong, and which should be counted. I deny that there is any such judicial power in Con-

Mr. McLANE. Or in the Vice-President.
Mr. ROBESON. I will make my own answer. I deny that there is any such judicial power in Congress. The Constitution of the United States says, in definite and limited terms, that all the judicial reside in the Supreme Court and in powers of this Government shall reside in the Supreme Court and in such inferior tribunals as may be fixed by law; not judicial power merely, but all the judicial powers of this Government.

Now, in the face of that proposition, who shall dare to say that a convention which is clothed with no power under the Constitution, except to be present when a ministerial office is exercised, shall assume to exercise judicial power upon the most vital questions in the except to be present when a ministerial office is exercised, shall assume to exercise judicial power upon the most vital questions in the operations of the Government?

But I wish to go one step further. I say, also, that there is no judicial power in the Vice-President. I say that the power which he exercises of opening the certificates is a ministerial power, and not a judicial power; and Isay that when a ministerial officer has a duty imposed upon him by law—and I appeal to the educated judgment of every law-yer within the sound of my voice—he has the right, to be exercised prima facie and subject to review, but standing when unreviewed, to exercise a ministerial power of selection and choice upon the several matters committed to his action. This is not a judicial power residing either in Congress or in the Vice-President. There is no power in Congress under that condition of things; and there is no judicial power in the Vice-President. And Mr. Chancellor Kent has declared that that is the ministerial power of the Vice-President, and that unless reviewed by some authorized tribunal, (which it is our duty to provide,) it must stand as the action of the Government on that subject. There I take my stand; and there, if I am called upon, I will ject. There I take my stand; and there, if I am called upon, I will do battle against any knight who seeks to break his lance upon the impenetrable shield of Chancellor Kent's judicial reputation.

the impenetrable shield of Chancellor Kent's judicial reputation. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. McLANE. I understand the gentleman from New Jersey now to say, as he said a little while ago, that all legislative power is vested in Congress—a proposition which no man on this floor will deny. But the deduction which he has made from this proposition, that because all legislative power is vested in Congress therefore that because all legislative power is vested in Congress therefore Congress has no other power, we do deny.

Mr. ROBESON. Will the gentleman pardon me right here?

Mr. McLANE. Yes, sir.

Mr. ROBESON. If all legislative power is given in one clause to Congress and all judicial power in another clause to the courts, does any judicial power remain in Congress? [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. McLANE. One point at a time, Mr. Speaker. The legislative functions of Congress are quite apart from its judicial functions. Congress has power to impeach without the action of the Senate; and the Senate has the power to try impeachments. The power to impeach is not a legislative power. So much for the assertion that because all legislative power is vested in Congress therefore no other power is vested in Congress. power is vested in Congress.

Mr. ROBESON. The gentleman misapprehends me. I said "un-

Mr. ROBESON. The gentleman misapprehends me. I said "unless specially given."

Mr. McLane. Now we come to the power of the judiciary. The gentleman says that all judicial power is vested in the Supreme Court and such inferior courts as Congress may from time to time establish. Now, this body has power to punish for contempt, which is a judicial power, inherent in it as a parliamentary body. There is no express grant of this power by the Constitution. Hence I say it is a wild and extravagant proposition to affirm that because the Constitution declares that all judicial power is vested in the courts, and that all legislative power is vested in Congress, therefore Congress has no other power than legislative power, and especially that it has no judicial power. Congress has distinctly conferred upon it, in the Constitution, powers other than legislative, and Congress has inherent in itself other powers than legislative, and Congress has inherent in itself other powers than legislative powers. The argument of the gentleman from New Jersey is altogether unsound.

This entire controversy to-day turns upon this point: does Congress possess any powers other than legislative? The gentleman from New Jersey argues that Congress does not possess any other powers than legislative powers. His proviso, "unless they be specially conferred," I accept, in order that this argument may be brought to its point. The power is expressly conferred upon Congress to impeach, and impeachment is not a legislative function. The power is expressly conferred upon Congress to participate in the electoral count and to elect a President when the count shows no one has a majority of the votes counted. That is our argument—the power is expressly conferred upon Congress to participate in this count; and because this power is conferred upon Congress, Congress possesses judicial powers, the count being a judicial act. The count is an exercise of judicial count is count in the count is an exercise of judicial count is count in the count is an exercise of judicial count in the count is an exercise of judicial count in the count is an exercise of judicial count in the count is an exercise of judicial count in the count is an exercise of judicial count in the count is an exercise of judicial count in the count is an exercise of judicial count in the count is an exercise of judicial count in the count is an exercise of judicial count in the count is an exercise of judicial count in the count is an exercise of judicial count in the count is an exercise of judicial count in the count is an exercise of judicial count in the count is an exercise of judicial count in the count is an exercise of judicial count in the count is an exercise of judicial count in the count is an exercise of judicial count in the count is an exercise of judicial count in the count in the count is an exercise of judicial count in the count in the count is an exercise of judicial count in the count in the count is an exercise of judicial count in the count in th ers, the count being a judicial act. The count is an exercise of judicial power. The honorable gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Hunton] has put this matter so plainly and truly that the honorable gentleman from New Jersey himself acknowledged promptly that he would count the sheep and not the goats. Therefore he would count the votes, not anything falsely pretending to be a vote. There can be no other force in the gentleman's acceptance of that illustration but that he recognizes perfectly well that it is votes that are to be counted; and although he may differ with the gentleman from Virginia as to whether it is the Vice-President or Congress that should count. he recognizes that the count is to be made. count, he recognizes that the count is to be made.

And now when driven to cover, when driven absolutely to the necessity of putting this power either upon Congress or upon the Vice-President, the gentleman from New Jersey says, and says it reluctantly, that he thinks this is the duty of the Vice-President. Let me say to him that in sheltering himself behind the opinion of Chancellor Kent he does great injustice to Chancellor Kent in the manner in which he has stated the law, because Chancellor Kent made no such claim of power as the gentleman from New Jersey has made in this last stage of the argument. Chancellor Kent states that there must be acknowledged a case of omission; that the Constitution does not expressly declare by whom the votes are to be counted and the result declared; and that he presumes, in the absence of legislation, the President of the Senate should count the vote, it being, however, the right of Congress to pass a law which would enable an officer of the Government or a department of the Government (whether the Leg-islature or the Vice-President alone) to exercise this function intelligently; but that as Congress has not passed such a law, and as the Vice-President is named as the party to open the certificates, it is presumed that if there be occasion to judge between votes he is to

Vice-President is named as the party to open the certificates, it is presumed that if there be occasion to judge between votes he is to be the judge.

Mr. ROBESON. And that is just what I say.

Mr. McLane. I bring the gentleman down now to that position.

Mr. ROBESON. I appeal to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HUNTON] whether I did not answer his questions, and say—

Mr. HUNTON. That the Vice-President has a right to decide?

Mr. ROBESON. Did I not say just this: that in the absence of any tribunal provided by law, the decision of the Vice-President, acting in a ministerial capacity, must stand—

Mr. HUNTON. Upon a question of law.

Mr. ROBESON. As the action of the Government.

Mr. HUNTON. Upon a judicial question.

Mr. ROBESON. That is what I said. Why, then, does the gentleman from Maryland accuse me of misquoting Chancellor Kent?

Mr. McLane. Mr. Speaker, I accuse the gentleman from New Jersey, not of misquoting Chancellor Kent, but of doing that which is common to him, as it is to all the honorable gentlemen of his profession—to state no more—oftentimes much less, but certainly no more—of a judicial opinion he is quoting than serves the purpose of his argument, leaving to the intelligent observation of his opponent to supply the deficiency which he chooses to leave in his argument.

Now a word more on this point of ministerial function. The Constitution imposes upon the Vice-President a ministerial duty in express terms, as the gentleman from New Jersey argues; but he fails to state what that ministerial duty is. It is expressly stated to be that he shall open the certificates. If the gentleman from New Jersey had read from the Constitution that phrase he would not have had occasion to argue whether or not he should count the votes. The ministerial function is to open the certificates, and that the vote shall then be counted, and that the two Houses shall each perform the ministerial function is to open the certificates, and that the vote shall then be counted, and that the two Houses shall each perform the functions that devolve upon them. Now, precisely as he has stated more for Chancellor Kent than he has any right to do in this argument he has stated less for the Constitution than it was his duty to state. If he refers to that Constitution at all as conferring a ministerial was not appeared by the Desident it is desident in the state. terial power upon the Vice-President, it is due to us who seek conterial power upon the Vice-Fresident, it is due to us who seek construction from him that he should give us the letter of the Constitution, and not any picture which he may be pleased to paint.

Mr. ROBESON. Is the gentleman through?

Mr. McLANE. I am not only through, but I beg the gentleman from New Jersey to pardon me for trespassing in making the inquiry why he did not answer the question of the gentleman from Virginia; because he, far better than I, knows he has not answered that question.

Mr. ROBESON. It is difficult, Mr. Speaker, for any man clothed only with the power of human language and imperfect expression to answer fully the desires, if not the expectation, of every one who questions him. I have endeavored, in my poor way, to answer fully and completely the question of every man who has seen fit to propound one to me—not because I believe I have strength to stand alone against the united force of all the gentlemen who seek to attack this proposition, but because I remember the saying of the great poetic philosopher of our language-

Thrice is he arm'd, that hath his quarrel just; And he but naked, though lock'd up in steel. Whose conscience with injustice is corrupted.

Now, my friends, let me answer again at length, and if I do not do it fully let me be again called to account. And in order that there may be no question about proper quotation let me read from the Con-

The electors, after having east their votes, shall make distinct lists of all persons voted for as President, and all persons voted for as Vice President, and the number of votes for each, which they shall sign and certify, and transmit, sealed, to the seat of the Government of the United States, directed to the President of the Noveton

Let me, in the first place, reply to the pointed and very clear question of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. Cox.] Suppose the list transmitted should be opened on its way and a wrong one substituted? I say that under the Constitution and the laws of the United States that case has been provided for by every means which the prejudgment and precaution of men could take, for duplicate and triplicate lists, if I am not mistaken, are provided to be sent by different means and under different sanctions, each of which corrects the other and informs upon that point the ministerial judgment of the Vice-President.

Vice-President.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. But suppose they are all alike wrong.

Mr. ROBESON. Suppose the sky should fall, we should then catch larks. There must be some limit to doubting.

Mr. ATHERTON. But that does not answer the gentleman's question. Suppose one is changed and the other not, how will you determine which is changed and which is not?

Mr. ROBESON. I say they come with duplicate information to Mr. ROBESON. I say they come with duplicate information to inform the ministerial judgment of the Vice-President. The Constitution provides that he shall decide. He is empowered to open the certificates by the Constitution and affirmatively so empowered and directed. There is no doubt about that. There is no mere implication there; and, as a ministerial officer acting prima facie, he must decide in the first instance, and in the absence of any tribunal judicially to determine and overthrow his decision, as Chancellor Kent says, it is to be presumed his decision will stand. All ministerial officers (and I cannot state the question any more clearly, and if gentlemen doubt the proposition, then they differ from me on a question of law) all ministerial officers, upon whom imposed by law the execution of any ministerial duty must in the first instance decide for themselves what are the matters committed to their duty and action, and in the absence of a judicial tribunal and judicial action to overthrow it it stands as the law until overthrown. But it is not to overthrow it it stands as the law until overthrown. But it is not a judicial power. There can be no doubt of that power in the Vice-President because the Constitution says the President of the Senate shall, in the presence of the Senate and House of Representatives, open all the certificates. It is a ministerial power given to him, imposed upon him, which he cannot shirk while he performs his constitutional duty, directly given to him without implication.

Mr. DAVIS, of North Carolina. Will the gentleman let me ask him a question in that connection?

Mr. ROBESON. Certainly.

Mr. DAVIS, of North Carolina. Assuming that the President of the Senate has the right to open and count the votes, and that the two Houses are convened here for the purpose of witnessing that count, and as witnesses only, suppose that when the President of the Senate opens the returns for Louisiana, for instance, as he did in 1876, some gentleman, aware of the fact, should get up here and say, "Mr.

Senate opens the returns for Louisiana, for instance, as he did in 1876, some gentleman, aware of the fact, should get up here and say, "Mr. President, two of those names I know to be forged," as they undoubtedly were—we all admit that now, but it was not known to members of the House then—suppose, I say, a member of this House, one of the persons called to witness the counting of the votes, should rise and say, "Mr. President, two of those names are forged;" and suppose it is known to all the Senators and all the Members on this floor that they were forged, would the Vice-President then have the right to say, "I count those names," we being made involuntarily the witnesses and certifying to a forgery and a falsehood?

Mr. ROBESON. If it is admitted they are forged, if he knows them to be a forgery, he of course would exercise his ministerial power of discriminating and would not open these certificates.

Mr. DAVIS, of North Carolina. But that is not my question, whether he would open them if he knew they were forged. That does not answer my question.

whether he would open them if he knew they were forged. That does not answer my question.

Mr. ROBESON. The witnesses could testify to the fact before any tribunal which was authorized to decide it, but the witnesses would not be authorized to decide it themselves, because it would be the exercise of a judicial power which they do not possess.

Mr. DAVIS, of North Carolina. If the gentleman's position be correct, then the Vice-President would declare the fact, and there is no power to set it aside even though the witnesses be aware of the incorrectness or fraudulent character of the certificate.

Mr. WARNER. Where would be the power or what is the tribuexecutive approval, without the assent of the co-ordinate branch of the Government, and without debate, under the operation of the previous question. It does not lie in your mouth, gentlemen, to say "We refuse to provide a tribunal" and then assume power ourselves which you have not under the Constitution, because there ought to be some tribunal, and we have provided none. Why do you make a virtue of your own remissness and attempt to provide for it in this way † Answer that point, some of you, if you can.

Mr. ATHERTON. It would be time enough then to commence fill-bustering.

Mr. ROBESON. Who dares to say that I am filibustering or that I am meeting this question in any other way than in a constitutional manner?

Mr. SPRINGER. Your side filibustered yesterday.
Mr. DAVIS, of North Carolina. I wish to ask the gentleman another question, and that is, if you had known that the signatures of Levissee and his associate, whose name I have forgotten, to the Louisiana returns were forgeries, would you have been willing to witness the count and certify to its accuracy by your presence?
Mr. ROBESON. I would have been willing to witness whatever took place under the laws and the Constitution in reference to the counting of the electoral yote.

took place under the laws and the Constitution in reference to the counting of the electoral vote.

Mr. DAVIS, of North Carolina. And you would have approved of the false certificate, being aware of the fact that it was a forgery?

Mr. ROBESON. The gentleman from North Carolina assumes that because a wrong is done we are the persons authorized by the Constitution and the laws to right it. That is just where the mistake is. Where is the power given to Congress to right it? Who gives it to them? Is it contended that the mere limited expression of the Constitution that the votes shall then be counted gives to Congress. stitution that the votes shall then be counted gives to Congress, assembled in joint convention, the right to be a judicial tribunal?

Mr. ATHERTON. The very purpose of this resolution is to provide for it

Mr. ROBESON. I say where is the power given to Congress to so provide in the face of the Constitution which says all judicial power of this kind shall reside in the courts and tribunals to be established by law?

When gentlemen admit this to be a judicial question then they have

When gentlemen admit this to be a judicial question then they have waded into deep water. The very moment they admit it is a judicial question they foreclose Congress in joint assembly from either questioning or determining it. I advise them to go back from that position if they would save themselves.

Now, my friend from Maryland has said that Congress has other than the legislative powers. I admit it. But the gentleman does not fairly quote my proposition. I said Congress had no inherent powers except legislative powers; that all its inherent powers belonged to it as a legislative powers but that belonged to it as a legislature and were legislative powers, but that all its other powers were given to it by express commandment of the Constitution, or else it did not have them at all. But the gentleman has said they have other powers. True. But no other powers which are not given by the Constitution. For instance they have power—I read from the Constitution itself:

Each House may determine the rules of its proceedings.

That is a separate power.

May punish its members for disorderly conduct, and, with the concurrence of two-thirds, expel a member.

Then they have also, in consistence with other powers as a legislative body, the power to protect themselves in their legislative functions; but this belongs to them as a legislative assembly. I have said in starting that the power of self-preservation inheres in all bodies of government, as it belongs to all individuals; and Congress has the power to punish contempt outside when it interferes with its duties as a legislative body. It has that inherent power as a legislative body. But, Mr. Speaker, I did not take the floor to-day for the purpose of

But, Mr. Speaker, I did not take the floor to-day for the purpose of going over the whole field of constitutional and governmental powers. What I meant to say was that this resolution undertakes to decide by mere rule, and not by legislation—by rule which has no force except under the provision that each House shall make rules to determine the course of its own proceedings—this important constitutional question; that it seeks to evade that clause in the Constitution which provides that every law shall before it goes into force receive the assent of the Executive, and that other clause which provides that—

Every order, resolution, or vote to which the concurrence of the Senate and House of Representatives may be necessary (except on a question of adjournment) shall be presented to the President of the United States; and before the same shall take effect, shall be approved by him, or being disapproved by him, shall be repassed by two-thirds of the Senate and House of Representatives, according to the rules and limitations prescribed in the case of a bill.

Every order, resolution, or vote, except on a question of adjournment, and except taken under the power to make rules determining their own procedure, shall be submitted to the President. Every order, resolution, or vote which affects outside interests or carries out constitutional duties, or has any effect beyond the mere ordering of legislative procedure, shall be presented to the President. I have also cited the anomalies of the resolution itself, showing that in its own Mr. WARNER. Where would be the power or what is the tribular language and of its own force it is and must be unconstitutional in one clause or the other. That is a proposition which no man can deny. Let me repeat that this power, if it exists, is a constitutional power of it is a constitutional power are through Congress a mere rule passed by the two Houses, without the concurrence of both Houses. If it is a constitutional power to accept, it requires the concurrence of both Houses. But this rule provides that the action of one House shall accept or reject. How do you escape from it? If it is a constitutional power, it is a constitutional duty; it cannot be limited.

Now, Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I am sorry that I have consumed so much of the time of the Congress and of the country in the discussion of this important question. It is easy to make a long speech. It is hard to make a short one. I have indulged in the freedom of a long speech. I fear that it may have lacked the point which it should have had, but if that is its fault, I must appeal to the generosity of my friends on the other side to excuse me under the extraordinary circumstances. I thank the gentlemen on the other side for the easy questions which they have propounded, the frankness with which they have made their interrogations, and the courtesy with which they have received my weak and impotent replies.

with which they have received my weak and impotent replies. [Loud applause.]

Before I take my seat, I desire to give notice that when the proper time comes I shall move the following resolution as a substitute:

Resolved, That the two Houses will assemble in the Chamber of the House of Representatives on the second Wednesday of February, 1881, at twelve o'clock, and the President of the Senate shall be the presiding officer; that two persons shall be appointed tellers on the part of the Senate and two on the part of the House of Representatives, to make a list of votes as they shall be declared; that the result shall be delivered to the President of the Senate, who shall announce the state of the vote and the persons elected, to the two Houses assembled as aforesaid which announcement, together with a list of the votes, shall be entered on the Journals of the two Houses.

Mr. ATKINS. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. ATKINS. I move that the House do now adjourn.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. REAGAN. Before the question is taken on the motion to adjourn, I will, with the permission of the Chair, give notice to the House that as soon as the debate is closed upon the pending resolution, I shall ask the House to take up the special order and dispose of the bill (H. R. No. 4748) to establish a board of commissioners of interstate commerce, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. WARD, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the following title when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 3191) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to dispose of a part of the Fort Dodge military reservation to actual settlers under the provisions of the homestead laws, and for other purposes.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Burch, its Secretary, informed the House that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. No. 193) to provide for the disposition of the Fort Larned military reservation;

A bill (S. No. 1519) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide additional regulations for homestead and pre-emption entries of public lands;"

A bill (S. No. 1734) for the relief of S. Rosenfeld & Co.; and A bill (S. No. 1839) for the relief of Henry P. Rolfe.

FUNDED DEBT OF THE DISTRICT.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, relative to a deficiency in the appropriation for the current fiscal year for interest and sinking fund on the funded debt of the District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

NATIONAL BOARD OF HEALTH.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House a letter from the Scretary of the Treasury, transmitting reports of the operations and expenditures of the National Board of Health for the quarters ended June 30, 1880, and September 30, 1880; which was referred to the Committee on Epidemic Diseases, and ordered to be printed.

ESTIMATES OF MISSISSIPPI RIVER COMMISSION.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting estimates of the Mississippi River commission; which was referred to the Committee on Levees and Improvements of the Mississippi River.

MINERVA STEWART.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, relative to the claim of Minerva Stew-art; which was referred to the Committee on War Claims.

WASHINGTON MONUMENT.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House the annual report of the joint commission for the completion of the Washington Monument; which was referred to the Joint Committee on the Li-

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted, as follows: To Mr. Ward, until Wednesday next; To Mr. Wright, for two weeks; and To Mr. Persons, for ten days, on account of sickness.

RAILROAD LANDS IN MICHIGAN.

6525) to declare certain lands granted to the State of Michigan to aid in the construction of railroads forfeited to the United States, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

The motion of Mr. Atkins was then agreed to; and accordingly (at three o'clock and forty minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and other papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows, viz:

By Mr. ATKINS: The petition of Mary E. Groomes, widow of John C. Green, for a pension for herself and children—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BALLOU: The petition of Theodore D. Woolsey and others, representing the industries connected with the book and printing trade, for the passage of a bill extending the privilege of copyright in the United States to foreign authors, composers, and designers—to the Committee on the Library.

By Mr. BELTZHOOVER: The petition of citizens of Hanover, Pennsylvania, for the increase of pensions to soldiers who have lost limbs in the service—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. COLERICK: Papers relating to the pension claim of George Otis—to the same committee.

By Mr. COX: The petition of Captain Jonas B. Levy, that Congress order the payment of certain sums of money due him by the Government of Mexico, which were provided to be paid him by the treaty of Guadeloupe Hidalgo, July 4, 1848—to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Also, the petition of Jacob Weidenmann, for compensation for plans prepared and furnished, as a landscape engraver, for laying out the Hot Springs reservation in Arkansas—to the Committee on Claims. By Mr. CRAPO: Papers relating to the claim of Captain Horatio Brightman, of Fall River, Massachusetts, for compensation for the loss of the schooner Mary Mershon, on the night of October 17, 1872, by striking upon the foundations of the light-house being erected by the United States upon Race Rock, Long Island Sound—to the same committee.

IN SENATE.

THURSDAY, December 9, 1880.

ORVILLE H. PLATT, a Senator from the State of Connecticut, and JAMES E. BAILEY, a Senator from the State of Tennessee, appeared in their seats to-day.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. J. Bullock, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

Mr. STONE, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. building at Jackson, in the State of Mississippi, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds

The joint resolution (H. R. No. 338) directing one copy of Con-GRESSIONAL RECORD to be sent to each of our legations abroad was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Printing.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of War, submitting certain correspondence relative to the purchase of the private papers of the late Generals Bragg and Polk; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of State, transmitting, at the request of Madame Thiers, two additional volumes (VIII and IX) of the speeches of M. Thiers, for the library of the Senate.

The volumes were ordered to be placed in the library of the Senate.

WASHINGTON MONUMENT.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from W. W. Corcoran, chairman of the joint commission for the completion of the Washington Monument, transmitting, in compliance with the act of Congress of August 2, 1876, the annual report to the commission of Lieutenant-Colonel Thomas L. Casey, engineer in charge of the construction of the monument, and recommending an appropriation for continuing the work on the same during the ensuing year; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

TREASURY ACCOUNTS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, in compliance with the usual custom, a copy of the Treasurer's account rendered to and adjusted by the Sixth Auditor of the Treasury for the fiscal year which ended

June 30, 1880.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The communication with the accompanying documents, which are very voluminous, will be submitted to the Committee on Printing for its views as to the propriety of printing.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, in compliance with the requirements of section 311 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, fair and accurate copies of the accounts rendered to and set-tled with the First Comptroller for the fiscal year which ended June 30, 18e0.

 The VICE-PRESIDENT. A like disposition of these documents will be made as in the last case.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. ANTHONY. I present the petition of Andrew Reynolds Arnold, of Newark, New Jersey, setting forth that he is the inventor of a valuable machine for automatically making twist-drills, that through circumstances beyond his control he has received no benefit from the invention, and praying for the extension of his letters-patent. I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on Patents. The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ANTHONY presented the petition of Annie K. Spencer, daughter of Thomas Spencer, a soldier of the revolutionary war, praying to be allowed a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. WALLACE presented the petition of V. C. Sweatman and five others, brewers of Philadelphia, praying for the passage of the bill changing the duty on barley malt from an ad valorem duty of 20 per cent. to a specific duty of twenty-five cents per bushel; which was referred to the Committee on Finance. Mr. ANTHONY. I present the petition of Andrew Reynolds Arnold, mr. HAMLIN presented a petition of citizens of Unity, Maine, praying that a pension be granted to Mary A. Mitchell and Jesse Mitchell for services rendered by their son, Eugene W. Mitchell, deceased, during the late war, as teamster; which was referred to the Committee on Pensious.

Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PADDOCK presented the petition of Theodore D. Woolsey, of New Haven, Connecticut; Edward Everett Hale, of Roxbury, Massachusetts; J. G. Holland, of New York, and many others, representing industries connected with the book-printing trade of the United States, praying for the passage of a bill which shall extend the privilege of copyright in the United States to foreign authors, convergence and delivery which was referred to the Countries. composers, and designers; which was referred to the Committee on the Library.

Mr. EATON presented the petition of Jacob Weidenmann, landscape engineer and architect, praying compensation for plans prepared and furnished in connection with the Hot Springs reservation; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. JONAS presented additional evidence in the matter of the claim of W. W. Handlin, of New Orleans, Louisiana, praying compensation for services as judge of the third district court of New Orleans, to which he was appointed by the governor of that State; which, together with the papers on the files relating to the case, was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. KERNAN asked, and by unanimous consent obtained leave to introduce a bill (8. No. 1880) granting a pension to Mrs. Ellen M. Boggs, widow of William Brenton Boggs, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. WITHERS (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1881) to provide for the judicial determination of pension claims against the United States, and cial determination of pension claims against the United States, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. VEST asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1882) to amend section 3734 of the Revised Statutes, and to provide for the erection of public buildings by contract with the lowest bidders; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. COCKRELL asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1883) for the relief of Lieutenant John A. Payne, Nineteenth Infantry, United States Army; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. COCKRELL. This bill was introduced at a former session of

Mr. COCKRELL. This bill was introduced at a former session of this Congress, and was reported adversely by the Committee on Military Affairs, for the reason that no evidence, no petition, and no state-ment of facts had accompanied the bill. That ground is set forth in the report made by the Senator from Pennsylvania, [Mr. CAMERON.] I ask to have referred, with the bill which I now introduce, the petition of Lieutenant Payne, the proceedings of the board of survey, a schedule of the property, and the proper evidence to sustain the claim, which I move be referred with the bill to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MORGAN asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1884) to allow marshals and deputy marshals to take bonds in certain cases, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judi-

LITTLE ROCK ARSENAL.

Mr. GARLAND submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved. That the Committee on Military Affairs be instructed to inquire whether the United States arsenal buildings and grounds at Little Rock, Arkansas, be not one of "the posts of but slight value for military purposes, owing to the changed condition of the country and the occupation of which is continued at great expense and inconvenience," referred to in the President's last annual message to Congress; and if the same cannot with proper regard to the service be disposed of to the State of Arkansas, and if so, upon what terms; and that the committee report by bill or otherwise.

CIVIL SERVICE REFORM.

Mr. PENDLETON submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved. That so much of the President's message as refers to a reformation of the civil service system of the Government, including the appointment to, promotion in, and removal from office; the relation of members of Congress with respect to appointment to office by the President, and the absolute freedom of official subordinates in refusing all demands upon their salary for political purposes, and in resisting all attempts to coerce their political action, be referred to the Select Committee to examine the several branches of the Civil Service, with instructions to report at an early day, by bill or otherwise.

EDUCATIONAL FUND.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I desire to give notice that on Tuesday next, after the morning hour, I shall ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. No. 133) to establish an educational fund and apply a portion of the proceeds of the public lands to public education, and to provide for the more complete endowment and support of national colleges for the advancement of scientific and industrial education. education.

MARY A. LORD.

MARY A. LORD.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The regular order of the morning is the unfinished business of the Senate of yesterday.

Mr. HARRIS. I call for the regular order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The regular order is demanded.

Mr. PADDOCK. Day before yesterday I asked of the Senate unanimous consent that the Senate should on this day proceed to the consideration of an important bill for my State, which has been recommended by the Interior Department, and unanimously recommended by the Committee on Indian Affairs, for the reason that I am obliged to leave the Senate in a few days, and I desire very particularly if the Senate the Senate in a few days, and I desire very particularly if the Senate approves of the bill that it should be passed soon.

Mr. HARRIS. I would say to the Senator from Nebraska that it cannot take much time to consider the bill which is the unfinished business. I shall most cheerfully consent to the consideration of the bill that the Senator desires taken up so soon as the unfinished business shall be completed, but I desire to proceed to the consideration of that bill. Mr. PADDOCK.

Mr. PADDOCK. That is entirely satisfactory.
Mr. INGALLS. I do not know that I have any objection to the consideration of the bill that the Senator from Tennessee desires to call up, but I feel called upon to protest against the assumption that it can be considered as the unfinished business. The bill was taken up can be considered as the unfinished business. The bill was taken up during the morning hour yesterday on the request of the Senator from Indiana, [Mr. Voorhees,] and it has been the uniform practice of the Senate that when the Senate adjourns under those circumstances such a bill falls and takes its place on the Calendar. There was evidently a mistake in putting the bill upon the Calendar as the unfinished business, and I call attention to the fact merely as a parliamentary

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Kansas is right.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Kansas is right. The bill not having been a special order for yesterday, and being unacted upon during the morning hour, it fell, of course, with the day.

Mr. HARRIS. The bill was taken up after the completion of the morning business and after several other bills had been taken up, considered, and passed, and was the unfinished business when the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. So the Secretary informs the Chair. If that he can it is now in order.

that be so, it is now in order.

Mr. PADDOCK. Under the order made in reference to my bill, day before yesterday, I consider that I am entitled to the floor; but un der the circumstances, if I have any rights under that order, I yield them to my friend from Tennessee with the understanding that he has indicated.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 742) for the relief of Mary A. Lord. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Mary A. Lord, widow of Henry E. Lord, late captain of Company G of the Thirty-seventh Regiment Indiana Volunteers, the sum of $2,160; being the amount due Henry E. Lord as a pension from the date of his resignation in the Army on the — day of March, 1864, until February 26, 1873, the time of his death. his death.

Mr. INGALLS. Let the report be again read. The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. WITH-ERS March 2, 1880:

The Committee on Pensions, having examined the bill (S. No. 742) for the relief of Mary A. Lord, finds that, as the widow of Captain Henry E. Lord, of Company G. Thirty-seventh Regiment Indiana Volunteers, she has been receiving a pension at the rate of $20 per month, with $2 additional for each of two children, since the 20th of February, 1873. The bill proposes to pay her at the same rate from March 22, 1864, the date of her busband's resignation in the Army, to the 26th of February, 1873, the time of his death.

The testimony shows that Captain Lord entered the service in 1861 and resigned in 1864 because of physical disability from disease of the kidney, on certificate of regimental surgeon; that immediately after his resignation he came into the service of the United States sanitary commission in New York, and remained in said service until a short time before his death in 1873; that he never appplied for a pension.

The claimant was married to Captain Lord May 10, 1865, and after his death, to wit, December 26, 1874, made application for and succeeded in obtaining a pension, as before stated, from the date of Captain Lord's death. As her husband never applied for a pension, his widow cannot, under the rulings of the Department, be allowed arrears under the act of January 25, 1879, granting arrears of pension from the date of disability. The bill proposes to allow it.

The committee is of opinion that arrears ought not to be allowed in any case where no claim was filed by the party claiming to be disabled, and especially to cover a period prior to the marriage of the claimant to the officer, and therefore recommends the indefinite postponement of the bill.

Mr. HARRIS. It was at my suggestion that this bill was placed upon the Calendar when the adverse report was submitted by the Committee on Pensions. I asked that it be so placed, because after a careful examination of the facts and the law I was then satisfied, as I am now, that there is no case in which arrears of pension have been paid to the widow of a soldier more meritorious than the one now under consideration.

The report of the committee is based upon a ruling of the Commissioner of Pensions, and, as I think, an erroneous ruling; but if his construction of the arrears-of-pension act be the true one, then the act itself is unjust and wrong, because it discriminates between persons who occupy precisely the same relation to the Government and have the same measure, extent, and character of claim upon the Government. To illustrate, take the case of two soldiers standing in line of battle; they are each stricken down and seriously wounded by the same discharge of grape or canister: they are on the same by the same discharge of grape or canister; they are on the same day discharged from service by reason of disability occasioned by their wounds; each lives for a few years and dies from the wounds received upon the occasion referred to. One of these soldiers filed an application for a pension, having done nothing more than file a simple paper saying that he desired to be pensioned, while the other, from motives of liberality, generosity, or from a mere freak of disposition, failed to file such application. The widow of each of those soldiers may have devoted, as in this case the widow of this soldier did devote, the best years of her life to aiding in the maintenance, support, and care of a disabled and invalid husband, whose disability was accordingly by the same party and the maintenance of the same party and the sa ity was occasioned by disease contracted in the service. The widow of each of these soldiers may have devoted the best years of her life to caring for and aiding in the support of a disabled and invalid husband. When both husbands have died the widow of the soldier who filed his application is entitled to a pension from the day the soldier was discharged, while the widow of the soldier who failed to file an application is denied the pension except from the day of the death of the soldier.

Now, I defy the members of the Committee on Pensions, or any other gentleman, to point out the difference between the claim of the widows of the two soldiers referred to. The relation of each of those widows is precisely the same to the Government, and the claim of each of them upon the Government is precisely of the same character and to the same extent. Yet under the law, as construed by the Commissioner of Pensions, upon which construction the Committee on Pensions base this report, the one widow would be entitled to a pension from the day the soldier was discharged from service, while the other widow would be denied the pension until the day of the death

The bill provides only for giving to this claimant the accrued pension from the day the soldier was discharged on account of his disability up to the day that she was pensioned after the death of the soldier. Certainly the pension should be withdrawn from the widows of each of the soldiers that I have described, or it should be extended alike to each. Every principle of equality and justice demands that the pension should be allowed to this lady under the law that has been in existence for a number of years, under which thousands and the pension should be allowed to this lady under the law that has been in existence for a number of years, under which thousands and thousands of widows bearing exactly the same relation to the Government that she bears, and having no higher or other claim upon the Government than the claim that she has, have been pensioned from the day the disability occurred or from the day of the disability occurred or from the day of the disability occurred or from the day of the disability occurred or from the day upon its passage as a measure of absolute justice to the claimant.

Mr. WITHERS. Mr. President, it fell to my lot as a member of the arr. WITHERS. Air. President, it relit to my lot as a memoer of the Committee on Pensions to investigate the claim under consideration. The facts which I ascertained upon that investigation I embodied in the report which accompanies this bill. I feel compelled to differ in toto with the conclusions of the Senator who has just addressed you as to the manifest injustice which has been done this claimant by rejecting her claim. I recognize that there is a distinction between the two cases which he mentioned far greater than he would have jecting her claim. I recognize that there is a distinction between the two cases which he mentioned far greater than he would have the Senate believe. He assumes that the construction which the Commissioner of Pensions and the Committee on Pensions placed upon the law discriminates between two persons occupying precisely the same position with regard to the Government. I say that there is a distinction, and a broad one. The distinction is that in the one case a pension was applied for and in the other case no application was made; and in my view it constitutes a wide and a broad mark of distinction between the two cases; and those who have failed to make any application to the Government for relief, either as pensioners or as claimants, cannot come forward afterward and claim that ers or as claimants, cannot come forward afterward and claim that they have been treated unjustly because the Government refused to accord them a claim which has never been filed against it.

More than that, sir, in this particular instance we find from the recorded history of the case that, although Captain Lord was discharged from the service upon a surgeon's certificate of disability for disease, about a year afterward it appears his health had recovered sufficiently to enable him to enter the married state and assume ered sufficiently to enable him to enter the married state and assume all the duties and responsibilities of taking charge of a family; that he married and lived in the service of the Government for eight years afterward, and never having applied for a pension, never having felt the disability sufficient, as appears from the evidence, to make application for that relief to the Government which is accorded to all those who have been disabled in its service, now after his death his widow makes application for a pension. It is granted her, and she is in the enjoyment of it from the date of the death of her husband after he left the service, up to the present moment and now band after he left the service, up to the present moment, and now asks for arrears of pension which shall date back to the period of his discharge from the service for disability—a period antecedent to the marriage of the officer to the claimant.

I do not wish, Mr. President, to protract the discussion upon this nestion.

Mr. HARRIS. If the Senator from Virginia will allow me, I neglected to state, and I therefore ask him to state if the fact is not that if Captain Lord had one hour before his death filed an application for a pension, the arrears provided for in this bill would have been paid to his widow. Would she not have been clearly entitled to them under the law as construed by the Commissioner of Pensions and as onstrued by the Pension Committee?

Mr. WITHERS. Such is my understanding of the law; but he failed to do that. He failed to make his application, and consequently his widow is debarred from the payment of arrears of pension to which she would have been entitled had application been made.

If it be the desire of the Senate to give the construction asked by the Senator from Tennessee to the arrears-of-pension act, it is manifest injustice to make it applicable in this individual case and leave the hundreds and perhaps thousands of widows similarly situated without relief. The remedy should be applied to the whole class of claimants against whom this ruling discriminates, as the Senator alleges, and we ought to issue instructions to the Commissioner of Pensions to a state of the state of Pensions to grant arrears of pensions in all cases to widows whether their husbands applied for the benefits of the pension act or not. That would be justice; that would be equity; but to select this particular case, and require that the rulings of the Pension Office shall be set aside and nullified, and a different ruling applied to this case from that which has been applied to all others, is so manifestly unjust that I think the Senator from Tennessee will admit that the remedy should be a general and not a special one to meet the difficulty

I know, sir, how invidious is the position that I and the Pension Committee occupy in resisting these applications for pensions, and experience has taught us that we may expect that the sympathy of this body will override the law itself and every other consideration in the decision of these cases; but it was my duty as chairman of in the decision of these cases; but it was my duty as chairman of the committee and as the author of the adverse report to sustain that report by a brief recapitulation of the facts which it recites, and having done so I leave the question for the Senate to determine.

Mr. McDONALD. On the statement of the chairman of the Committee on Pensions I should certainly vote for a general bill if it was brought forward. If the Committee on Pensions would report such a bill, it seems to me it would make the law in reference to the arrearages of pensions what it was intended to be and what I think any fair and liberal construction of the law would say it is; but such a measure has not been brought before us and I see no reason why we should vote against this bill, which is simply to do justice to an individual who certainly has been hardly dealt with by the con-

As has already been stated, if an application had been made at any time before the death of the soldier, then, according to the law as it is construed by the Pension Bureau, no such act of relief as this would be required. All other conditions in the case are in favor of the applicant. She is drawing a regular pension under the law as it existed before the passage of the back pension bill, and every condition that would entitle her to arrears of pension exists except the mere fact that the wounded soldier did not make an application in his life-time. The application need not have been acted on; it was only necessary that it should reach the Pension Office to vest the widow with this right; and yet, he having failed to do that, she is cut off and others in her class. I am very free to say that if a measure to correct what I believe to be an erroneous construction of this law was brought forward, I would vote for it with great pleasure; but on this strict con-struction she and others in like situations are to be refused that relief accorded by the Government to persons no more meritorious, occupying no different relation to the Government except in the mere matter of a formal application. I shall certainly vote for this measure or for any other that tends to correct what I believe to be an erroneous ruling on the part of the Pension Bureau.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, the assumption of the Senator from Indiana that the beneficiary of this bill would have been entitled to the amount of money named herein if the application had been made before the death of her husband is entirely wrong. She has been granted a pension at the rate of $20 a month from the death of her husband. Now, the Senator from Indiana assumes—and there is the vice of the argument-that if he had made an application before his death the amount that would have been granted would have been the amount named in this bill, which is computed on the estimation that the rate of the pension granted would have been that which she re-ceived in consequence of the death of her husband, whereas it is evident from the state of facts set forth in the report that the husband of this woman, Mr. Lord, was not entitled, and could not have been entitled, to a pension of $20 a month during his life-time, because in one year after he left the Army he went into the employment of the one year after he left the Army he went into the employment of the United States Government and was engaged in the service of the Sanitary Commission up to the time of his death, and therefore he could not have been totally disabled. There was no claim, therefore, for a pension of $20 a month, and hence the assumption on which the friends of this bill ask that it shall be adopted is entirely wrong.

In order to make the bill just we should know what would have been the rate of pension that Lord would have been entitled to during highlife time and if ing his life-time, and if you are going to grant arrears, then give the amount that he would have been entitled to; but the amount named in this bill is computing back at the rate of $240 a year, which is entirely outside the provisions of the pension law. That is where the difficulty comes in in granting these arrears upon this basis.

The Commissioner of Pensions in computing the amount of arrears to be allowed takes medical testimony as to the disability of the claimant, and it is often the case that for one, two, or five years after the disability is incurred the amount allowed is merely nominal, say the disability is incurred the amount allowed is merely nominal, say one, or two, or three dollars a month, and I am informed that the average amount of arrears allowed in all cases under the law of 1879 is a little less than $1,100, which is about one-half the amount named in this bill. So that upon any theory which the friends of this measure can advance the sum named here is wrong; it is not just as a question of fact under the pension law itself; it is not just as a measure of equity under the arrears-of-pension law. There has been no state of facts presented upon which this bill can properly pass.

Mr. GARLAND. Mr. President, on looking over the report of the committee in this case, it appears that the claim was rejected on the idea that the husband of this applicant failed to make application to the Pension Office himself in his life-time; indeed, I understood from the Senator from Virginia [Mr. WITHERS] who made the report and now vindicates it, that had the husband made the application there would be no question about granting the pension. The case, then, stated differently, resolves itself into this: it is merely an application on the part of Mrs. Lord for relief against the accident of her husband not having made an application to the Pension Office during his life. That is all there is in the case. It does not appear in the proof, nor does it appear from the statement made by the Senator from Virginia, that there was any reason why the husband did not make the appli-cation; whether he did not care for the money, whether he forgot it, or whether he did not have an opportunity, or whether he was prevented from making the application; but certain it is that there is no doubt at all that had he made the application the claim would have been secured to his widow.

Mr. WITHERS. If the Senator from Arkansas will permit me, I desire to correct him to this extent: I admitted that if the applica-tion had been made by Captain Lord he would have been entitled to tion had been made by Captain Lord he would have been entitled to the benefit of the arrears-of-pension act. The arrears-of-pension act being construed in her favor to entitle her to the benefit of it would have given her the pension affixed to the degree of disability from which her husband labored at the time, and not this amount. Mr. GARLAND. As to the computation, I do not enter into that, because I presume the committee takes care of that and it was sub-ject of easy ascertainment from the facts. The best evidence of the disability of the husband is that he labored under the disability and disability of the husband is that he labored under the disability and died from it, as appears from the proof. I stand here prepared in every instance to vote for an application of this sort unless it is shown every instance to vote for an application or this sort unless it is shown that there had been on the part of the husband an express renunciation of his claim for a pension, and I am not so sure but that in cases of that sort I should vote for the widow, because these pensions are given somewhat in the nature of a homestead right that cannot be waived by the head of the family, the original party, but must be retained for the benefit of those who come after him.

This is a case that is very simple. The entire amount here claimed would have been secured according to the statement of the reserved.

would have been secured, according to the statement of the report and according to the statement of the Senator from Virginia, under the law if the husband had made the application in his life-time. This, then, is simply asking Congress now to relieve the widow because her husband did not make the application. The case is none the less worthy, none the less meritorious, because the husband failed to make the application himself. Like the Senator from Indiana, I would vote for a general bill, but I am ready to vote for this special bill.

It may be that the Commissioner of Pensions has construed this law correctly; I take no issue upon that; but this matter of pensions at last is one of generosity, while to some extent it is one of justice. It is not a fixed and unbending and unyielding rule of law that simply because a person, under the existing pension laws, is not entitled to a pension by the construction of the Commissioner of Pensions, therefore Congress should not give him a pension. Congress is the great repository of this power and should exercise it, while with due caution, at the same time with the utmost liberality toward persons

There is only the single point now at issue whether Congress should relieve this widow of this oversight, of this failure, of this accident, or whatever you choose to call it, of the husband before he died. or whatever you choose to call it, of the husband before he died. Only a few months since we had a case from West Virginia where we passed a law for a gentleman by the name of Phares, I think, right in the face of the construction of the law by the Commissioner of Pensions, and in the face of the existing law. Why? Because we thought it a just and meritorious case; we thought it a case in which Congress should exercise its sense of justice or its sense of charity, if you please, to a particular person. This is another instance of that kind, and I think a more deserving case than that, and I shall vote for it cheerfully.

for it cheerfully. Mr. INGALLS. I move to amend the bill by striking out all after the Mr. INGALLS. I move to amend the bill by striking out all after the last word "the," in line 7, and inserting the words "pension to which she would have been entitled had the said Henry E. Lord filed his application prior to his decease, deducting any payments heretofore made."

Mr. HARRIS. I have no objection to that amendment. I simply want to assert the rights of this party and not to allow a forfeiture by reason of the neglect of the husband, or failure of the husband, to file his application.

Mr. BLAIR. I should like to inquire of the mover of this amendment, or of any Senator who can give the information, in what way the rate at which payment is to be made can be ascertained. That depends upon a medical examination of a person who is now dead. No such medical examination was made in his life-time, as a matter No such medical examination was made in his life-time, as a matter of course, because no application was made. This amendment, it seems to me, will simply defeat the bill. There will never be any money paid to this widow under the bill if thus amended. I suggest to the Senator from Tennessee, who is interested in it, that he move the substitution of a certain definite amount for the indefinite phraseology of the amendment itself—say $10 per month, which is about one-half of the amount which the widow now receives, and as I understand from the Senator from Kansas $10 per month would be about the average of the arrears which have been paid to those who have been pensioned on account of disability, during their life-time. The widow now draws $20 per month. If the amendment should be atwidow now draws $20 per month. If the amendment should be attached to this bill giving her arrears at $10 a month up to the death of her husband, then she would be receiving what, according to the average of amounts paid under the operation of the law relative to arrears of pension, her husband would have received during his lifetime. That would do justice all around and meet every objection.

Mr. HARRIS. When I said a moment since that I had no objection to the arready suggested by the Senator from Karees I had not to the amendment suggested by the Senator from Kansas, I had not thought of the difficulty suggested by the Senator from New Hamp-

Mr. INGALLS. Let me suggest to the Senator from Tennessee that there is no practical difficulty.

Mr. HARRIS. If the Senator from Kansas can suggest a method by which we can arrive with absolute certainty at the arrount, so as not to defeat the object of the bill, I yield most cheerfully to the principle of the arround and the senator of the senator principle of the amendment.

Mr. INGALLS. The objection urged by the Senator from New Hampshire is not practical. The husband of this widow was discharged for a specific disability that was defined in his discharge. It is a matter of proof like any other fact. It is not necessary that he should be alive; it is not necessary to establish the fact of his pensionability or to ascertain the amount he would be entitled to receive that there should be a medical examination; but the testimony of the widow, of the neighbors, of the family physician, of those who attended upon him in his last illness is competent evidence to estab-lish the fact of the amount to which he would be entitled. All I suggest to the Senator from Tennessee is, that if this principle is to be recognized the beneficiary of this bill should be put precisely on the same foundation as others who ask for the same privilege.

Mr. HARRIS. The principle suggested by the Senator from Kan-

Air. HARRIS. The principle suggested by the Senator from Kansas I think a proper one, if there is a certain method of reaching the fact, and I assented to it the more readily because from such facts as have some to my knowledge, from this record and other sources, I was so well satisfied that it was a case either of total or so nearly approximating total disability that the difference in dollars and cents would amount to the merest trifle, if indeed there would be a difference at all. But to adopt this amendment involves the certainty of putting this claimant to the trouble and expense of hunting up the family physician, of hunting up neighbors, of hunting up witnesses and taking proof and making a new case before the Commissioner of amily physician, of hunting up neighbors, or hunting up withesses and taking proof and making a new case before the Commissioner of Pensions, when she has already the case there upon which her own pension was granted since the death of her husband, showing the degree of disability that resulted in his death.

Mr. INGALLS. The Senator evidently does not understand the facts of this case at all. All that she was obliged to establish in order to secure her pension was that this man died and that she was his wider. This entirely a different case.

widow. This is entirely a different case.

Mr. HARRIS. That he died of a cause originating in the service and while in the line of his duty.

Mr. INGALLS. Very well. Those facts remain there in evidence before the Commissioner to-day.

Mr. BLAIR. The Senator from Kansas is entirely wrong in what Mr. BLAIR. The Senator from Kansas is entirely wrong in what he urges as the manner to meet the objection I suggested. The report shows that this soldier was discharged from the Army for disability and that that disability was a disease of the kidneys. Now, no discharge and no record in the possession of the Government will show the degree of disability under which he then labored, excepting that it was sufficient to occasion his disability; and there is no instance where a pension is granted to a soldier upon his application and the disability is of the character alleged in this report until there has been an examination by the medical officer of the Pension Department in order to determine the rate of disability under which he suffers, and a pension is given accordingly. This man never made application for a pension at all. His discharge will not show the rate of disability under which he suffered and which occasioned his discharge from the service. There is no record and there is no evidence obtainable on the face of the earth, under which such an examination as he suggests can be made, for the man is in his grave. No record whatsuggests can be made, for the man is in his grave. No record what-ever exists of any examination that ever was made from which the Pension Department or any tribunal whatever can decide at what rate this pension should be granted. So, then, this amendment simply kills the bill; but an amendment giving this man's widow a pension at a certain definite sum would do justice, and no other sort of an amendment will ever result in this widow getting any pension at all, and therefore I make the suggestion to the Senator from Tennessee that he move to amend by giving a specific sum, if he designs to recognize the principle advocated by the Senator from Kansas. The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas, [Mr. INGALLS.]

The amendment was agreed to.
The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I should like to inquire of the chairman of the committee whether if the bill passes it will not give a pension to this widow for some time beyond the period when she was the wife of the deceased officer?

Certainly.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. She was not married to the deceased officer at the time of his resignation, nor for some time afterward; but I do mot know how long.

Mr. WITHERS. About a year.

Mr. HARRIS. He was discharged in March, 1864, and he was married in May, 1865.

Mr. INGALLS. The report says he resigned.

Mr. HARRIS. He was an officer and resigned under a certificate of dischlift.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. Is it the intention of the bill to give her a pension for a time when she was not the wife of the deceased officer?

Mr. HARRIS. That would be the effect of the bill. I desire to state to the Senator from Iowa that the invariable rule of the Commissioner of Pensions in respect to widows' pensions is wholly independent of the date of marriage, and in every case where arrears of pension are granted to a widow, if she is entitled to arrears they go back to the date of discharge, without regard to the date at which she was married. That is the invariable rule of the Commissioner of Pensions. It is a rule applied to every widow to whom arrears have been granted either by the general law or by special act.

Mr. BECK. I desire to ask the Senator from Tennessee, for my own guidance, whether, if this pension be granted under these circumstances, there is any possible ground on which the Senate, acting in a public capacity, can fail to give to every other widow the same

Mr. HARRIS. There is no ground on which the Senate could consistently fail to give to every widow who stands exactly as this one does before the country the same measure of relief; nor should there

Mr. BECK. It seems to me that we ought to consider carefully whether we will extend the law so as to give to every other widow this same right. We have now a pension-roll, I understand, larger than all the world besides. If we are to extend it to another great class of cases of men who were perhaps wounded eighteen years ago and married two years ago and left widows who knew all about these disabilities, and then come in for twenty years' arrears of pension, it is a matter that we ought to look into carefully. We should make a general rule if we are to go into this business.

general rule if we are to go into this business.

Mr. HEREFORD. I believe it is admitted both pro and con by the friends and opponents of this bill that under the law the widow is not entitled to this or any other sum. Then it is put on the ground of equity. It seems that there is no law for it, and it is for the Sentential of the service of the ser ate to inquire whether there is any equity in it. If so, then I think the Senate ought to yield; but if not, I think they should not. It seems to me there is neither law nor equity in this claim. Mrs. Lord is the widow of Captain Lord and comes before this body asking a is the widow of Captain Lord and comes before this body asking a pension for a disability incurred prior to the time that she was his wife. On what ground of equity can that be asked? I believe the law is plain that when a lady marries a gentleman, or a gentleman marries a lady, he or she takes the other cum onerc, for better or for worse. When she married this gentleman he was then laboring under the disability, if there was any, and she must have known it, or else he committed a fraud upon her in the marriage. He himself during his life-time as an honorable man never asked his country for a nension. He had good reasons, reasons sufficient to himself. He He had good reasons, reasons sufficient to himself. a pension. He had good reasons, reasons suncient to himself. He knew whether he ought in good conscience to have such an arrear-age of pension as this allowed him, and we must take it for granted, inage of pension as this allowed him, and we must take it for granted, inasmuch as he never asked for it, that he thought that in all good conscience he was not entitled to it. He never asked for it. Then on what ground of equity can the widow ask to receive this arrearage of pension for a disability incurred prior to her intermarriage with him? I cannot see where the equity comes in. If this wound had been received during her marriage with him, then I would go as far as the farthest to give her a pension or an arrearage of pension for the reason that the law recognizes; for the reason that she gave her husreason that the law recognizes, for the reason that she gave her husband's life, her husband's services to the preservation of her country. Not so in this case.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I notice in looking at the Book of Estimates for the coming year that our regular pension list is about $30,000,000 in round numbers for the current year; and for the coming year the Department estimates $50,000,000. I only wish to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that we are traveling very fast in legislation on pensions, adding $20,000,000 to the regular list in a single year. This year we are called on to appropriate, and Congress will appropriate, $50,000,000. Last year the amount was $30,000,000. At that rate where shall we be in ten years from now?

Mr. McDONALD. Will not this come out of the general appropriation?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I wish to say to my friend that he is mistaken about that. We appropriated for the regular list of pensioners last year about $30,000,000, and $25,000,000 to pay arrears. The $25,000,000 has been nearly exhausted. The estimates of the Secretary of the Treasury, as submitted by the Pension Bureau this year, amount to $50,000,000 in round numbers for the regular list. It is independent of the special appropriations for arrearages of pensions.

Mr. VOORHEES. Mr. President, I know this much about this case: that if the deceased had applied for a pension it would have inured to him and his wife from the date of his disability; and the fact that he did not make the application is what we propose to cure here. The argument constantly made here about how much we are paying for pensions is to a great extent lost upon me. I do not think it is money pensions is to a great extent lost upon me. I do not think it is money misapplied or wasted, and I was not prepared to hear this complaint come from the great Common wealth of West Virginia, for if I remember aright the hardest drain I have had on my conscience on the subject of pensions—and I have not been illiberal on that question—was last year on a case advocated with great zeal and ability by the Senator from West Virginia who has made the last extended argument against this claim. This claim is founded in perfect equity, and all that is sought to be done is to cure the neglect of the man in not having made the application. If he had made his application, every dollar asked for now would have gone out of the public Treasury, and nobody would have said anything about it. He died without doing it, and his widow asks that it be done for her. He died of wounds that disabled him. He lost his life in the service of the Government. She is the widow of a soldier of the war who died for his country, and I have no trouble whatever in voting for it—not half as much as I had in voting, as I did, for the bill of my distinguished friend from West Virginia at the last session. I voted for that, and I think I voted right, but I am not rearly as clear months as I am upon this. am not nearly as clear upon that point as I am upon this; and as I generally give the benefit of a doubt to pensioners and claimants for pensions, I need not say that I will give the benefit of the doubt here. Indeed, in this case I have no doubt.

On the question of ordering the bill to be engrossed for a third reading, a division was called for, and the ayes were 10 and the noes

OTOE AND MISSOURIA RESERVATION.

Mr. PADDOCK. I now call for the consideration of the bill to which I referred this morning, Senate bill No. 753.

There being no objection, the bill (S. No. 753) to provide for the sale of the remainder of the reservation of the confederated Otoe and Missouria tribes of Indians in the States of Nebraska and Kansas, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. The bill was reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and in lieu an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and in lieu thereof to insert:

That with the consent of the Otoe and Missouria tribes of Indians, expressed in open council, the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to cause to be surveyed and sold the remainder of the reservation of said Indians lying in the States of Kansas and Nebraska.

SEC. 2. That the lands so surveyed shall be appraised by three commissioners, one of whom shall be designated by said Indians in open council, and the other two by the Secretary of the Interior.

SEC. 3. That after the survey and appraisement of said lands the Secretary of the Interior shall be, and hereby is, authorized to offer the same for sale through the United States public land office at Beatrice, Nebraska, in tracts not exceeding one hundred and sixty acres, for eash, to actual settlers, or persons who shall make oath before the register or the receiver of the land office at Beatrice, Nebraska, that they intend to occupy the land for authority to purchase which they make application, and who shall within three months from the date of such application make a permanent settlement upon the same, in tracts not exceeding one hundred and sixty acres to each purchaser: *Provided, That if in the judgment of the Secretary of the Interior it shall be more advantageous to sell said lands upon deferred payments, he may, with the consent of the Indians expressed in open council, dispose of the same upon the following terms as to payments; that is to say: one quarter in cash, to become due and payable at the expiration of three months from the date of the filling of an application as hereinbefore required, one quarter in one year, one quarter in two years, and one quarter in three years from the date of sale, with interest at the rate of 6 per cent, per annum; but in case of default in the cash payment as hereinbefore required, the person thus defaulting shall forfeit absolutely his right to the tract for the purchase of which he has applied: And provided further, Tha

Mr. THURMAN. This seems to be a bill of considerable importance. I should like to have some explanation of it before I vote on it.

Mr. PADDOCK. I will state, for the information of the Senator from Ohio, that this bill is exactly the same in terms as the bill passed during the Forty-fourth Congress, under which a part of this same reservation was sold to very great advantage to the Indians and to the country. The Indians have unanimously requested at several councils that the balance of the reservation should be sold. The whole subject has been carefully investigated by the Interior Department, which has decided and advised that it should be done. The Committee on Indian Affairs thereupon have reported unanimously in favor of the passage of the bill.

The bill authorizes the sale of the lands only to actual settlers, in treats a consider a product of the lands of the lands of the lands in tracts not exceeding one hundred and sixty acres each; the lands to be appraised by a commission to be appointed by the Secretary of the Interior, one of whom shall represent the Indian tribes and shall be designated by the tribe in open council. The bill itself in all its force goes no further than to give to the Indians the option, after it shall have been passed, to consent to the sale, although they have already agreed and are very anxious to sell, and a large portion of them, almost all of them, have left the reservation and have not been on it for two years. They are the friends of another tribe elsewhere, and desire to go with them, a tribe with whom they have intermarried, and it is to their interest, and it is very much to the interest of our State. The interests are identical, and all are agreed everywhere; all who have responsibility in regard to it, all who have interests in regard to it, are agreed that it is a proper and just measure and ought

Mr. THURMAN. I did not hear from the remarks of the Senator from Nebraska what tribe of Indians it is

Mr. PADDOCK. It is the Otoe and Missouria tribe of Indians in Nebraska and Kansas. This remainder of this reservation, as the bill describes it, lies mainly in our State, but a small proportion infringes upon the State of Kansas.

Mr. THURMAN. Has a treaty been made with them for their removal?

Mr. PADDOCK. It is only an option to them to sell, but already the larger portion of the tribe has gone away from this reservation and has not occupied it for years. It is not this reservation they desire to live upon. They have relatives with another tribe in another section and desire to go with them, and in the interest of the settlement and development of our rapidly growing and prosperous State, as well as because it is best for the Indians themselves, it is important that they go, and that these fertile lands be devoted to agricultural use by those who are ready and anxious thus to utilize them.

Mr. INGALLS. For the satisfaction of the Senator from Ohio, if he desires further information, I will say that I have been long familiar with the condition of these Indians and the facts about their reservation. It is situated partly in my State, about one hundred miles west of the Missouri River, in the most thickly settled portion of two or three of the most populous counties. The Indians have abandoned it for several years and have gone mostly to the Indian Territory, and this bill provides that the Secretary of the Interior may, with the consent of the Indians first obtained in open council, proceed to have this land appraised and sold and the proceed decay. proceed to have this land appraised and sold, and the proceeds deposited in the Treasury, there to draw 5 per cent. per annum, the interest to be applied to their education and support.

Mr. THURMAN. Will my friend tell me how large this reserva-

Mr. INGALLS. I do not remember.
Mr. PADDOCK. That part which remains unsold is forty thousand acres; one hundred and twenty thousand were sold under the original act, and the tract before any part was sold contained about one hundred act.

act, and the tract before any part was sold contained about one hundred and sixty thousand acres?

Mr. THURMAN. Forty thousand acres?

Mr. PADDOCK. It is lying almost entirely vacant and is surrounded continuously by farms upon all four sides. The white people have settled up to it on every side, and it is a matter of great importance to the people that this land should be disposed of and placed where it are best its proportion of the side of the settled up to it on the settled up where it can bear its proportionate share of taxation. It is a matter of great benefit to the Indians that the lands may be sold and the proceeds put in the Treasury and the interest applied to their bene-

Mr. HEREFORD. I wish to ask the Senator from Kansas why the interest is put at 5 per cent?

Mr. INGALLS. The only reason is that the treaties heretofore made with these Indians provide that their fund shall bear that rate of in-

Mr. TELLER. I should like to ask the Senator from Kansas whether we have any treaty that recognizes these Indians as owning the fee of this land of this land?

Mr. INGALLS. Well, I do not suppose it is necessary at this time to discuss the question of eminent domain or to review the current of decisions with regard to the right of the Indians to the possession of their lands. My understanding of the policy of this Government is, that while they have been uniformly recognized merely as possessing the right of occupation, yet whenever they have been removed the Government has uniformly purchased the land of them and placed the proceeds in the Treasury for their benefit.

Mr. TELLER. I understand that Indians have simply the right of occupancy unless there is some special treaty. I have not the slightest objection to this bill passing, but I do not see the propriety of putting the money in the Treasury to the credit of the Indians. If the Indians have abandoned the land as it is said, then the property, possession and otherwise, belongs to the United States, and I think the United States should have the money to put in the Treasury to be voted out like other money belonging to the Government.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I will only add to what has been said by my colleague and by the Senator from Kansas, that this bill was very carefully and thoroughly examined by the Committee on Indian Affairs after consultation with the Interior Department on all the points that have been raised, here this morning I believe, and it was unanimously agreed to in the committee and I was authorized unanimously by the committee to report it and ask for its passage. The bill has been so thoroughly canyassed and so often before the comimously by the committee to report it and ask for its passage. The bill has been so thoroughly canvassed and so often before the committee that they felt safe in saying that it is right in all its details or as near right as we probably could perfect a bill, and therefore it ought to pass. That is all I wish to say.

Mr. PLUMB. Is this bill still subject to amendment?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is; but any amendment offered should be an amendment to the substitute of the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. PLUMB. I move to amend the amendment reported by the

Mr. PLUMB. I move to amend the amendment reported by the committee, in line 22, section 3, on page 4, by striking out the word "six" and inserting "five," so as to make the rate of interest to be paid by the settler that which according to the statement of my colleague is required by treaty to be paid to the Indians.

Mr. INGALLS. I think that is right.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] proposes to amend the committee's amendment by striking out in line 22 of section 3 the word "six" and inserting "five."

Mr. THURMAN. If that amendment prevails to strike out and insert, I am not sure whether it would be in order to still further reduce the rate of interest. I do not think it ought to be 5 per cent. I think with the Senator from West Virginia that it ought to be a lower rate of interest. lower rate of interest.

Mr. PLUMB. I will say to the Senator from Ohio that my object was to make this section correspond to the statement of my colleague that the United States was under obligation to pay these Indians 5 per cent. on this fund. I do not see the propriety in making a distinction against the settlers.

Mr. TELLER. Have we any treaty with these Indians that requires us to pay them 5 per cent.? That is the question.

Mr. THURMAN. I propose to reduce the 5 per cent., but that would be an amendment in the third degree.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That would be an amendment in the third stage. Two are already pending.

Mr. PLUMB. I will withdraw my amendment to accommodate the

Mr. PLUMB. In Senator from Ohio.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. THURMAN. I do not know whether I shall vote for this bill or not until I hear something more about it; but in order that this or not until I near something more about it; but in order that this matter may be before the Senate at once I move to strike out "six" in line 22 of section 3, and I will not move to insert any rate of interest now, but the motion to insert another rate of interest can be made subsequently.

Mr. President, I do not quite understand this bill. This bill all depends, according to the statement made, on the consent of these two tribes of Indians to be expressed in open council. Now we are told that these Indians have left this reservation and have gone, nobody seems to know where. The Senator from Kansas suggests that some of them, and perhaps the majority of them, have gone to the Indian Territory.

Mr. INGALLS. That is the case.

Mr. THURMAN. How are they to be got together in open council to express their consent?

Mr. INGALLS. They have already expressed it as a matter of fact.
Mr. THURMAN. This bill does not contemplate that any assent heretofore made is to govern. It is the consent to this bill which we shall pass, if we pass it at all, that is required. The proposition can properly never have been before them at all. For instance, they are to consent to the appraisement of their lands, to consent that they to consent to the appraisement of their lands, to consent that they may be sold either for cash or on time; to consent that the money shall be put in the Treasury, and that they shall receive such a rate of interest upon it. All these are provisions which are in this bill, and now I want to know what is the provision for getting these Indians together. They are treated as tribes. How is a council to be got together? Where is it to be held? How is the assent to be ascertained and verified? It seems to me these are considerations which we ought to know before we deprive these men of their property.

Mr. PADDOCK. I will state for the information of the Senator that some of these Indians are upon the reservation but the great body of them has gone. They are going to and from the Indian Ter-body of them has gone. They are going to and from the Indian Territory during the pleasant months of the year constantly, and when-ever it shall come to their knowledge that this authority is given for them to hold a council and determine whether they shall sell or not, the council will be held at the reservation and the Indians will be This proposition that their consent should again be required was put in on account of extreme caution and prudence, so that there could be no question whatever, although I hold in my hand two reports from the special agent sent to investigate in regard to the matter—two reports stating that two councils were held at which they determined it to be their unalterable purpose to sell, and that they must go.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I should like to ask the Senator from Nebraska whether there is any information from the Secretary of the Interior, who has charge of Indian affairs and also of public lands questions, in reference to the particular condition of this tribe?

Mr. PADDOCK. Certainly. I stated at the outset that the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs had investigated the subject and had agreed to the passage of this bill as westigated the stojet and had agreed to the passage a proper and expedient measure.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Is there anything on file from the Secretary of the Interior? If so, I should like to have it read.

Mr. PADDOCK. I think the chairman of the committee has a letter before his committee, and I have a letter here which was addressed to Senator Edmunds on the same subject.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I should like to have the letter of the Secretary of the Interior read.

Mr. PADDOCK. I send the letter to the desk to be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. COCKRELL in the chair.) The letter will be read as requested.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,

Washington, May 17, 1880.

SIR: Referring to my letter of March 9, 1880, in reply to yours of the 4th of same month calling attention to S. 753, a bill to provide for the sale of the remainder of the reservation of the confederated Otoe and Missouria tribe of Indians in the States of Neuraska and Kansas, and for other purposes, I have the honor to inclose for your information a copy of a letter from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs addressed to this Department, in which that officer says that he has no objection to the passage of the bill in its present shape.

I also inclose for your information a copy of the letter of this Department addressed to Senator Coke this day, concurring in the views of the Commissioner.

Very respectfully,

C. SCHURZ Secretary.

Hon. George F. Edmunds, United States Senate.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS, Washington, May 8, 1880.

Washington, May 8, 1880.

Six: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt, by your reference, of copies of two telegrams from Inspector Pollock, dated, respectively, May 4 and May 6, 1880, reporting result of councils held with Indians at the Otoe agency, and to inclose herewith a copy of a report of an inspection made by Inspector Pollock at the Otoe agency, with reference to the condition of affairs at that agency, dated August 31, 1879, and a copy of a supplemental report, dated August 31, 1879.

In view of the facts set forth in these several communications, if Congress deems it advisable to pass the bill in its present shape, now pending before that body, with reference to the sale of the lands of these Indians and their removal to the Indian Territory, this office will interpose no objection.

I inclose herewith copies of the telegrams referred to, together with a copy of this report.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

R. E. TROWBRIDGE,

R. E. TROWBRIDGE,

The honorable the SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.

THE WESTERN UNION TELEGRAPH COMPANY, Otoe Agency, Nebraska, May 4, 1880.

Hon. CARL SCHURZ, Secretary Interior:

Held council with entire tribe here yesterday; with one voice they asked to go to Indian Territory. All efforts to dissuade them seem unavailing. Many have already sold dishes, &c., preparing for journey; council again to-morrow.

POLLOCK, Inspector.

OTOE AGENCY, NEBRASKA, MAY 6, 1880, Received at Department Interior, May 6, 1880-1 p. m.

Hon. Carl Schurz,

Secretary Interior:

The condition of those people as set forth in my report, August 31, 1879, has not improved. They refuse to be reconciled here, and in council yesterday said they were only awaiting your ultimatum to leave. Advise me fully.

POLLOCK, Inspector.

Mr. SAULSBURY. It seems to me we have very little information as to the character of this tribe of Indians, whether it is a numerous tribe or whether it has been incorporated into other tribes or not. There is no recommendation of this bill from the Interior Department. There is no recommendation of this bill from the Interior Department. There is a simple statement that the Department do not interpose an objection if Congress deems it proper to adopt this bill. Now, as a member of the Senate, I am perfectly willing to do with the public lands what is right and proper; but I want to act intelligently, I want to cast my vote for or against this bill according to the nature of the transaction. If these Indians are a bona fide tribe occupying these lands, or entitled to them, of course they ought to have proper compensation for them. If they have become incorporated with other tribes and have lost their relations as a separate tribe, we ought to have information on that subject, none of which is contained in the papers now presented.

Mr. PADDOCK. That is a matter of record. It is well known to everybody who is at all familiar with Indian affairs that this is a distinet tribe, that it holds this land under treaty, and that it is capable of acting as a tribe. Furthermore, I will state for the information of the Senator from Delaware that it is a very small, a very insignificant tribe. There are not six hundred, all told, of the whole tribe. I know something of the character of this tribe of Indians, because most of the reservation is within my own county in the State of Nebraska, within eighteen miles of my own home, and I know all about it. And I know that it is for the interests of these Indians, as the Secretary of the Interior himself and the Commissionard Indians, as the Secretary of the Interior himself and the Commissionard Indians. Affairs retary of the Interior himself and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs do not hesitate to say, and as the record itself shows, and as the communications here demonstrate beyond any question whatever, if there was no statement by any Senator on the floor, from his own personal knowledge of the case, such as I have given to the Senate.

Mr. THURMAN. I did move to strike out "six," in line 22 of section 3. I had not seen the bill then but for a moment, and had not had time to read it. I find that that refers to the rate of interest on the first deferred payment for the land, and not to the rate that the money shall bear in the Treasury of the United States as an annuity to the Indians. I have no objection to 6 per cent. on the deferred installments, and therefore I withdraw the motion that I offered. But section 4 provides

That the proceeds of the sale of said lands shall be placed to the credit of said Indians in the Treasury of the United States, and shall bear interest at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum, which income shall be annually expended for the benefit of said Indians under direction of the Secretary of the Interior.

Unless we are bound by some treaty to pay 5 per cent.—and no such treaty has been cited that I have heard—I am not willing to pay 5 per cent., and I move to strike out "five" and insert "three."

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. COCKRELL in the chair.) The question is on the amendment just moved by the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. TELLER. Before I vote on that amendment I should like to know something about the condition of this case. I cannot learn whether this lead is held by a treaty which provides that the land should have a treaty which provides that the land should have treaty which provides that the land should have the same and the land should have the same and the same and this land is held by a treaty which provides that the land shall be this land is held by a treaty which provides that the land shall be held forever by these Indians or only while they choose to occupy it. I do not know whether there is a treaty that requires us to pay 5 per cent. upon their funds if we sell this land, or otherwise. I am willing to vote for 3 per cent. if I know there is no treaty in the way. It is stated here that there is a treaty which requires us to pay these Indians 5 per cent. Mr. PADDOCK.

Mr. PADDOCK. There is undoubtedly a treaty by which these indians hold the fee of this land. A part of these Indians were removed to my State and to Kansas from the State of Iowa, and they were so removed under a treaty, and this reservation was set aside to them by that treaty. There is no question about that. I do not think there is any requirement as to the 5 per cent. My impression is that there is any requirement as to the 5 per cent. My impression is that there is nothing in the treaty requiring any such interest to be paid on the sale of their lands. But I think there is a general law covering all such investments for and on account of Indians.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. Does the Senator know in what volume the treaty is

Mr. INGALLS. Volume 10, page 1039. The treaty was proclaimed on the 21st day of June, 1854, by Franklin Pierce, President; W. L. Marcy, Secretary of State.

Mr. TELLER. What is the provision about this land? Let us know

Mr. INGALLS. There was a supplementary treaty proclaimed on the 10th of April, 1855, the first article of which provides that—

It is agreed and stipulated between the United States and the said confederate tribes of Otoe and Missouria Indians that the initial point of their reservation, in lieu of that stated in the treaty in the caption hereof mentioned, shall be a point five miles due east thereof, thence west twenty-five miles, thence north ten miles, thence east to a point due north of the starting point and ten miles therefrom, thence to the place of beginning; and the country embraced within said boundaries shall be taken and considered as the reservation and home of said confederate tribes, in lieu of that provided for them and described in the first article of said treaty.

So that this reservation was specifically defined by metes and bounds in the treaty of 1855 and set apart as a reservation and home for the Indians. In regard to the suggestion of the Senator from Colorado, that the Indians do not possess the fee of the reservation, it is too late now to question the uniform policy of the United States through an unbroken series of decisions made by the Supreme Court through an unbroken series of decisions made by the Supreme Court that the Indians are entitled to compensation when they relinquish the lands to which they have the right of occupancy. There never has been but one instance in the history of this country where the Government has ever assumed title to Indian reservations by conquest, and that was in the State of Minnesota after the Sioux outbreak of 1862. With that single exception, where the land was taken possession of by the United States Government under the warmaking power, in every other instance where titles have been extinguished they have been by purchase, and the money has been put to the credit of the Indians into the Treasury at a stipulated rate of Mr. TELLER. I think I am quite as well aware of what the practice has been on that subject as the Senator from Kansas. Here is a statement made that these Indians have abandoned this reservation and gone somewhere else. Now it is proposed to pay them the full value of the fee, which has never been done except in extreme cases in a few instances where we had a special act that was equivalent to conferring the fee on the Indians and in the case that was passed on here at the last session with reference to the Ute Indians. That was a departure from the usual practice and the usual custom. Now, I am not very tenacious about the matter, except as this establishes a precedent. Ido not think it makes very much difference practically, though I do not know. The legislation seems to me to be a little immature. It comes here without anybody knowing what the true condition of affairs may be.

I do not propose to throw any objection in the way of the passage of the bill, for the simple reason that if the Indians have abandoned the ground it is better that it should be thrown open to the public, even if the Government suffers by it, even if the Government gives to the Indians five dollars an acre when the land is worth only two and a half. I do not propose to aid in keeping any portion of the public domain away from actual settlers, especially if it is not occupied by Indians and is not needed for their occupation; but I think it is unwise by a bill of this kind to legislate in this way without understanding what we are doing. And yet perhaps the necessity for the passage of a bill opening this land to settlement is so great that we shall all be justified in voting for the bill, immature and deficient as

Mr. THURMAN. Mr. President, I want to call the attention of my friend from Nebraska to a very great error into which he has fallen in regard to the amount of this reservation.

Mr. INGALLS. It has been diminished since that time by sales of a portion of it.

Mr. THURMAN. That was not mentioned. Mr. INGALLS. The Senator from Nebraska stated that this was a diminished reservation.

Mr. PADDOCK. I stated several times—perhaps the Senator from Ohio did not hear me—that during the Forty-fourth Congress a bill exactly the same as this was passed, except that this in one or two respects is more guarded, has greater safeguards than that, authorizing the sale of a part of that reservation. One hundred and twenty thousand acres of the reservation under that act have been sold. There remain but forty thousand acres which the Indians want to sell. That is all.

The PRESIDING OFFICIER The Mr. PADDOCK. I stated several times—perhaps the Senator from

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio to the amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. VEST. If I understand the amendment it simply reduces the rate of interest under section 4 of the bill from 5 per cent. to 3 per As I understand the provisions of the Revised Statutes in regard to the investment of money belonging to the Indians, the Secretary of the Interior is required to invest the money in bonds bearing not less than 5 per cent. interest. I presume there is no disposi-tion to speculate with the money. If the Government receives 5 per tion to speculate with the money. If the Government receives 5 per cent. the Indians ought to receive 5 per cent. Section 2096 of the Revised Statutes provides that-

The Secretary of the Interior shall invest, in a manner which shall be in his judgment most safe and beneficial for the fund, all moneys that may be received under treaties containing stipulations for the payment to the Indians annually of interest upon the proceeds of the lands ceded by them; and he shall make no investment of such moneys, or of any portion, at a lower rate of interest than 5 per cent. per annum.

If the Government receives 5 per cent, the Indians ought to have the benefit of it, and that I presume was the intention of the com-

Mr. PENDLETON. The Senator from Missouri is right in part and only in part. The provision of the law which he has read exists as to certain investments that were made prior to a year or two ago, as to certain investments that were made prior to a year or two ago, but at the last session of Congress an act was passed requiring the Secretary of the Interior whenever Indian funds should come into his hands after the passage of that law to deposit them in the Treasury, and it was provided that interest thereon should be paid semi-annually at the rate stipulated by treaty or prescribed by law. While I agree with the Senator entirely as to the propriety of keeping the rate of interest at 5 per cent. as named in the bill, I desire to correct the misapprehension into which he has fallen. If the rate of interest is reduced to 3 per cent, it will make an exception of these Indians is reduced to 3 per cent., it will make an exception of these Indians as against all other funds.

Mr. VEST. That is what I meant.

Mr. PENDLETON. The point in which I desired to correct the gentleman was as to the idea that under the law these funds would be invested in bonds at 5 per cent. interest, which would come into the Treasury. I rose merely to correct the gentleman, and to say that if the interest upon this fund is reduced to 3 per cent., it will be the single exception of an Indian fund, and I do not think that exception single exception of an Indian fund, and I do not think that exception ought to be made; but if the Government is now paying too large a rate of interest on Indian funds we should have a general reduction.

Mr. THURMAN. I was not aware, not having been on the Indian Committee, and never having looked into this matter particularly, of the state of the law. I do not want to press my ideas against members of the committee who have carefully investigated the subject, but I can see no reason in the world why the United States should pay 5 per cent. when it can borrow all the money it wants at 3 per cent. I do not see why that exception should be made in favor of these Indians. Indeed, perhaps it makes very little difference to them whether you pay 3 per cent. or 5 per cent., for very little of it ever gets to them, according to the experience of those who know more about it than I do. This money, whether it is 3 per cent. or 5 per cent., does not go to the Indians. I do not know what becomes of it. Here is a provision in perpetuity, or as long as there is any of per cent., does not go to the Indians. I do not know what becomes of it. Here is a provision in perpetuity, or as long as there is any of them left, that this money "shall be annually expended for the benefit of said Indians under direction of the Secretary of the Interior." That is what is to become of this money. Here are forty thousand acres of land, which I suppose ought to bring at least $5 if not $10 an acre.

Mr. PADDOCK. Probably $10 an acre.

Mr. THURMAN. Probably $10 an acre. That would make $400,000. Five per cent on that is $20,000 a year, which the Secretary of the Interior is to expend. How he is to expend it, whether he is to distribute it per capita to every one, old Indian and old woman and papoose and all the intermediate ages, I do not know. Whether he is to give it to a school, or for agricultural implements, or to build mills or mechanics' shops, I do not know. It is an absolute power to the Secretary of the Interior to dispose of $20,000 a year coming out of the Treasury of the United States as he at his pleasure may see fit to dispose of it. The head of a Department once said to me, when I objected to an appropriation bill that it appropriated $8,000,000 in a lump without defining what he was to do with it, that the whole $18,000,000 ought to be similarly appropriated, leaving the Secretary to do with it as he pleased. This is not so bad a case as that, but it is the same principle precisely—the money to be expended without one particle of direction. The Secretary of the Interior is authorized from year to year, just as long as anybody can be adopted into this tribe, or even if the tribe is discolved and its constituent elements become citizens of the United States holding lands in severalty, (as the policy it seems is to make them now and destroy their tribal relation,) to give away this $20,000 a year as he may prescribe. I cannot help thinking that this bill is not as well guarded as it ought

Mr. INGALLS. The Senator from Ohio does not suppose that the Secretary of the Interior would be authorized to spend any money under this bill?

Mr. THURMAN. What does section 4 provide? It reads:

That the proceeds of the sale of said lands shall be placed to the credit of said Indians in the Treasury of the United States, and shall bear interest at the rate of 5 per cent per annum, which income shall be annually expended for the benefit of said Indians under direction of the Secretary of the Interior.

Section 5 is still stronger

Mr. INGALLS. It cannot be expended by the Secretary of the Interior until he is authorized to expend it by an appropriation bill. Mr. THURMAN. And what would be the appropriation bill, if we follow the words of this bill?

Mr. INGALLS. That is for the proper committee to decide, and for the Senate.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to say, if I have the attention of the Senator from Kansas, that I do not so understand it. If this be placed not to the credit of the United States, so that it is not a sum properly in the Treasury, but is placed to the credit of the Indians, with the provision that the Secretary of the Interior may "expend such sum as may be necessary for their comfort and advancement in civilization," which is in the fifth section, still stronger than what the Senator from Ohio read, I do not understand that any appropriation is necessary

Mr. THURMAN. If the Senator from Massachusetts will read further he will find that the money which the Secretary of the Interior may expend for their comfort and advancement in civilization comes out of the principal.

Mr. HOAR. Certainly; so that my suggestion was in the line of the suggestion already made by the honorable Senator from Ohio, that the fifth section is still stronger. The fourth section authorizes a fund to be placed to the credit of the Indians, a separate fund, the income to be expended in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior and the fifth section authorizes have a support of the Interior and the fifth section authorizes him to me any next the fifth section authorizes him to me any next the fifth section authorizes him to me any next the fifth section authorizes him to me any next the fifth section authorizes him to me any next the fifth section authorizes him to me any next the fifth section authorizes him to me any next the fifth section authorizes him to me any next the fifth section authorizes him to me any next the fifth section authorizes him to me any next the fifth section authorizes him to me any next the fifth section authorizes him to me any next the fifth section authorizes him to me any next the fifth section authorizes and the fifth section authorizes him to me any next the fifth section authorizes him to me any next the fifth section authorizes are next to me and the fifth section authorizes him to me any next the fifth section authorizes him to me any next the fifth section authorizes him to me any next the fifth section authorizes him to me any next the fifth section authorizes him to me any next the fifth section authorizes him to me any next the fifth section authorizes him to me any next the fifth section authorizes him to me any next the fifth section authorizes him to me any next the fifth section authorizes him to me any next the fifth section authorizes him to me any next the fifth section authorizes him to me any next the fifth section authorizes him to me any next the fifth section authorizes him to me any next the fifth section authorizes him to me any next the fifth section authorizes him to me any next the fifth section authorizes him to me any n terior, and the fifth section authorizes him to use any part of the principal not exceeding $100,000 as he may see proper.

Mr. PLUMB. I understand that the Senator from Ohio has with-

Mr. PLUMB. I understand that the Senator from Ohio has withdrawn his amendment reducing the rate of interest.

Mr. THURMAN. I withdrew the amendment I first offered.

Mr. PLUMB. I then wish to renew the amendment which I withdrew at his request some time ago, in section 3, line 22, to strike out "six" and insert "five." I do that to make that section harmonious with the provisions of section 4.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas will withhold his amendment for a moment. The Senator from Ohio has an amendment pending which the Chair does not understand he has withdrawn.

Mr. THURMAN. Yes, sir, after what has been said by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. Vest] and my colleague [Mr. Pendleton] and the reference they have made to the state of the law, I do not want to make this an exceptional case, and withdraw the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Kansas will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 3, line 22, it is proposed to strike out "six" and insert "five;" so as to read:

In three years from the date of sale, with interest at the rate of 5 per cent. per

Mr. PLUMB. I desire to say simply that my concern about the rate of interest is for the settlers more than it is for the Indians. If the Government is going to speculate off the settlers, I hope it will do so on a greater scale than simply to collect the difference of 1 per cent. interest on the deferred payments. I think if it is the obligation of the Government to the Indian to pay him 5 per cent. the Government ought to be satisfied with exacting that amount from the settler. I have no particular interest in this bill. But a portion of this land is in the State of Kansas, and only a small portion of it, but I am reminded by the remarks that have been made concerning the discretion that is vested in the Secretary of the Interior that the last bill making appropriations for the Indian Bureau gave to him in one sum $800,000 to be expended as he wills without any limitations upon it whatever.

Mr. THURMAN. That is the example.

Mr. PLUMB. The example has not been very largely or widely followed in this bill by giving him the control of $20,000 only. Consequently, if there is to be any limitation upon the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior or any suspicion upon him that will arise in the exercise of that discretion, I think it probably should be raised at some point where a larger amount is involved.

Mr. INGALLS. I wish to make a single suggestion to the Senator from Ohio in response to the intimation he has made that money could be drawn out of the Treasury under this bill. The Constitution provides that "no money shall be drawn from the Treasury but in consequence of appropriations made by law."

Mr. THURMAN. The Senator will pardon me—
Mr. INGALLS. Therefore it appears to me that there is no possible ground for apprehension that under this bill there can be money drawn from the Treasury.

Mr. THURMAN. I did not say that money could be drawn from the Treasury without an appropriation.

Mr. INGALLS. It cannot be expended unless it is drawn.

Mr. THURMAN. I do not know how that would be. That would require an investigation of the statutes in regard to Indian funds, which I have not made; but if we make this bargain with these Indians that the interest is to be appropriated for their benefit in this way, it is equivalent to an appropriation, and you are bound to make an appropriation for the express and specific purpose.

Mr. INGALLS. That may be; but it could not be drawn under this bill.

Mr. THURMAN. You would have to make an appropriation of $20,000 to carry out this agreement; and in regard to its being only $20,000, you will find that the fund here is a perpetual fund, and it will go on until there are no more of these Indians; and there will be plenty adopted into the tribe to perpetuate it forever as long as $20,000 a year is to be drawn. It may amount to a million dollars in

Mr. SAUNDERS. Mr. President, I have no objection personally to the amendment that is offered by the Senator from Kansas, [Mr. Plums,] to strike out "six" and insert "five" as the rate per cent. to be paid by the purchaser. The only objection probably that can be raised to it is that 6 per cent. has been the uniform rate fixed in all these bills so far as I know. At any rate 6 per cent, was fixed by the bills, so far as I know. At any rate, 6 per cent. was fixed by the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs as the amount to be paid by all other purchasers, and that rate of interest was specified in the act under which one part of this same reservation has been sold, and the purchasers are now paying 6 per cent. It seems to be probably unjust to make one part of the purchasers pay 6 per cent. and the other 5 per cent. I have no particular objection to the amendment, as I say, so far as I am concerned, but the matter was thoroughly canvassed in the committee, and it was there agreed that there should be a uniform rate fixed of 6 per cent. where we were selling lands in this way on time. I think it would be better for the Senator to withdraw the amendment, and then let the bill pass. It senator to withdraw the amendment, and then let the bill pass. It is a simple matter, and the amendment might create discussion here without probably being beneficial to the bill or the committee in charge of it, or any other party.

Mr. PADDOCK. I should like to remark to my colleague that since the former act was passed the rate of interest in this country has been very materially reduced.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I have no objection to the amendment, so far as

Mr. PENDLETON. I hope the Senator from Kansas will not press his amendment. The provision of this bill, which he moves to change, is merely that the deferred payments by the purchaser upon the puris merely that the deferred payments by the purchaser upon the purchaser-money of the land shall bear 6 per cent. That is not an exorbitant rate of interest, considering the fact that the purchaser may default and the Government may be put to the trouble and expense of another sale. It is not a case in which the Government pays more to the Indians than it receives or pays less, but is a provision that upon the deferred payments for one, two, and three years the interest shall be 6 per cent. instead of 5 per cent. That, in view of the fact, as I said before, that there may be a default and the Government put to a resale, it seems to me is not an exorbitant amount. I thereput to a resale, it seems to me is not an exorbitant amount. I therefore hope that the amendment of the Senator from Kansas will either be withdrawn or not adopted by the Senate.

Mr. PLUMB. The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. SAUNDERS] is mistaken in saying that the universal rule has been 6 per cent. The money which the Government collects on the deferred payments for the purchase of the Osage Indians' land, a much larger body of land, amounting to many million acres, is 5 per cent., and that is enough. As I said before, my concern in this matter is not for the Indians, but that the settlers may pay less. I cannot see any reason for collecting from the settlers more than the Government had collected. It is a very simple question, and the Senate can vote on it at once. I have no care about it except that I see no reason for the exaction of 6 per

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. Plumb] to the amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The amendment to the amendment was adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the substitute reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs as amended.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FITZ-JOHN PORTER.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I give notice that immediately upon the expi ration of the morning hour on Monday I shall ask to call up the bill (S. No. 1139) for the relief of Fitz-John Porter, late major-general of the United States Volunteers and colonel of the Army; and I desire to call the special attention of the Senators to the amendment submitted by me yesterday intended to be proposed to the bill.

MONEYS PAID INTO COURT.

Mr. GARLAND. I ask the indulgence of the Senate to take up the bill (S. No. 1587) to secure the safe-keeping of money paid into court. By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. GARLAND. I ask the Secretary to report the different amendments proposed by the Committee on the Judiciary.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments of the committee

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments of the committee will be read and acted upon separately as reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 1, line 3, after "United States," the committee report to strike out the words "or received by the officers thereof;" and after the word "exchange," in line 7, to insert "where there is no Treasurer, assistant treasurer, or a designated depositary of the United States;" so as to read:

That all moneys paid into any court of the United States, in any cause pending or adjudicated in such court, shall be forthwith deposited with the Treasurer, an assistant treasurer, or a designated depositary of the United States, or some bank of deposit and exchange, where there is no Treasurer, assistant treasurer, or a designated depositary of the United States, in the name and to the credit of such court."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section 1, line 11, after the word "bank," to insert "or depositary;" and in the same line, after the word "bank," where it twice occurs, to insert "or depositary;" in line 15, after the word "bank," to insert "or depositary;" and in line 17. after the word "thereof," to strike out the words "or the judge or judges of said court;" so as to make the proviso read:

Judge of Judges of said court;" so as to make the provise read:

Provided, That before any money shall be deposited with such bank or depositary, said bank or depositary shall execute a bond, with good and sufficient sureties, in a sum sufficient to cover all sums that may be thus deposited, to be approved by the court, conditioned that said bank or depositary shall well and truly keep and pay over as ordered by said court, or any other court having jurisdiction thereof, any and all sums of money that may be deposited by order of said court:

Provided further, That nothing herein shall be construed to prevent the delivery of any such money upon security according to agreement of the parties, under the direction of the court.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, line 1, after the word "over," to insert "by order of the court;" in line 2, after the word "deposited," to strike out "by order of court;" in line 7, before the word "damages," to strike out "20 per centum" and after the word "damages" to insert "not to exceed 20 per centum, as the court may order;" and in line 10, after the word "bond," to strike out the words "or the officers of such bank;" so as to make the section read:

That if such bank shall fail to pay over by order of the court any moneys deposited as aforesaid, then, on motion being made by any party interested, whereof ten days' notice shall be given to the obligors on said bond or any number of them, judgment may be rendered for the amount of the money thus ordered to be paid over, with damages not to exceed 20 per centum, as the court may order, against the parties notified as aforesaid, which may be enforced by proper process, and the principal in such bond shall be liable to be proceeded against for contempt.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GARLAND. The Senate will perceive that section 995 of the Revised Statutes, which is repealed by the third section of the bill, is virtually re-enacted with one or two safeguards not contained in that section. Section 1 provides that all moneys paid into any court of the United States shall be deposited with the Treasurer or assistant the United States shall be deposited with the Treasurer or assistant treasurer or a designated depositary of the United States. That is the limitation made in section 995 of the Revised Statutes, which is re-enacted with the qualification that where there is no Treasurer, assistant treasurer, or designated depositary of the United States at the place, the deposit may be made in some bank of deposit and exchange. The necessity for the bill originates on account of there being no such officer as designated in section 995 where one of the district courts is held and where deposits are made. The Committee on the Indiciary instructed me unanimously to report the bill with a on the Judiciary instructed me unanimously to report the bill with a written report, if I saw proper to make one. I did not make one, but I will have a letter of the district judge at Little Rock read, which shows the necessity of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The letter will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

JUDGES' CHAMBERS, UNITED STATES COURTS, EASTERN DISTRICT OF ARKANSAS, Little Rock, Arkansas, April 2, 1880.

Little Rock, Arkansas, April 2, 1880.

My Dear Governor: Judge Row I presume has written you urging an amendment of the law relating to court deposits. As the law now stands (section 995 Revised Statutes) moneys paid into court or to officers of the court have to be deposited with the Treasurer, assistant treasurer, or a designated depositary. There is no treasurer or assistant treasurer or this State, and but one designated depositary, namely, the Merchanta' National Bank of this city.

The result is that all money paid into the registry at Helena, or to the officers of the court there, has to be sent at some expense and risk to this city, and when it is drawn out the checks have to be sent here for collection, thus occasioning expense and delay to the parties entitled to the money. The same inconvenience doubtless exists in some other districts.

But this is not all. There is no security under the existing law for court money s placed in a national depository. Such institutions secure the "public money" deposited with them only. (Section 5153.)

The present national depository in this city failed some years ago, and the court deposits were tied up for months, and some of the parties to whom a part of the funds belonged had to submit to a heavy discount.

After that I required a bond from the bank, but inasmuch as there is no law authorizing it, some question may arise as to its validity, and if good as a common law bond, as I think it is, the remedy for the recovery of the money would be slow. It is obvious the present law can be improved (1) by allowing the deposits to be made in a bank of deposit and exchange in addition to the institutions mentioned in the present law; (2) by requiring security for the deposits in all cases, except when deposited with the treasurer or assistant treasurer; and (3) by giving a summary remedy on the bond.

Under such a law the inconvenience in this district would be obviated at once, for there are banks of deposit and exchange in Helena that could give abundant security for the deposits, and thus all the present inconvenience, delay, and risk be avoided.

I should be very glad if you could secure an amendment of the law as indicated.

Savoued.

I should be very glad if you could secure an amendment of the law as indicated.

Yours, truly, HENRY C. CALDWELL.

Hon. A. H. GARLAND, Washington City, D. C.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

Mr. KERNAN. I have not had time to examine this bill. It is a very important bill, as it provides that all moneys paid into any court of the United States shall be deposited in the United States depositories, wherever there are such; if not, in some bank of deposit and exchange. Should not the bill state who is to designate the bank tories, wherever there are such; if not, it some bank of deposit and exchange. Should not the bill state who is te designate the bank into which the money is to go in ease there is no national depository? Mr. RANSOM. This seems to be an important bill, and if the Senator from Arkansas will consent, I move that the Senate adjourn. Mr. GARLAND. There is no necessity for that motion at this time, if the Senator will excuse me a moment.

Mr. RANSOM. The bill would be the unfinished business on Mon-

Mr. GARLAND. It is important that the bill should be passed. It has been reported to the Senate. There is no contest about it.

Mr. KERNAN. We can pass it as soon as the Senator from Arkansas explains it.

Mr. RANSOM. I withdraw my motion.

Mr. GARLAND. I do not think the suggestion made by the Senator from New York is necessary, but if he is willing to offer an amendment I will accept it, to insert, after the word "exchange" the words "to be designated by order of the court."

Mr. KERNAN. Let that go in.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from New York will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 1, line 7, after the word "exchange," it is proposed to insert "to be designated by order of the court;" so as to read:

Shall be forthwith deposited with the Treasurer, an assistant treasurer, or a designated depositary of the United States, or some bank of deposit and exchange, to be designated by order of the court, where there is no Treasurer, assistant treasorer, or designated depository of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engressed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CLAIMS FOR HORSES AND EQUIPMENTS.

Mr. PLUMB. I ask that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. No. 351) to extend the time for filing claims for horses and equipments lost by officers and enlisted men in the service of the United States

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Let it be read for information.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Chief Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the time for filing claims for horses and equipments lost by officers and enlisted men in the military service of the United States, which expired by limitation on the 31st day of December, 1875, be, and the same is hereby, extended to two years from and after the passage of this act; and that all such claims filed in the proper Department before the passage of this act shall be deemed to have been filed in due time, and shall be considered and decided without refiling.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Is there a report accompanying the bill ?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is no report.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. It seems to open the gate to a very wide range of claims, and probably ought to be very carefully looked into before its passage.

Mr. PLUMB. The bill does not provide for a new class of claims. It only extends the time within which a class of claims which has been recognized from the organization of our Government may be filed. Let me say a word as to the class to be benefited by it. I have examined the cases on file in the office of the Third Auditor and I have been in receipt of a number of communications in regard to this bill. So far as I know there is not a single person among those who I in part represent on this floor who has any interest in the bill at all, but they are persons in the State of Arkansas, in the State of Missouri; and in other States where enlisted men were authorized to furnish their horses, and where, by reason of misfortune or delay more or less unavoidable, they failed to file their claims within the time. It is a very meritorious class of claims indeed.

Mr. KERNAN. To what war does the bill apply?
Mr. PLUMB. To the only war that I personally know anything about—the last war.

Mr. KERNAN. The bill applies to a war which ended fifteen years ago?

Mr. PLUMB. That is true.
Mr. KERNAN. Very stale claims might be brought under such a general bill, I think.
Mr. PLUMB. The claims are mostly on file now in the Department;

they have been filed there; they amount probably to from three hundred to five hundred in number.

Mr. KERNAN. For how long does the bill extend the time within which they are to be filed?

Mr. PLUMB. Two years. Mr. KERNAN. Does the Senator suppose it will take two years to Mr. KERNAN. Does the Senator suppose it will take two years to file that number of claims?

Mr. PLUMB. This bill will result in benefit to a very meritorious class of people, persons who during the war on the invitation of the Government not only went into the service themselves, but the Government being unable to furnish them horses, furnished horses as well, the Government agreeing not only to pay them a specified sum for the use of the horses but also to pay for them in case they were unavoidably lost during the service. The claims have been allowed and adjusted to the number of several hundred, and, as I said, probably from three hundred to five hundred have been caucht by the expirafrom three hundred to five hundred have been caught by the expira-tion of the time named in the statute to which this is amendatory, tion of the time named in the statute to which this is amendatory, and so they cannot now be pressed to adjudication.

Mr. KERNAN. I want to inquire how long a time had all these people to file their claims? As I understand they had down to the year 1875 to file these claims growing out of the war of the rebellion.

Mr. PLUMB. They had until 1875.

Mr. KERNAN. Ten years?

Mr. PLUMB. Ten years.

Mr. KERNAN. This is a general provision, as I understand. Has the Senator any idea how many claims are said to be slumbering now that did not wake up in those ten years?

Mr. PLUMB. Most of them have already been filed in the Department, owing to misapprehension in regard to the date at which the ment, owing to misapprehension in regard to the date at which the former limitation expired. I may say that there was a doubt in the minds of not only the claimants, but their attorneys, as to the time when the limitation did expire, a doubt as to one year. During that time about three hundred claims, as I now remember, have been filled, and it is supposed they are substantially all that are to be filed. So far as the statute of limitations is concerned, I will call the attention of the Senate to the fact

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. HARRIS in the chair.) The Senator from Kansas will suspend a moment. The question is, Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? Unless the explanation of the Senator is necessary to the settlement of that question, this debate is all out of order. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill which has just been read. The Chair hears none, and the bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole. Shall

Mr. THURMAN. I should like to hear it.

The Chief Clerk read the bill.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I must ask the Senator in charge of the bill why these claims are more meritorious than other claims,

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I must ask the Senator in charge of the bill why these claims are more meritorious than other claims, for instance, claims for supplies furnished the Army? Will not this be a precedent, and will not those who furnished supplies or who have claims of any and every kind say, "We want two years more?" If the bill is to pass at all, why not make it include all claims against the Government? What is the difference? Why should you let one class of claims in and not the others? Then I will say to my friend from Kansas that, as is very well known, within a year or two this side of the Chamber as a party was heralded all over the country as being in favor of paying all and every class of claims. It was said that we wanted to open the doors wide. Now, from my standpoint, it does not look as though it was this side of the Chamber; it may have been some other side.

Mr. PLUMB. Well, of course, that may appeal to the Senator from West Virginia, but it lacks entirely having any effect upon my view of the case. I was going to say, speaking about this proposition, that within the last two years Congress extended the time for filing pension claims practically by permitting persons theretofore disbarred not only to file claims, which they could not then do, but to go back to the time of discharge, and appropriating for that purpose thirty or forty million dollars out of the Treasury in a lump. I voted for that bill, and believed it to be just and fair, as I believe this to be the same. These persons are generally scattered, largely in the States of Missouri and Arkansas, where, for obvious reasons, this character of service was easily rendered. They have been removed from communication. People were not as swift to make up these claims as some others are and I know of one or two cases where the character of service was easily rendered. They have been removed from communication. People were not as swift to make up these claims as some others are, and I know of one or two cases where the persons have been oblivious to the fact that they had this right until within a very short period of time. I have not had occasion to examine all the cases, but I have examined many, and I am satisfied a majority of the cases filed are meritorious, that the horses were actually lost. That is a question, however, to be passed upon by the Department.

Department.
Mr. COCKRELL. I desire to offer an amendment to the bill, to which I think there can be no objection; to add as a separate sec-

SEC. 2. That all claims arising under the act approved March 3, 1849, entitled "An act to provide for the payment of horses and other property lost or destroyed in the military service of the United States," and all acts amendatory thereof, which shall not be filed in the proper Department within two years from and after the passage of this act, shall be forever barred, and shall not be received, considered, or audited by any Department of the Government.

since 1793 there have been various acts in regard to property lost in the service enacted. In 1849, on the 3d of March, a general bill was passed, which was retroactive in its operation, and there never has been any bar under that law since that time. Claims could be filed at any time. In 1875 the first limitation was placed upon the presentation of these claims, and that only applied to horses lost belonging to persons in the service, and not to civilians, and there is to-day no law barring a civilian from presenting a claim under the act of 1849. I propose to make this amendment cover both classes. to-day no law barring a civilian from presenting a claim under the act of 1849. I propose to make this amendment cover both classes, and bar them all after the lapse of two years. They are not barred now; they ought to be barred; and there certainly can be no objection to this amendment, and the bill, as amended, I think is proper and right. Let it be understood that all claims under that law not presented in two years from this time are forever barred, and shall not be filed, received, or audited by any Department of the Government, and then we shall have no more such claims presented there to be pressed upon the action of Congress.

ment, and then we shall have no more sach claims presented that to be pressed upon the action of Congress.

Mr. KERNAN. The trouble will be that after two years have passed away we shall again be asked to relieve them from the bar. That is the danger of this kind of legislation. I agree that if the bill is passed the amendment ought to be put on barring claims, but I understand that the claims now sought to be revived or allowed to be brought forward were barred in 1875.

Mr. COCKRELL. According to the interpretation of the law by the Department.

Mr. KERNAN. All claims for horses and equipments lost in the war of the rebellion were barred on the last day of December, 1875, as I understand. That was nearly eleven years after the war ended. The men who lost horses, the men who lost equipments, I should wish to have paid; but if for any reason they did not bring their claims forward within the ten or eleven years allowed, they certainly became quite stale. Doubtless there are exceptions; but can we wisely legislate by opening the door to claims of this character? While meritorious claims may doubtless exist, yet I fear a very large While meritorious claims may doubtless exist, yet I fear a very large number of claims will come in that are not meritorious and were not brought forward during the ten years because they were not susceptible of proof. A statute of limitations generally bars all private debts in six years. Here were ten years allotted after the war when these claims were allowed to be presented, and they were not filed. If we now allow them to be received, I think we endanger the Treas-

If we now allow them to be received, I think we endanger the Treasury by subjecting it to the payment of a great many claims that are not valid and ought not to be paid.

Mr. THURMAN. Mr. President, this may seem to be a very small matter; but I venture to say that if this bill passes it will take not less than $500,000 out of the Treasury at the very lowest. Five thousand horses with their equipments at $100 apiece would make that amount, and it may be that there will be a great many more than that. Now, I think, is the time for us—and I hope those on this side of the Chamber will think of it—in the last days of a democratic Congress to be a little careful how we put our hands in the Treasury. Congress to be a little careful how we put our hands in the Treasury. I am very much afraid at such a session as this, a short session, all manner of raids upon the Treasury may be made; and although some may appear to be small, half a million or a million now, when some may appear to be small, half a million or a million now, when you add them all up together there will be a very considerable responsibility on the Congress that votes them.

It is said that we ought to extend this time. Why? These people have had ten years since the close of the war in which to present their claims. It is said that it ought to be extended because they were persons who did not know that they had claims on the Government. Why, Mr. President, no statute of limitations goes upon that ground. A statute of limitations forbids the bringing of an action after such a time, be it months or years, whether the person who had the cause of action knew that he had it or not. It goes upon a broader ground than that. It goes on the ground that if you give an indefinite time to present claims, the evidence of the transaction, and which might constitute a perfectly good defense, is nine times out of ten lost, and constitute a perfectly good defense, is nine times out of the lost, and so it would be with these claims. The evidence of the officers under whom these men served, those who could tell whether or not these horses were lost in the service, may not be obtainable because they are scattered everywhere. The Government has no chance whatever to get together the evidence to rebut the claims. They all stand upon ex parte testimony alone, such as is produced by the claimant or by the claim agent, and ninety-nine times out of a hundred it will be found that these claims are already in the hands of claim agents on contingencies or by purchase. I do not think that we ought to open the door. It is about time when we are trying to pay off the debt of this Government, a debt created to so large an extent by the war, that we should keep our face in that direction, and not as we pay off one year increase the amount of indebtedness the same year by bringing in new classes of claims. I regret very much to differ with some of my friends who advocate this bill; but it does seem to me that after these parties have had ten years to present these claims it is time that they parties have had ten years to present these claims it is time that they had presented them or forever hold their peace. I have no faith in the idea that they did not know they had a claim. I never found any-body that lost a horse by the war who did not know he had some claim on the Government.

on the Government.

I know there is a precedent Senators might have cited in favor of an extended time for bringing forward these claims. We all know of the celebrated Durden horse, and we know that Amy Durden did not get pay for her husband's horse, which was killed in the war of the Revolution, until sixty years after the death of the poor horse; but I do not propose that we shall extend this precedent and give sixty years for the payment of all the horses that were killed in the rebellion.

I for one must say that I regard with not a little apprehension all the schemes—I do no not mean to say this is a scheme—but all the plans for getting money out of the Treasury that it seems to me every day there are evidences are being preferred. I shall vote against the

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, December 9, 1880.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. P. HARRISON, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

ADDITIONAL MEMBERS PRESENT.

Mr. CULBERSON and Mr. WELLBORN appeared in their seats to-day. J. RANDOLPH TUCKER, JR.

Mr. HUNTON. I ask consent to submit for consideration at this time the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved. That the Clerk of the House of Representatives be authorized and directed to pay to the widow of J. Randolph Tucker, jr., deceased, late private secretary to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, a sum equal to his salary for six months, and also the necessary funeral expenses, not to exceed $250.

Mr. HUNTON. That is the usual resolution. It perhaps would be better to insert the words "out of the contingent fund of the House." The SPEAKER. By consent the resolution will be so modified. There was no objection, and the resolution as modified was adopted.

CHARLES G. EDDY.

Mr. SAPP, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 6526) for the relief of Charles G. Eddy; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

CAR LAKE, COUNCIL BLUFFS, IOWA.

Mr. SAPP also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 6527) to grant to the corporate authorities of the city of Council Bluffs, in the State of Iowa, for public uses, a certain lake known as Car Lake, situated near said city; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

TAX ON SAVINGS-BANKS.

Mr. ALDRICH, of Illinois, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 6528) to amend section 3408 of the Revised Statutes of the United States in relation to the tax on savings-banks; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Ways and Means.

FORTIFICATION APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. BAKER. Under instructions from the Committee on Appro-Mr. BAKER. Under instructions from the Committee on Appropriations, I now report a bill making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, and for the armament thereof, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, and for other purposes, and ask that the same be printed and recommitted. I desire also to give notice that at the earliest moment I will move to go into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the consideration of this bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will have to report the bill back from the Committee on Appropriations before he agent this into Committee on Appropriations before he are gent in the Committee on Appropriations from the Committee on Appropriations for the Committee on Appropriations from the Committee on Appropriations for the Committee on Appropriations from the Committee on Appropriation from the mittee of the Whole.

Mr. BAKER. I understand that.

The bill (H. R. No. 6529) was read a first and second time, ordered to be printed, and recommitted to the Committee on Appropriations.

GENERAL DANIEL E. SICKLES.

Mr. COX, by unanimous consent, introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 341) authorizing Major-General Daniel E. Sickles, of the United States Army, to accept a decoration from the French Republic; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

TAX ON MEDICINES, FRICTION MATCHES, BANK CHECKS, ETC.

Mr. KELLEY, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 6530) for the repeal of the tax on bank checks, medicines, friction matches, bank capital, and bank deposits, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

GENERAL HOSPITAL IN DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. KELLEY also, by unanimous consent, introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 342) relative to a general hospital in the District of Columbia; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

FORTRESS MONROE.

Mr. JOHNSTON, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 6531) to authorize the Secretary of War to grant the use of certain land at Fortress Monroe, Virginia, for hotel purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

BLUE HILL NATIONAL BANK.

Mr. CRAPO. I ask unanimous consent to take from the House Calendar and consider at this time the bill (H. R. No. 4006) authorizing the Blue Hill National Bank of Dorchester, Massachusetts, to change its location and name.

The bill was read, as follows:

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Blue Hill National Bank of Dorchester, now located in Boston, in the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, is hereby authorized to change its location to the town of Milton, in the county of Norfolk, in said Commonwealth, whenever the stockholders representing two-thirds of the capital stock of said bank, at a meeting called for that purpose, determine to make such change; and the president and cashier shall execute a certificate, under the corporate seal of the bank, specifying such determination, and shall cause the same to be recorded in the office of the Comptroller of the Currency; and thereupon such change of location shall be effected, and the operations of discount and deposit of said bank shall be carried on in the said town of Milton.

SEC. 2. That nothing in this act contained shall be so construed as in any manner to release the said bank from any liability, or affect any action or proceeding in law in which said bank may be a party or interested; and when such change shall have been determined upon as aforesaid, notice thereof and of such change shall be published in two weekly papers, one in the county of Suffolk and one in the county of Norfolk, in said Commonwealth of Massachusetts, not less than four weeks.

SEC. 3. That whenever the location of said bank shall have been changed from weeks.

SEC. 3. That whenever the location of said bank shall have been changed from said city of Boston to said town of Milton, in accordance with the first section of this act, its name shall be changed to the Blue Hill National Bank of Milton, if the board of directors of said bank shall accept the new name by resolution of the board, and cause a copy of such resolution, duly authenticated, to be filed with the Comptroller of the Currency.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Banking and Currency, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 4006) to authorize the Blue Hill National Bank of Dorchester, Massachusetts, to change its location and name, have had the same under consideration, and submit the following report:

At the time of the organization of the Blue Hill National Bank its location was in the town of Dorchester; since then, the territory of Dorchester has been annexed to Boston. It is now proposed to change the location of the bank about eighty rods in the same business village, but within the territoral limits of Milton.

The reasons for the change are as follows: Reduction of expense in rental of banking-rooms, and increased convenience to the patrons of the bank by its new location, near the railroad depot, post-office, and stores. Within a few years a number of business houses and manufacturing establishments which were in the vicinity of the present banking-house have been moved to the part of the village which is within the territory of Milton.

The affairs of the bank have been satisfactorily managed, and are in sound condition. The rights of creditors and the public are fully protected by the provisions of the bill.

Mr. BRENTS. It is the unanimous report of the Committee on the Public Lands made at the last session. It is a very urgent case and I hope no objection will be made to it.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read.

The bill was read, as follows:

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That all persons who shall have settled and made valuable and permanent improvements upon any odd-numbered section of land within any railroad withdrawal in good faith and with the permission orlicense of the railroad company for whose benefit the same shall have been made, and with the expectation of purchasing of such company the land so settled upon, which land so settled upon and improved, may, for any cause, be restored to the public domain, and who, at the time of such restoration, may not be entitled to enter and acquire title to such land under the pre-emption, homestead, or timber-culture sets of the United States, shall be permitted, at any time within three months after such restoration, and under such rules and regulations as the Commissioner of the General Land Office may prescribe, to purchase not to exceed one hundred and sixty acres in extent of the same by legal subdivisions, at the price of two dollars and fifty cents per acre, and to receive patents therefor.

The report was read, as follows:

The report was read, as follows:

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on the Public Lands, having considered bill H. R. 4869, beg leave to report as follows:

Very many persons who have settled upon "railroad lands" have previously exhausted their rights to acquire title to the public lands. In most cases they have so settled with an assurance from the railroad company in whose favor the lands were withdrawn not to disturb their occupancy pending the completion of its title, and then to give them the first privilege of purchase. Relying upon these assurances, and confidently expecting thus to be enabled to acquire title to these lands, these settlers have, in the utmost good faith, often invested all their available means in improvements thereon.

In the final adjustment or definite location of these grants, some of which will soon be made, large portions will, as is now reliably ascertained, fall back to the public domain. Nearly a thousand square miles of these lands in Washington Territory alone will doubtless be thus restored before the next session of Congress. Without some legislative remedy is speedily afforded similar to that proposed by the bill under consideration, many of these settlers will lose years of toil and large investments of money made in good faith, and will be rendered homeless and penniless.

Your committee therefore recommend the passage of the substitute for said bill herewith submitted.

There being no objection, the Committee of the Whole was discharged from the further consideration of the bill, and the same was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

SAWYER'S CANISTER-SHOT.

Mr. RICE. I ask consent to submit for consideration at this time the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk. The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved. That the Secretary of War be directed to inform the House of the facts known to his Department in regard to the character and value of Sawyer's canistershot, and its adoption by the Government; and to communicate his opinion as to the justice and expediency of purchasing the same by the United States, or otherwise reimbursing said Sawyer therefor.

Mr. BLOUNT. What is the object of that resolution?

Mr. RICE. Merely calling for information upon a subject now pending before the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. BLOUNT. I submit that the information is already before the House; the Secretary of War has already given an opinion upon the matter.

Mr. RICE. Not since the last session.

Mr. BLOUNT. No, for we have not been here. Mr. RICE. I want his opinion at the present time. It is merely a resolution calling for information.

There being no objection, the resolution was adopted.

STATUE OF GEORGE WASHINGTON IN NEW YORK CITY.

Mr. CHITTENDEN. I ask permission to call up and have put on its passage a very peculiar bill. It grants permission to the Chamber of Commerce of New York to erect a monument to George Washington. It does not propose any appropriation by the Government.

The SPEAKER. This bill has been reported from the Committee on the Library as a substitute. The gentleman from New York asks that it may be taken from the Calendar and considered at this time.

House bill No. 5384, (a substitute for House bill No. 4917,) granting permission to the Chamber of Commerce of New York to erect a statue on the sub-treasury building in the city of New York, was read,

as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to permit the New York Chamber of Commerce to erect, without any cost to the Government, a suitable statue or group, commemorative of the inauguration of George Washington as first President of the United States, on the front of the building known as the sub-treasury of the United States, which now marks the spot on the corner of Wall and Nassau streets, in the city of New York, where the oath of office was administered to him.

Sec. 2. That the design for such statue, or group, shall be submitted to the Secretary of the Treasury for his approval, and the work shall at all times be subject to his supervision and control, and shall be so performed as not to injure said building. And said statue, or group, so erected shall be at all times nader the exclusive control of the United States. If said work shall not be completed within five years next after the passage of this act, the authority hereby granted and the permission authorized shall terminate.

The SPEAKER. The report will now be read

The SPEAKER. The report will now be read.
Mr. COX. I hope that time will not be occupied in reading the report. The bill appropriates no money, but simply provides for a decent monument to George Washington.
The SPEAKER. The report is very brief.
The Clerk read as follows:

The Joint Committee on the Library, to whom was referred the bill H. R. No. 4917, have considered the same, and report back a bill as a substitute therefor, and recommend its passage.

Mr. BLOUNT. Is unanimous consent asked for the consideration of this bill?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. BLOUNT. I object to it at this time.
Mr. COX. I ask my friend to withdraw his objection.
Mr. BLOUNT. There are differences of opinion about this ques-

Mr. COX. The bill does not appropriate one dollar of money. It simply authorizes the erection of a statue to George Washington in front of the sub-treasury in New York. The Chamber of Commerce proposes to erect this monument in the place where the oath of office was taken by Washington. Why an objection should come from my abstract friend [laughter] I cannot understand. Why, Mr. Speaker, last session we passed a bill appropriating $100,000 for the Yorktown celebration. This bill, without appropriating any money from the Treasury, proposes simply to authorize the erection, in a very historic place, of a monument to George Washington, which shall be under the control of the Government, which shall be no disgrace to the contry, as some monuments are. The matter will be properly guarded and cared for, so that no such disgrace shall result. Now, why does my friend object? Mr. COX. The bill does not appropriate one dollar of money.

Mr. BLOUNT. I had understood there were differences of opinion between some gentlemen from the city of New York in regard to the several bills on this subject.

several bills on this subject.

Mr. COX. Oh, no; we are all united.

Mr. BLOUNT. I am simply stating what I heard. The gentleman may be better informed than myself. I have determined, however, to withdraw my objection.

Mr. COX. I am very much obliged to the gentleman.

There being no objection, the bill was taken from the House Calendar, ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. COX moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider he laid on the table.

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay John Maloney at the rate of $1,000 per annum during the present session of Congress for services as messenger to the official reporters of debates, and that the same be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

BUSINESS OF COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. CONVERSE. I am directed by the Committee on Public Lands to ask that Thursday of next week be set apart for the consideration of business of that committee, to be designated by the committee.

Mr. PRESCOTT and Mr. BICKNELL objected.

JAMES MONROE HEISKELL

Mr. TALBOTT. Mr. Speaker, yesterday I asked leave to have taken from the Speaker's table Senate bill No. 1191, for the relief of James Monroe Heiskell, of Baltimore City, Maryland. I stated to members of the House that the object of the bill was to relieve the petitioner from political disabilities, he having served in the confederate army. That was my impression at the time, and my statement misled some gentlemen on the floor. The bill was passed. I now ask unanimous consent that the vote by which the bill was passed be reconsidered and that the bill be put upon its passage on its merits in the shape it came from the Senate. I believe that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Congers] who asked that the bill be withheld will agree to withdraw his amendment and let the bill come up for passage.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. Talbott] asks consent that the vote upon the passage of Senate bill for the relief of James Monroe Heiskell be vacated, a two-thirds vote having been required, as the Chair supposed, upon that question. The title been required, as the Chair supposed, upon that question. The title of the bill will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. No. 1191) for the relief of James Monroe Heiskell, of Baltimore City, Maryland.

Mr. CONGER. Let it be understood that the bill is not to be put immediately on its passage, but that we are to have time to examine it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan objects to the bill being passed at this time, and wishes it to lie over for examination.

Mr. CONGER. My understanding was that the bill should be placed back on the table, the action of yesterday being vacated.

Mr. TALBOTT. The gentleman from Michigan I understood to agree to withdraw his amendment.

The SPEAKER. The amendment is an inappropriate one, if the bill is for the purpose of removing political disabilities.

Mr. CONGER. There is no dispute between the gentleman and unself that he represented to me it was a bill to remove political disabilities.

myself that he represented to me it was a bill to remove political disabilities. That, of course, he assents to. Without examining or thinking specially of the matter, that clause was put in; but subsequently, on sending for the law embracing the section referred to, I found it was for another purpose. The bill was inadvertently passed with the slaves.

with that clause.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands the gentleman from Michigan to withdraw his amendment.

Mr. CONGER. Yes, by unanimous consent, let the bill be brought back and the action on the amendment canceled.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will order the bill back to the table.

Mr. CONGER. With the amendment withdrawn and all preceedings annulled.

Mr. WHITE. I submit this bill should go to the Committee on Military Affairs. It is a matter belonging to that committee.

Mr. TALBOTT. My understanding was the bill should be put on its passage, and I ask the rules be suspended for that purpose.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made, and besides a motion to suspend the rules is not in order on this day. By consent of all parties concerned, the bill will be returned to the Speaker's table without the amendment, to take the place it before occupied.

GREENLEAF CILLEY.

Mr. MURCH. I ask, Mr. Speaker, by unanimous consent to take up and put upon its passage Senate bill No. 49, for the relief of Greenleaf Cilley.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I object.
Mr. WURCH. I hope the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs will not object. His committee has already made a report to this House on a similar bill.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee objects.
Mr. WHITTHORNE. I demand the regular order of business.

MORNING HOUR.

The SPEAKER. The regular order being demanded, the morning hour begins at twenty-five minutes to one o'clock p. m., and committees will be called for reports.

CAPTAIN WILLIAM H. REXFORD.

Mr. DIBRELL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. No. 6238) for the relief of Captain Will-iam H. Rexford; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ENROLLED BILL.

Mr. UPSON, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a bill (S. No. 1583) to change the name of the schooner-yacht Nettie to Nokomis; when the Speaker signed the same.

PUBLIC ADVERTISING, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. I move to take from the Speaker's table the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 2658) to regulate the award of, and compensation for, public advertising in the District of Columbia.

The amendment of the Senate was read, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and in lieu thereof insert the following:

"That all advertising required by existing laws to be done in the District of Columbia by any of the Departments of the Government shall be given to one daily newspaper of each of the two principal political parties, and to one daily neutral newspaper, and in the discretion of the heads of the respective Departments, to the two weekly newspapers having the largest regular circulation, to be ascertained by the sworn statements of the publishers thereof: Provided, That the rates of compensation for such service shall in no case exceed the regular commercial rate of the newspapers selected; nor shall any advertisement be paid for unless published in accordance with section 3828 of the Revised Statutes.

"SEC. 2. All laws or parts of laws inconsistent herewith are hereby repealed."

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. I wove to concur in the Senate amendment, and ask for a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses

The motion was agreed to.

COMMITTEE ON APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. ATKINS. I am instructed by the Committee on Appropria-tions to ask for leave for that committee to sit during the sittings of

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

CLERKS TO PENSIONS COMMITTEE.

Mr. HOSTETLER. I ask unanimous consent to submit the following resolution for consideration at this time:

Resolved. That the Committee on Invalid Pensions be, and they are hereby, authorized and empowered to continue to employ the three additional clerks that were allowed them during the last session of Congress for service during the remainder of the present session of Congress, to be paid in the same manner and as other per diem clerks, and whose duty it shall be to aid and assist the members of the committee in examining the evidence and preparing the reports upon bills referred to said committee, and such other labor as may be required of them.

Mr. REAGAN. I think we ought to have some explanation of the necessity for these three clerks. We ought to know whether this use of three clerks for that committee is simply to transfer the responsibility of passing upon these cases from the members to them.

The SPEAKER. The resolution must go, under the rules, to the Committee on Accounts.

Mr. REAGAN. Very well. Let it go there.

The resolution was referred to the Committee on Accounts.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BICKNELL. Mr. Speaker, I call for the regular order. The SPEAKER. The regular order of business is the consideration of the special order.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. Mr. Speaker, before the gentleman from Maryland begins his remarks I desire to ascertain, if it be possible, how much longer it is proposed to have general debate upon this resolution. We have already had a discussion for two days without my apparent indication upon the part of the minority as to how much longer time they propose to consume. I would now like to ascertain (I say if it be possible) how many hours or days longer these gentlemen propose to obstruct the public business with this discussion.

Mr. CONGER. Mr. Speaker, I call the gentleman from New York to order for unparliamentary and insulting language.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. If the gentleman from Michigan objects to the language, I will withdraw it rather than consume time—

Mr. CONGER. And I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the language of the gentleman from New York be taken down and read from the Clerk's desk.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I have already stated to the gentleman from Michigan that in order to save time I withdraw the language to which he objects.

Mr. CONGER. There must be some limit to the impertinence of such language, and we on this side have submitted to it as long as I, for one, propose to bear it.

for one, propose to bear it.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. If the gentleman from Michigan will indicate how much longer time they propose to consume in the discussion of this question, I will forgive him.

Mr. CONGER. I will say whenever the gentleman is willing to meet the demands of the country by presenting the funding bill fer consideration, and when that bill is brought before the House for action, we are then perfectly willing to postpone this discussion. [Laughter on the republican side of the House.]

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I thought the gentleman might be willing to indicate some probable time when the funding bill might be permitted to come before the House.

Mr. CONGER. We should be very glad at this time to go into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of that bill. The present question can be very readily postponed.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. My inquiry was simply with a view to ascertain how much longer time gentlemen propose to consume in the consideration of this matter.

Mr. KEIFER. I understand gentlemen on the other side of the

COUNTING THE ELECTORAL VOTE.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland is entitled to the

Mr. McLANE. Mr. Speaker, I shall not embarrass gentlemen on either side of the House who are averse to this discussion by occupying much of their time in the continuation of the discussion upon this measure. I shall try to confine myself to the point made yesterday when the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. Robeson] was about concluding. Notwithstanding his well-known courtesy and consideration in debate, his physical condition after his lengthy argument on yesterday induced him to ask me not to pursue the inquiry further, as he did not desire himself to occupy the floor longer. But for that and for the reason that the point I made remained unanswered and unsettled. I take the floor tled, I took the floor.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from New Jersey begged this House to believe that he would like to wipe out five years of the history of this country during which the practice of the republican party was well settled upon this question. It struck me then, sir, that he had far better express his desire to wipe out twenty-five years rather than five, which would have embraced the entire life-time of the party with which he is associated, and he would have thus relieved himself of twenty-five years of responsibility during which he and the organization with which he is associated have not only defied but trampled upon mutilated and altered that fraternal bond which the organization with which he is associated have not only defied but trampled upon, mutilated, and altered that fraternal bond which united the States and created this Government.

He would thus have escaped responsibility for precedents far more arbitrary, far more violent, much less open to defense than the doctrine and proposed action to which I am now about to address myself. The honorable gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HUNTON] conceded in the inquiry that he made that, if this were a question as to the power of Congress to pass a law to carry out some duty that ought to be performed by an officer or department of the Government, that perhaps they would not be far apart. But the gentleman ought to be performed by an officer or department of the Government, that perhaps they would not be far apart. But the gentleman from Virginia did not make any concession that such a law was necessary. He did not even make a concession that such a law would be proper, and the point where we terminated the debate yesterday brought the gentleman from New Jersey to the assertion that the count of the electoral vote, whether ministerial or judicial—the House will remember that he treated it as a ministerial power, but in fact a gravial individual power parties of House will remember that he treated it as a ministerial power, but in fact a quasi-judicial power until challenged by some superior or competent tribunal—he therefore made the full admission that this power to count was in the Vice-President, and that to all intents and purposes it was a judicial power; and in that admission he abandoned the whole structure of his argument, which was based upon the idea that as all legislative power was vested in Congress and all judicial power was vested in the courts, that therefore neither Congress nor the Vice-President could exercise judicial power. Though pressed by the inquiry of the gentleman from Virginia, he made the exception unless there was an express grant of power. Even that admission would have destroyed the vitality of his original assertion that no power could be judicially possessed by Congress or the VicePresident because all judicial power was in the courts and nothing but legislative powers in the Congress. The power to impeach is one of these powers granted by the Constitution, and therefore the gentleman from New Jersey will concede it. The power to punish for contempt is not a power granted by the Constitution, but inherent in the legislative power itself, and he probably does not deny that power of Congress; and when we closed the debate, and the gentleman from New Jersey desired that the inquiry should not be pressed further, I was about making the point that the twelfth amendment to the Constitution is an expressed power to Congress to count the votes, and that is the point I wanted to make to the gentleman from New Jersey on vesterday.

New Jersey on yesterday.

I know very well, Mr. Speaker, there are few men on this floor who will sustain the position taken by the gentleman from New Jersey, that this power to count the votes is possessed by the Vice-President.

I know very well, Mr. Speaker, there are few men on this floor who will sustain the position taken by the gentleman from New Jersey, that this power to count the votes is possessed by the Vice-President. From the foundation of this Government to the present day over and over again has that point been made in either the one House or the other; and though here and there some distinguished men, with more or less eccentricity of mind, have advanced that position, uniformly, at all times, not alone during those five years that the gentleman from New Jersey would wipe from the history of the country, but through all time, the idea that the Vice-President should count the votes and declare that he himself was elected has never been accepted in the history of this country.

Over and over again the subject has been debated. This is not the first time in our history when gentlemen in the one House or the other have proposed to pass a law to enable the electoral vote to be counted. Not only is it not the first time in the history of the country when it has been proposed to pass such a law, but, unhappily, once in our history we did pass such a law, and under its operation a count was made which will forever stand a monument of discredit and disgrace to the country; because that count counted in a man who had not received a majority of the electoral votes. The only time when the Congress could be persuaded to pass a law to enable those votes to be counted was when after a long, protracted, bloody war we stood again in the presence of an Executive who brought the Army and the Navy to see the vote counted, and under that pressure honorable gentlemen in both Houses consented to the passage of the law, hardly one of them without expressing his regret that such a necessity should occur, and in the hope that enough had been reserved to insure a final control over the count by the concurring vote of the two Houses. I cannot recall a single man of any distinction, on either side of the House, who did not regret that he should be c approved a joint resolution allowing Congress to count the vote.

Mr. McLANE. I did not say anything of the kind. I said that Mr. Lincoln, when a joint resolution was sent to him authorizing the rejection of certain States, sent it back to the Congress remonstrating with Congress for having sent him such a resolution, the entire re-sponsibility for counting the votes being, in his opinion, vested in Congress.

Mr. KEIFER. What resolution does the gentleman refer to?

Mr. McLANE. I refer to the "joint resolution declaring certain States not entitled to representation in the electoral college" which Abraham Lincoln signed. And only the day before yesterday, the gentleman will see by reference to the Congressional Record, the message of Mr. Lincoln on that occasion was read in the House.

Mr. KEIFER. Will the gentleman permit me a moment? This is a matter of importance and I presume the gentleman does not design to misquote.

to misquote.

Mr. McLANE. I do not.
Mr. KEIFER. I may be wrong, but if I remember rightly the joint resolution which Mr. Lincoln approved, sending with it his protesting message to Congress, was a joint resolution authorizing the President of the Senate not to receive or count the votes of certain States then in rebellion.

Mr. McLANE. That is right. That is the message to which I referred, and that is the message and one of the precedents which the gentleman from New Jersey wished to wash his hands of—which he did not want to be held responsible for. I hope the gentleman from Ohio is satisfied.

Onto is satisfied.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I accepted the qualification made by the gentleman from New Jersey, and it was my purpose to call his attention to the twelfth amendment to the Constitution, because he conceded when he closed his argument that judicial power could be exercised by the House if it were expressly granted or could be deduced reasonably and intelligently from what was granted. Now, the twelfth amendment to the Constitution provides, not only who shall be President and who shall be an elector, but it provides also the manner of action by the electors, and it concedes to the States the power to elect their electors in such manner as their Legislatures may direct. elect their electors in such manner as their Legislatures may direct.

It concedes fully and absolutely to the Legislatures the power to elect electors. It provides that the electors thus elected shall vote, shall certify their vote and send it sealed to the Vice-President, and it commands the Vice-President to keep those certificates in his possession until a certain day, and then to open those certificates in the presence of the Senate and House of Representatives. Then it proceeds to say that the votes shall then be counted, and if no man has a majority of the whole number of electors appointed, the House of Representatives shall elect a President from the three highest and the Senate shall elect a Vice-President from the two highest.

Now, does any lawyer require an argument, does any intelligent gentleman who has the responsibility of legislation in this House imposed upon him require an argument to establish that when a jurisdiction has been conferred in a certain contingency upon any body, upon any tribunal, parliamentary or judicial, that tribunal is to judge whether the contingency has arisen? Why, sir, in that is a principle of law as simple as absolute as any elementary principle that ever was whether the contingency has arisen? Why, sir, in that is a principle of law as simple, as absolute as any elementary principle that ever was stated in the elementary books. Over and over again have the courts of this country declared it, and over and over again have the Legislatures of these United States established and confirmed it. It is a universal principle of law that if you confer jurisdiction upon a tribunal in a certain contingency, that tribunal is to judge whether the contingency has occurred. And therefore when that twelfth amendment required the Vice-President to open those votes in the presence of the two Houses, and then imposed on each House an obligation in a certain contingency the one to elect a President and the other to elect a Vice-President, it is as clear as human language can make it that they are to see that the votes opened in their presence are genuine. that they are to see that the votes opened in their presence are genuine votes and correctly counted.

Now, Chancellor Kent, whose presumption, whose loose obiter dictum, was quoted here yesterday, says, "I presume that the Vice-President, in the absence of legislation, might count the votes," &c., and he goes on to say, the two Houses are present to witness whether they are correctly counted. Even he in his obiter dictum recognizes the fact that it was the two Houses that had to ascertain whether the votes were genuine votes and correctly counted. He regarded, as all intelligent men regard, the mere tabulation, the mere counting of the votes, gent men regard, the mere tabulation, the mere counting of the votes, as a formality of no consequence whatever.

The point was far more serious than the mere tabulation of the votes. There was involved, first of all, the eligibility of the candidate for President. There was the fundamental question, whether he was a foreign-born citizen or a native-born citizen; that had to be ascertained. There was then another question, before the final question of the count, or rather a question which came before the count, which made it impossible to finish the count before it was settled: that was the question whether the elector was qualified. There tled: that was the question whether the elector was qualified. There is to be a count of electoral votes.

There is a provision in the Constitution that no member of Congress shall be eligible as an elector. Now, if a State has voted for a member of Congress as an elector, and that fact appears upon opening the certificate, who doubts that such member of Congress would be held as disqualified to act as elector? Who dares say, if he have any respect for his judgment, if he have what I call a public conscience, if he desire to discharge honorably his duty—who dares say that the vote of a member of Congress as an elector can be counted? Therefore there is the question of the eligibility of the candidate for President, and there is the question of the amplification of the elector to dent, and there is the question of the qualification of the elector to dent, and there is the question of the qualification of the elector to be settled before you can count the vote. A member of Congress voting as an elector would be a "goat" and not a "sheep," and therefore his vote would not be counted by the gentleman from New Jersey or the gentleman from Virginia.

This twelfth amendment of the Constitution, which imposes upon the House of Representatives the duty of electing a President, if it shall appear on the count that no one of the candidates has received a majority of the votes, also imposes, as I said a little while ago, though it is not expressed in totidem verbis, another duty. It expressly stipulates what the House shall do in certain contingencies, and I say it is conclusive that the House must judge whether that and I say it is conclusive that the House must judge whether that contingency has occurred, and the House cannot judge without it verilies every vote.

Mr. ROBINSON. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question ?

Mr. McLANE. Certainly.
Mr. ROBINSON. I understand the gentleman from Maryland to take the strong, open ground that the Constitution expressly gives the two Houses of Congress the authority to count the vote. Is that

Mr. McLane. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Robinson] will not forget that when I referred to my friend from New Jersey [Mr. Robeson] I said that I was dealing with the two exceptions he made; where the power was expressly granted, as in the case of impeachment, and where it is reasonably deducible from a power that peachment, and where it is reasonably deductive from a power that is granted.

Mr. ROBINSON. The reason I put the question is that I noticed in the remarks of the gentleman from Maryland yesterday that he said that the power was expressly conferred by the Constitution upon the two Houses to participate in the count. I noticed that remark yesterday, and I see that it is in the RECORD of to-day unchanged.

Mr. McLane. So it is.

Mr. ROBINSON. Now I want the gentleman to point to the language of the Constitution which confers that power; not from which it can be implied or inferred, but which expressly confers that power.

Mr. McLANE. This will be a very unsatisfactory issue between the gentleman from Massachusetts and myself if by the word "express" he means that I shall find particular words which to his mind will express the idea.

Mr. ROBINSON. Is not that the ordinary understanding of an express declaration? Is it not different from an implied declaration or an inferential declaration? That is all I mean.

Mr. McLANE. The ordinary rule is this, universally admitted, that you shall take words and phrases in their true sense, in their true signification; that when you come to construe a law you shall construe it reasonably and intelligibly, and you shall take what you believe to be on your conscience a fair interpretation of the words and phrases.

Mr. ROBINSON. Is that anything more than inference or implication construction? Suppose the Constitution said, "the vote shall then be counted by him;" that would be express. If it said, "shall be counted by them," meaning the two Houses of Congress, that would be express. But when it says, "The President of the Senate shall, in the presence of the Senate and House of Representatives, open all the certificates and the votes shall then be counted," I want the gentleman from Maryland to state how that signifies in express language that the counting shall be done by the President of the Senate or by the two Houses. That may be the inference.

Mr. McLANE. I am only sorry that my answer involves a repetition of what I have already stated.

Mr. ROBINSON. I am sorry to interrupt the gentleman, but I know we are discussing this question not as partisans but as lawyers, to ascertain the facts.

Mr. McLANE. I can only repeat what I have said. When I take yers, to ascertain the facts.

Mr. McLane. I can only repeat what I have said. When I take the twelfth amendment of the Constitution I find certain specific sentences. I find "who shall be eligible as President;" I find "who has the qualifications necessary to be an elector." I also find in it sentences indicating who shall vote and how they shall authenticate and certify their votes. I find in it to whom they shall send their certificate; and I find in it the day fixed when the officer to whom the certificate is sent shall open it. I will stop just here to say that the most violent outrage that could be committed upon this or any instrument would be to add to it anything at all, any word or any idea beyond the power granted; and therefore I say to the gentleman from New Jersey.—I do not know how my friend from Massachusetts would treat this question—that when you read that the Vice-President shall open the votes and then presume—Chancellor Kent uses that word "presume;" he is not afraid to acknowledge his presumption—when, having read the word "open," you then presume to say that the same officer shall also count, it seems to me the most extravagant and exaggerated mode of construing statutes or fundato say that the same officer shall also count, it seems to me the most extravagant and exaggerated mode of construing statutes or fundamental laws that I ever heard of. The difference between us will, in my judgment, come after that; and it comes to the point to which the gentleman from Massachusetts addresses himself. I do not understand him now to occupy the position that the Vice-President can do anything more than open the certificates. Whatever he may think on this question he will take his own time to express it.

Mr. ROBINSON. Let me say here (though it is not essential in this connection) I do not take that position at all. What I maintain is that the power is not expressly given to either.

Mr. McLane. I understand the gentleman does not take that position, and I do not mean to put it upon him. I know that this power is not given to the Vice-President; and I know that it is a most violent presumption, whether it comes from Chancellor Kent most violent presumption, whether it comes from Chancellor Kent or the honorable gentleman from New Jersey, to suppose that because the Constitution permits the Vice-President to open the certificates, therefore he is authorized to count the votes. God only knows where we might be carried by such a rule of construction as

Now to the gentleman from Massachusetts I say that the twelfth Now to the gentleman from Massachusetts I say that the twelfth amendment, having provided that the Vice-President shall open the certificates, goes on and provides that the votes shall be counted, and that if no candidate has a majority of the whole number of electors appointed, then the House of Representatives shall elect a President. Now in that phrase I find the obligation of the House of Representatives to know whether anybody has a majority, and that to obtain that knowledge the counting and verification of the votes is an absolute necessity. How does my friend from Massachusetts gainsay that?

say that?
Mr. ROBINSON. It seems to me, if the gentleman wants me to answer now

Mr. McLane. I do. Mr. ROBINSON. The gentleman omitted unintentionally one little

Mr. McLANE. No, sir.
Mr. ROBINSON. Unintentionally the gentlemen omitted one little word—the word "then." The provision is, "the votes shall then be counted."

Mr. McLANE. And I omitted another word—"immediately"—
"the House of Representatives shall choose immediately the President" and the counting of the votes and the contingent action of Mr. McLANE. the House are simultaneous.

Mr. ROBINSON. Now I want to state the conclusion of the matter, as I see it. Suppose that the two Houses are assembled in this Hall; suppose that the President of the Senate opens the certificates and lays them before the two Houses. They are to be opened in the presence of the two Houses; and then, in that presence, the votes shall be counted, the two Houses shall then know the result of that count, the declaration, if there be one, being made in their presence; and then immediately they shall, if necessary, proceed to discharge the duty devolving upon them. It does not require even an announcement. The two Houses are present designedly in order that they may know the result, and they are bound to know it. As to the question who shall count, it does not signify anything that the two Houses are there and in a certain contingency are to take immediate action. My friend strains the point I submit to him, (I only make this remark in order to bring him out if he will bear with me,) he strains the point when he says that because the Houses, being present and informed of the result, have, in case there is no election, a certain duty to perform—

Mr. ROBINSON. I deny the assumption that because the two-Houses have a subsequent duty to perform they also have a prior duty.

Mr. McLANE. That is not what I said. I stated that the one duty could not be performed without the performance of the other, the varification of the votes.

could not be performed without the performance of the other, the count including the verification of the votes.

Mr. ROBINSON. That is the inference as it comes to my mind.

Mr. McLANE. I want the gentleman's attention and I want his answer on this point. I say that the twelfth amendment of the Constitution, in imposing upon the Vice-President the duty of opening the certificates, proceeds thus:

certificates, proceeds thus:

The President of the Senate shall, in the presence of the Senate and House of Representatives, open all the certificates and the votes shall then be counted; the person having the greatest number of votes for President, shall be the President, if such number be a majority of the whole number of electors appointed; and if no person have such a majority, then from the persons having the highest numbers not exceeding three on the list of those voted for as President, the House of Representatives shall choose immediately, by ballot, the President.

Now, what I contend is that this language imposes upon the House an absolute necessity to count and verify the votes. That is my position, and that is the position which the gentleman from Massachusetts must deal with. The question is not a matter for his caprice or for mine. The question is what the English language means. And this is a power which cannot be delegated. It is a power which the two Houses must absolutely exercise. "Then"—that is the word the gentleman used—then and there, if there is no election, the House immediately proceeds to elect a President and the Senate elects a Vice-President.

Vice-President

The point I make to the gentleman from Massachusetts and the The point I make to the gentleman from Massachusetts and the gentleman from New Jersey is that there is no other reading of the twelfth article which gives sense. Why, Mr. Speaker, I am absolutely amazed that a gentleman of the high intelligence and high standing in public life of the gentleman from New Jersey should undertake in the face of this House to talk about bad precedents for five years on this question, that he should endeavor to escape from Abraham Lincoln's message and yet bear on his shoulders the weight of those illustrious men who themselves gave us this Constitution, themen who framed it, the men whose deliberations created the country, the men whose deliberations resulted in this bond, this fraternal tie, this Constitution which I have always regarded not only as fraternal. this Constitution which I have always regarded not only as fraternal, but, as the gentleman from New Jersey has said, as a matter of conscience and of honor to be taken for precisely what it means, recognizing that the rights of the States and the rights of the General Govnizing that the rights of the States and the rights of the General Government are all to be made subordinate to the true spirit and letter of that organic instrument. I can point to an uninterrupted series of precedents from the foundation of the Government to the present day, through the action of the eminent statesmen who framed the Constitution, an humble follower of whom only was Abraham Lincoln. He took no new departure when he told the two Houses of Congress it was their duty to count the electoral votes, and that they ought not to bring him into the question at all. He was then only following the lights which had preceded him. And does the gentleman from New Jersey feel he must extricate himself from the bad five years which seem to harass him so, and yet can but himself in the attitude of open seem to harass him so, and yet can put himself in the attitude of open seem to harass him so, and yet can pat himself in the attitude of open defiance to every precedent and every count of the electoral vote but one known to the history of this country.

Why, sir, it is impossible to pass it over unless it is taken as a very loose and very personal sentiment and opinion. I am very sure but few of his associates make themselves unhappy about carrying the weight of the precedents and responsibilities of those five years. I am very sure few of those upon whom he is obliged to lean, not only in the administration of the executive branch of the Government, but, I am sorry to say, in the future of this House, very few of those gentlemen show any disposition to acquit themselves of the responsibility of those five years. On the contrary both the President who was inaugurated in March, 1877—and I call him the President because I do not feel that I need be nice; he is at least the prima facie or de facto President, to follow out the argument of the gentleman or de facto President, to follow out the argument of the gentleman from New Jersey—but both that President and the President-elect have left us in no doubt that they are ready to adhere to all those bad precedents. They know very well, as the gentleman from New Jersey does, that all legislative power is vested in Congress, and that all judicial power is vested in the Supreme Court and such inferior courts as may be established by Congress, and they are ready, as he is, to avow their fidelity to that instrument, but they admonish us that although this Constitution leaves to the States the creation of electors who create the Legislature, they are ready to interpose the power of this Legislature to supervise and protect those electors and trample upon the authority and power of the several States upon whom the Constitution confers the right to create, supervise, and protect them.

If there is one point upon which they are more united than any other it is that they should again to-day revive the experience of those five years by taking charge of these electors. What is to become of this country if gentlemen who avow their submission, their patriotic obligation and attachment to the Constitution, can talk of protecting and supervising electors created by the States to elect the National Legislature?

Now this whole greation of the presidential count is part and par-

National Legislature?

Now, this whole question of the presidential count is part and parcel of the rule of construction which prevails on the other side. And I refer to it with no view at all of being disagreeable to the other side, but because I want to commune with my own friends on that point. I want to say to them, Mr. Speaker, that I find in that my hope for the future, knowing on that side of the House we have honorable gentlemen who in this matter of the electoral count mean to set the Constitution at defiance as they mean to set it at defiance set the Constitution at defiance as they mean to set it at defiance when they come to deal with the electors who elect the national Legislatures. I say in that I find my hope as a member of the oppowhen they come to deal with the electors who elect the national Legislatures. I say in that I find my hope as a member of the opposition. I will yet live to see my party in a majority if it will remain true to the Constitution on this question of counting the electoral votes as on every other question. And if the gentlemen on the other side choose to waste the time of this House by measures and means more or less discreditable until we come to the day when the electoral vote is to be counted, let them take the responsibility of that action. Let us await that day. When it comes let us take our seats and see that those votes opened by the Vice-President are genuine votes. Let us see that every elector is qualified, and let us take any step we please of inquiry and investigation to know whether those electors who have cast the votes are qualified electors. If, perchance, we should find, as was the case in 1877, that electors had voted who were not qualified, let us have the courage to refuse to certify or count such votes; and if we find, as was the case in 1877, the Vice-President opening a certificate where the votes alleged to have been certified were forgeries; if we find that an officer of a State, be he the governor or secretary of state, either by his own hand or by the hand of one of his creatures, forged the names of the electors and it is not a genuine certificate, then I hope we will have the courage now and forever to refuse to count such votes.

Not in this election of 1880 more than in every other election. Let us do as our fathers have done under similar circumstances, take our us do as our fathers have done under similar circumstances, take our seats when the Vice-President is to open the certificates, appoint our tellers, count the votes, and stand firm as honorable representatives of the people in the faithful discharge of our duty to certify to their genuineness as certificates, or to refuse to certify to them if cause is apparent, and if it appears that none of the candidates have a majority we should elect a President. I take occasion here to say, Mr. Speaker, that for one I have never known a man who did not regret having had occasion to vote for the electoral bill of 1877. I have never met one who did not regret the supposed necessity for it; but I look back with infinite satisfaction to know that whatever might have been the political clamor and fear of danger the democratic candidates for the Presidency in 1876 and 1880 believed it to be the duty of this House to count the votes, and if no man appeared to have a majority then to have elected a President under the terms of the Constitution. And I say further, Mr. Speaker, that I have never met a man in any part of this country, however humble in life, who did not feel that when we delegated that power and duty and responsibility to another tribunal that the responsibility was still with the House, and that if there was shame or dishonor in connection with that convention or tribunal that shame and dishonor reacted upon us. Therefore it is that I have never felt myself at liberty to denounce the tribunal. But I will never while I live give a vote to create another, and nothing, as far as I am concerned, can meet with more determined opposition than the preposition of the gentleman from New Jersey seats when the Vice-President is to open the certificates, appoint our and nothing, as far as I am concerned, can meet with more determined opposition than the proposition of the gentleman from New Jersey that we should create some such tribunal. There is no tribunal that he can suggest, other than the two Houses of Congress, that I would accept. I believe, sir, that to be the express command of the Constitution. I believe that to be the real sense and spirit of the twelfth amendment of the Constitution.

amendment of the Constitution.

Mr. Speaker, it was not my intention to have consumed so much time in this discussion, and I beg pardon for having occupied the attention of the House for so long a time upon this point, because in 1877 the same point was presented and elaborated in a manner that I have never heard surpassed by the honorable chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, Mr. KNOTT. I am going over an argument which he made on that occasion and to which I listened with profound attention, though not a member of this House at the time. I sat in the seat now occupied by my friend from Indiana while the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary delivered his speech. Then, sir, I had the mortification of hearing, as he sat down, the honorable gentleman from Ohio rise in his place and move the report from the joint committee of this House and Senate creating the tribunal known as the electoral commission. I felt then and I feel now that the seat of power was in this House. To-day I deeply regret that the House did not exercise it. I refer to it now, sir, because I think we are approaching the same crisis that we had to meet in that election. I think as gentlemen on the other side continue their manifestations of hostile spirit with more or less civility, because this side of the House must have noticed the difference of tone in which the subject was treated by the honorable gentleman from Ohio and the gen-tleman from New Jersey, they will be unwilling to accept any adjustment of the question.

Such a crisis is altogether unnecessary, for, except in the case of a State that voted for Hancock, there is no question in any State. There is a question as to the vote of the State of Georgia, and, of course, so far as I am concerned as an individual, whatever opinions I may entertain or have expressed to-day which embarrass me in voting to receive the electoral vote from that State shall be logically applied. I shall hope to relieve myself, however, for I can conceive of no more disagreeable duty than to exclude the vote of a State. If there is anything more disagreeable—indeed I may say detestable—than rejecting the vote of a State without good cause it would be to If there is anything more disagreeable—indeed I may say detestable—than rejecting the vote of a State without good cause, it would be to count the vote of a State in opposition to its own expressed choice. That is the great crime of the period. That is the crime of the republican party. They have voted two States against the wishes of the people as expressed in the constitutional way. They have permitted perjury and forgery as a mode of securing and certifying votes, and that crime, I hold, is greater even than the crime of refusing to receive the vote of a State without just cause. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, if I should come to the conclusion that I cannot receive the vote of the State of Georgia, I shall do it with the utmost regret and feel that I must have unanswerable warrant in the facts of the case. But that is the only State in which there is or appears to be any dif-But that is the only State in which there is or appears to be any difficulty. The States have all voted at the proper time, and there is no pretense anywhere that there is any reason why the votes which have been cast for General Garfield shall not be counted. If, then, gentlemen, in the face of these facts, stand here and endeavor to give the Vice-President the power to count the vote himself, it is a direct attempt at usurpation that looks to the future, and there is no legislative action that is not justifiable to defeat that purpose. What would become of this country if the republican party were able at the next election to count the votes?

Mr. CALKINS. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. MÅLANE. Vos sir

Mr. McLANE. Yes, sir,

Mr. CALKINS. I think I must have misunderstood the gentleman. I understood him to say that he was satisfied that the judicial power to count these votes rested entirely in this House under the Constitution.

Mr. McLANE. Yes, so far as it is a judicial power.
Mr. CALKINS. Now I want to ask the gentleman whether it requires the concurrence of the Senate and the House to reject the vote of any State, or whether either House can reject a vote; because I understood the gentleman to say that the power resided in this House.

Does he mean that?

Mr. McLANE.

Mr. McLANE. I mean that it resides in the two Houses. I am glad that the gentleman from Indiana has asked me the question, because it enables me to call the attention of the gentleman from because it enables me to call the attention of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. Robeson] to his criticism on this resolution yesterday. He claimed that it made this distinction, that it required two Houses to concur in rejecting a vote where there was only one return, whereas one House could reject it if there were two returns. There is no such thing in the resolution. The resolution requires the concurrence of the two Houses to reject or to receive.

Mr. ROBESON. If it requires the concurrence of two Houses to receive a vote, then one House can reject it. One declining to receive will reject.

Mr. McLANE. That is a mere play upon words.

Mr. ROBESON. It may be a play upon words, but it is not child's

Mr. McLANE. It is child's play too. This resolution provides in one paragraph if there be only one return there shall be no vote counted without the concurrence of the two Houses. The next paragraph is as follows:

If more than one list of votes of electors from any State, or paper purporting to be such list, has been submitted to each House for its decision upon objections made thereto, and it shall appear that the Houses have not concurred in receiving either of said lists as the authentic and lawful list—

Then neither shall be counted.

Mr. ROBESON. If one House refuses, then one House rejects.

Mr. McLANE. I think it is impossible for the English language to Mr. McLane. I think it is impossible for the English language to make it more plain. You cannot reject a vote of a State, even where you have two returns, unless both Houses agree, though the failure to agree results from one House rejecting one certificate and the other House rejecting the other; and you cannot count the vote of a State where there is only one return unless both concur in receiving.

Mr. NEWBERRY. Now, suppose under the very clause the gentleman has just read there are two lists, and the Senate rejects one and the House the other, can neither be received?

Mr. McLane. No, sir.

Mr. NEWBERRY. In that case they do not concur.

Mr. McLane. Certainly not.

Mr. NEWBERRY. Both Houses have not concurred in rejecting either list.

either list.

Mr. McLANE. The Senate has rejected one, and the House has rejected the other. That is the case the gentleman puts, and it is one

Mr. NEWBERRY. Yes, sir. If one of them is the original list, it is ruled out of the count by one House alone.

Mr. McLANE. The gentleman says "if"—

Mr. NEWBERRY. You cannot avoid that conclusion.

Mr. McLANE. Suppose it is the original list. The point I make is, you must have the concurrence of two to count any vote. That is my position.

Mr. CASWELL. Who will count the vote if both Houses do not

Mr. McLANE. The gentleman from Wisconsin has listened to me with very little attention if he does not understand you cannot count any vote unless both the Senate and House concur. And for this reason, that both the Senate and House are obliged to perform a duty if no-body is elected; and it would be a most extraordinary state of things body is elected; and it would be a most extraordinary state of things if you had it any other way.

This resolution is drawn upon the theory that I have given to-day of this twelfth amendment of the Constitution; and it is that the Senate shall elect a Vice-President and the House shall elect a President, the one in case no President is elected and the other in case no dent, the one in case no President is elected and the other in case no Vice-President is elected. Very well, then, both must concur; both must verify the list. You cannot have a Vice-President elected by the Senate without that, or a President elected by the House; and the Senate, therefore, must act with the House before any vote can be declared genuine. That is the effect of this resolution, and it is a statesmanlike resolution.

And I will say more. It is precisely the same resolution that my honorable friend was not afraid to carry on his shoulders as a precedent, in the joint resolution of 1841; and if he had read Kent with the attention that was due that eminent jurist he would have found that though Chancellor Kent presumed for himself that the Vice-that though Chancellor Kent presumed for himself that the Vice-President might count the lists, yet, in a note to his disquisition, the information is given that in 1841 Congress passed a joint resolution providing that the Senate and the House should count.

Mr. ROBESON. Will the gentleman permit me to interrupt him a giral a represent.

single moment?

Mr. McLane. Yes, sir.
Mr. ROBESON. Without discussing the legal question involved in the opinion of Chancellor Kent, I desire to bring my friend back to the resolution itself.

Mr. McLANE. All right.

Mr. ROBESON. I find on the fifth page of the printed resolution this proposition:

If but one list of votes of electors has been submitted to each House for its decision and it shall so appear that the Houses have not concurred in rejecting said list, the same shall be received.

Then under that provision and under those circumstances it requires the joint action of both Houses refusing to receive a vote to throw it out, does it not?

Mr. McLANE. That is right. Now, your question on the second

Mr. ROBESON. I find on the same page a second proposition:

If more than one list of votes of electors from any State, or paper purporting to be such list, has been submitted to each House for its decision upon objections made thereto, and it shall appear that the Houses have not concurred in receiving either of said lists as the authentic and lawful list, they shall each be declared by the President of the Senate, in the presence of the Senate and House of Representatives, as being rejected.

Then under that clause it requires the action of only one House to Then under that clause it requires the action of only one House to reject a vote, does it not?

Mr. McLANE. No; not exactly.
Mr. ROBESON. Does not the first proposition require the action of both Houses to reject?

Mr. McLANE. Yes; I have already said so.
Mr. ROBESON. And does not the second proposition require the action of only one House to reject?

Mr. McLANE. No; it is the failure of the two Houses to concur, which is produced by the refusal of one to count.

Mr. ROBESON. And if it be a constitutional power, can it be a constitutional power living under one set of circumstances and dead under another? under another

Mr. McLANE. Oh, no; not at all. It is dead under neither when there is a concurrence of the two Houses.

Mr. ROBESON. Can it be a constitutional power and duty which is obligatory upon the two Houses when there is but one list, and yet the duty be taken away from them when there are two or more lists?

That is the question.

Mr. McLANE. Now the gentleman from New Jersey is coming down to a question of style, if it be not the play upon words. And although this House does not often resort to a committee on style, I am very free to say that it might do so with great profit and advantage, and many of our State Legislatures are more considerate in that regard

The only force there is in the observation of the gentleman is a criticism of style. He would endeavor to make it appear that this second paragraph enables one House to reject, because of the expression "and if it shall appear that the two Houses have not concurred in receiving either of said lists" then no vote shall be counted. Now, what is that but the proposition that no vote shall be counted.

except by the consent of the two Houses? That is the meaning of Mr. CALKINS. Right there, a moment, in order to make it plain.

Mr. McLANE. It is very easy to make it plain, if it is not so now.
Mr. CALKINS. Take the case of Georgia, for instance, by way of illustration, not that it is of any importance.
Mr. McLANE. That is a case that is coming up.
Mr. CALKINS. Suppose that some one should object to receiving the vote of Georgia, and the two Houses should separate for considering the matter, and the House of Representatives should declare in favor of counting the vote of Georgia, and the Senate should declare against counting it.

clare against counting it.

Mr. McLANE. It cannot be counted if there are two returns.

Mr. CALKINS. Then the action of one House determines the

Mr. CALKINS. Then the action of one House determines the question of counting the vote of that State.

Mr. McLANE. It is perfectly true that as a matter of phraseology it appears that one House does reject. But as a matter of fact the reason the vote is not counted is because the two Houses have not concurred in receiving it. [Laughter.] One House by not agreeing to count prevents a concurrence. And here I want to ask the gentleman from Indiana how can you get non-concurrence except by one House refusing to concur?

Mr. CALKINS. I am not speaking of the philosophy of language.

Mr. CALKINS. I am not speaking of the philosophy of language, but of the fact.

Mr. McLANE. I hold that the gentleman from Indiana is absolutely under an obligation to deal with the philosophy of language. He has undertaken to say that this paragraph permits one House to reject the vote of a State, whereas by the first paragraph the action of the two Houses is required to reject a vote. The language of the resolution does not express any other idea than that. One House, by not concurring, prevents the concurrence of the two Houses; and it is the failure of the two Houses to concur that causes the vote to be rejected.

[Here the hammer fell.]
The SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. SPRINGER.) The time of the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. McLane] has expired.

Mr. CALKINS. I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gen-tleman be extended, if he desires it.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Maryland will

Mr. HUNTON. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question right there?

Mr. McLANE. Certainly.
Mr. HUNTON. I merely desire to say, in the direction of the illustration of the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. CALKINS,] that it is palpable to my mind that there is no rejection or reception of an electoral vote under the joint rule now being considered, if it shall be adopted, except by the concurrence of the two Houses of Congress.

Mr. CALKINS. Now, upon that point—

Mr. HUNTON. I have not said anything yet to which there can be a reply. When I come to that point I will give way to my friend with great pleasure.

Mr. CALKINS. Probably I can anticipate what the gentleman is given a representation.

Mr. CALKINS. Probably I can anticipate what the gentleman is going to say.

Mr. HUNTON. I do not think the gentleman can anticipate it.

Mr. CALKINS. I know it takes a smart man to anticipate what the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HUNTON] may say.

Mr. HUNTON. When I have said anything to which the gentleman from Indiana can reply, I will yield to him with great pleasure. But I say that the joint rule under discussion provides, as my friend from Maryland has argued so well, that no vote shall be received and no vote rejected except by the concurrent vote of the two Houses. This is proposed as the rule of both Houses of Congress; it is a joint rule, and therefore it is the declaration of the concurrent action of the two Houses of Congress. If either House objects to the reception of a vote under the circumstances there dejects to the reception of a vote under the circumstances there de-clared, then the two Houses, speaking through the joint rule, reject that vote; and, on the other hand, if neither House objects to the vote coming in, then the two Houses, concurrently speaking through the joint rule under discussion, declare that the vote shall be re-ceived. So that nothing can be done under the operation of this joint rule, if it be adopted, except by the concurrent action of the two Houses of Congress. There is no escape from this, if you will allow me to say so.

me to say so.

Mr. CALKINS. Now I supposed the gentleman was about te say just what he has said. I had anticipated correctly what he was going to say. I think I can state it more briefly than the gentleman has. If there is anything that is admitted in the construction of this rule by all, it is that if a member in the joint convention objects to the counting of the vote from a State, and the Houses separate, and upon a vote one House assents to its being counted and the other dissents, that vote is not to be counted under the language of this rule.

Mr. HUNTON. Of course.

Mr. CALKINS. New we agree on that. But the gentleman says that of course if both Houses agree in reference to counting the vote, it will be counted; and if both agree that it shall not be counted, it will be counted; and if both agree that it shall not be counted, then it is not to be counted. Now, what does that add, by way of illustration, or in any other way, to the point under discussion? The fact remains that if one House votes that the electoral vote of a State shall not be counted under the conditions enumerated, it is not to be shall not be counted under the conditions enumerated, it is not to be counted. You may philosophize as much as you please; that is the result. You may talk of the language as much as you please, it amounts, as the gentleman from Georgia says, to the action of one House rejecting the electoral vote of a State.

Mr. HUNTON. Was my friend never in a meeting where one portion of the meeting agreed to be bound by another?

Mr. CALKINS. I have some recollection of such a case.

Mr. HUNTON. I presume so; and this is a similar case. The two Houses of Congress, acting for the purpose of counting the electoral vote, agree by the concurrent action of the two Houses in adopting a rule that in given circumstances we shall agree upon a certain result. It is a mere mode of arriving at the concurrent agreement of the two Houses; and that mode is prescribed in this rule. Have we not a Houses; and that mode is prescribed in this rule. Have we not a right to do that?

Mr. CALKINS. I am not discussing what right we may have; I am discussing the effect of the rule. When we come to the question am discussing the elect of the rule. When we come to the question of right, I have something else to say.

Mr. HUNTON. As I understand the nature, operation, and effect of this joint rule, it prescribes the mode by which the two Houses can come to a concurrent agreement upon every question which can arise in connection with the count.

Mr. McLANE. Before this controversy goes further, I wish to say that I inadvertently made, in reply to the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. Calkins,] an admission which I want to correct. When the gentleman suggested the case of Georgia to me, I was dealing with the second paragraph, following out the suggestions of the gentleman from New Jersey; and in reference to that paragraph I had not the State of Georgia in my mind. I want the gentleman from Indiana to observe that if we refer to the State of Georgia at all, we refer to it in view of notorious facts.

Mr. CALKINS. Certainly; by way of illustration I referred to Georgia as if it came under the second clause of the rule.

Mr. McLANE. The State of Georgia comes up with one return; therefore that State does not come under the second paragraph at all.

Mr. CALKINS. That is true. Mr. McLANE. The State of Georgia comes under the first paragraph.

Mr. CALKINS. That is true.

Mr. McLANE. I only wanted to make this correction.

Mr. CALKINS. I was arguing, however, simply by way of illustration, as if two returns had come from Georgia.

Mr. HUNTON. I want my friend from Indiana to address his attention to this point—that the object of a joint rule on this subject is to establish a mode by which the concurrent agreement of the two Houses shall be arrived at.

Mr. CALKINS. I was not discussing that proposition at all. Of course I have my own view on that subject.

Mr. HUNTON. I am discussing the point with reference to the illustration the gentleman gave awhile ago.

Mr. CALKINS. I was only discussing it with regard to the language of the rule.

Mr. HUNTON. So am I. We do not differ about that. guage of the proposed rule prescribes a mode by which the concurrent action of the two Houses shall be arrived at on every subject. Now this rule, if adopted, is adopted by the concurrent action of the Now this rule, it adopted is adopted by the concurrent action of the two Houses; and the effect of this concurrent action is that we concur in the declaration and agreement that if when the votes for President and Vice-President are being counted there are two sets of certificates before the two Houses, neither certificate shall be counted unless the Senate so agrees and the House also agrees.

Mr. ROBINSON. In other words, as you understand the meaning of the rule, we concur in declaring that if the two Houses have disagreed they have agreed.

Mr. HUNTON. No, sir; the gentleman may so construe it; but I do not think any other man would.

do not think any other man would.

Mr. ROBINSON. Then I shall have that honor.

Mr. HUNTON. It is a distinguished one, and I will not rob the gentleman of it.

Mr. ROBINSON. And I would not have you.

Mr. HUNTON. Instead of that being the construction of the rule as I maintain it, the construction is that we both agree that the joint as I maintain it, the construction is that we both agree that the joint rule prescribes unless the two Houses can agree one of these two is the proper certificate then neither ought to be received.

Mr. ROBINSON. That is my idea exactly. The gentleman has got my idea; and I protest against the gentleman from Virginia taking my thunder. [Laughter.]

Mr. McLANE. That shows what a play upon words it is.

Mr. HUNTON. When this electoral bill was before the House for adoption—which has been criticised by my friend from Maryland; and we do not differ about it at all—when that bill was before the two Houses of Congress a constitutional difficulty arose about taking two Houses of Congress a constitutional difficulty arose about taking away from the two Houses the right to count the electoral vote, and those gentlemen who were here and listened to the debate will recollect that was the great difficulty in the way of most gentlemen on this side of the House who finally voted for that bill. Their constitutional difficulty was solved by the fact the bill finally said the two Houses of Congress might by concurrent action reject a decision of the electoral commission. That being in the bill, it was supposed to be constitutional, because the right to decide the question still rested with the two Houses of Congress, and the electoral commission was with the two Houses of Congress, and the electoral commission was only a mode to get at the points to be presented to the two Houses. That was the ground upon which that bill was passed.

Mr. CALKINS. I do not understand that was the universally accepted ground upon which it was passed, but that that only satisfied the mind of those who believed this House ought to count the vote.

Mr. HUNTON. I did not say it satisfied everybody.

Mr. CALKINS. So I understood the gentleman. That is the ground upon which it was finally acceded to by those who had scruples on the subject of delegating the authority to any other body.

Mr. HUNTON. I do not say that was the influence which operated upon the minds of all gentlemen.

Mr. CALKINS. I radically differ from the gentleman with reference to this House having any power at all to decide any judicial or quasi-judicial question involved in the count.

Mr. HUNTON. Did not the gentleman vote for the electoral bill?

Mr. CALKINS. I did not; but I do not know but what that was the better plan to get out of the difficulty then existing.

Mr. HUNTON. Did not the gentleman vote for it?

Mr. CALKINS. I was not in the House at the time it passed.

Mr. HUNTON. I beg the gentleman's pardon.

Mr. CALKINS. If I had been in the House, I think I probably should have voted for the bill.

Mr. HUNTON. If the gentleman had been in the House and had

Mr. CALKINS. If I had been in the House, I think I probably should have voted for the bill.

Mr. HUNTON. If the gentleman had been in the House and had voted for the bill, it would have been a direct and emphatic acknowledgment of the right of the two Houses of Congress by concurrent action in the shape of a bill to regulate the count of the electoral vote.

Mr. CALKINS. Allow me to say a word in reference to what ground I should have placed it upon. There was a necessity which had arisen which had to be met by the conservatism of members— Mr. CALKINS.

Mr. HUNTON. That is the objection I have to that side of the House

Mr. CALKINS. If the gentleman pleases, let me complete my suggestion. My judgment is that when this clause in the twelfth article of the Constitution was adopted the questions which have since arisen, and which had to be practically settled, were not in the minds at all of the framers of that instrument. It may be justly said these questions which have since arisen for settlement were omitted case, and in the general score of Congress to carry out the powers and and in the general scope of Congress to carry out the powers and duties under the Constitution the House and the Senate had the right to legislate and create, if you please, a tribunal to settle judicial questions coming up with reference to the electoral count, as to cial questions coming up with reference to the electoral count, as to-qualification, forgery, or anything else.

Mr. HUNTON. I was about to say that is one of the main objec-tions I have to the other side of the House, that whenever they want to do anything which is plainly prohibited by the Constitution, then they allege a great necessity has arisen to override the Constitution. Now, sir, I believe the Constitution is the charter by which we are to guide our action, and if a thing is not in the Constitution, we have then no right to do it, no matter what the necessity may be.

Mr. CALKINS. I do not mean—

Mr. HUNTON. I do not wish, Mr. Speaker, to trespass longer upon the time of the House. I only desire to say, if this rule be adopted as a joint rule of the two Houses of Congress, everything that is done under it has the concurrent action and support of the two Houses a joint rule of the two Houses of Congress, everything that is done under it has the concurrent action and support of the two Houses.

Mr. CALKINS. But before the gentleman takes his seat I want to say that it is not my opinion that the House possesses the power as a matter of necessity, but that it possesses the power under the general provision of the Constitution, which gives to this House and the Senate not only the right, but makes it a duty to carry out by proper legislation all of its provisions. Hence a tribunal to decide these questions is legitimately an act of legislation.

Mr. HUNTON. That is all I maintain.

Mr. CALKINS. This resolution, however, is now presented, and is being pressed because of some supposed necessity for it.

We are simply quarreling here about a sentiment. It would not take ten minutes if we were out of the House to agree as to what ought to be done in the premises; but here we are simply wasting time and quarreling about what I may call a matter of sentiment.

Mr. COX. Will my friend allow me?

Mr. CALKINS. Certainly.

Mr. COX. We did not understand the gentleman's expressions overhere. He did not raise his voice as loud as he is in the habit of raising it. Did he say he would "override" or "upturn" the Constitution in an emergency of that kind?

ing it. Did he say he would "override" or "upturn" the Constitution in an emergency of that kind?

Mr. CALKINS. Oh, no! not at all.

Mr. COX. We were unable to hear what the gentleman said overhere. I would be glad if he would repeat his language.

Mr. CALKINS. Idid not say that I would upturn the Constitution or attempt to override it. My friend from New York has always been a great stickler for the Constitution. So have I: though we may differ as to what it means.

Mr. COX. We on this side understood the gentleman to say that in an emergency like the electoral commission of four years ago, or for some other great purpose, he would not be such a great stickler for the Constitution.

Mr. CALKINS. No, sir, I did not say that. I said this—

Mr. SPARKS. You said you would vote for a measure that would settle it which might be unconstitutional.

Mr. CALKINS. No; I said that the necessity of 1876 for some action made it imperative upon Congress to adopt some means to meet the difficulty. I believe that in the great conservative judgment of the delegates of the people there ought to be found some way out of all difficulties under the Constitution. That is what I said, and I am perfectly willing to aid in bringing about some measure that will accomplish what the Constitution requires to be done under the present circumstances.

Mr. COX. Help us now, then, to adopt some conservative system.

Mr. CALKINS. And I say further, Mr. Speaker, and repeat what I have already said, that in my judgment there is no necessity for this quarrel; it is simply one of sentiment; that is all. If we would lay it aside we could agree in ten minutes about what ought to be done.

I hope the gentleman will indicate what he thinks Mr. COX. I hope the gentieman will indicate what he tilliks ought to be done. Please state what should be done to meet this difficulty, so that we can agree upon it or not. I want to see if we can agree upon what the cancus of last night—

Mr. CALKINS. I am not going to expose the secrets of the caucus for the benefit of my friend from New York. [Laughter.] I know he would like to get at them, but he cannot through me.

Mr. COX. We only want you to help us to adopt some conservations.

tive plan.

Mr. MILLS. With the consent of the gentleman from Maryland, I would like to ask a question?

Mr. McLANE. Certainly.

Mr. MILLS. I understand the gentleman holds to the doctrine that no vote can be counted without the concurrence of both branches of the National Legislature. Now, the case in the bill under consideration where but one return comes up from a State, and the question is raised as to counting that, one House assents and the other House dissents, then the gentleman from Maryland agrees that vote cannot be counted. Now, sir, change the illustration from Georgia to New York. Say Georgia voted democratic and that the contest is over the State of New York; that the vote of New York, if counted for Hancock, would elect him; or if counted for Garfield, Garfield would be elected; or if not counted at all, Hancock would be elected. Now, when that question comes before the joint assembly of the two Houses, assume that the Senate will vote that the vote of New York shall be counted for Garfield, then you will agree that vote ought to be counted under this rule?

Mr. McLANE. That is what the rule says.

Mr. MILLS. Well, that is what the rule says, and then Garfield must be declared elected as President of the United States. Now, must be declared elected as President of the United States. Now, another question. With much of your argument, which I think is just, I am willing to agree. But take this case: The House of Representatives is made the judge of the contingency, or when the contingency happens that no election has taken place, and when it must proceed under the Constitution to elect a President of the United States. Now, in that joint assembly the House of Representatives declares that the vote of New York is a fraud, and comes back into this House, or rather remains here where the certificates are opened, and proceeds to act, do you not have, then, by virtue of the con-struction you place upon the Constitution and this bill, two Presidents, both elected legally and constitutionally under the terms and by the logic of your argument?

Mr. McLANE. No. sir; the election is under the twelfth section of the Constitution. You have a provision made for a President and for a Vice-President; these electors are to vote for both. Now, when these certificates come to be counted by the Senate and House, both Houses have a duty to perform, which cannot be performed, you will observe, unless there is a concurrence of action between them. Now, a contingency arises, and that is the same contingency for each. The Senate is to elect the Vice-President when that contingency arises, and the House of Representatives is to elect the President, if no person voted for has a majority of the votes. The obligation is upon both Houses, and they are therefore both required to concur in counting a vote. There cannot be a difference between the two Houses at the final issue. There may be before you reach the final issue; there may be an opinion on the part of the House that New York ought not to be counted, but the House has not the right to refuse to count the vote of New York without the concurrence of the Senate. Therefore, as the House cannot refuse to count the vote of New York without as the House cannot retuse to count the vote of New York without the consent of the Senate, if the Senate does not give its consent the contingency has not arisen when the House is to proceed to elect.

Mr. MILLS. You place your argument upon the apex of the pyramid instead of the base. I hold the position to be a sound one, and the argument to be unanswerable, that the vote must be counted by the two branches of the National Legislature. I hold with the report and speech of the distinguished chairman of the Committee on the Indicipant the honorable gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Kyorra] Judiciary, the honorable gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. KNOTT,] and the able speech of my friend from Virginia, [Mr. Tucker,] on that question, that both Houses constitute the tribunal ordained by the Constitution to count the vote for President and Vice-President, and that both Houses must concur.

Mr. McLANE. Very well.

Mr. MILLS. Very well. If you say that both Houses will concur as to whether you have elected a President or not, both concur as to whether they have not elected a President, or both concur whether the House should proceed to the election of a President because they agree that there is no election, there cannot under that construction arise the difficulty which you contemplate in your argument; whereas, if you allow the Senate and the House to act as you contemplate, and say that the votes shall be counted by one House whether the other House concurs or not, you impose upon the bill an objection to which I cannot give my assent; and on the occasion of the electoral commission bill, when that was before the House, I made a speech against it on the same ground that I am arguing in reference to this matter. reference to this matter.

Mr. McLANE. The difference between my friend from Texas and myself is precisely the difference that exists between the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Robinson] and myself. But the gentleman from Massachusetts has solved the difficulty and come to a concurrence with myself and the gentleman from Virginia. It is exactly the same point. The non-concurrence is reached by the refusal of the one House. The non-concurrence is effected in that way. It might be in another way, but that is the way the non-concurrence occurs; and because of the non-concurrence the vote cannot be

Mr. MILLS. But your resolution does not say that.

Mr. McLANE. If that is not the correct view of the section, it certainly is the intention of the section, and that is why I say the argument so far as presented by the gentleman from Texas is a mere verbal criticism; it is a mere question of style. It strikes the gentleman is mind that because one House by not concurring prevents. tleman's mind that because one House by not concurring prevents a concurrence, therefore it is one House that prevents the vote being counted. But that is not so in truth. What prevents the vote being counted is the non-concurrence; and it is absolutely impossible to have it otherwise, since both Houses have this action to take in case of non-concurrence.

Mr. ROBINSON. I wish the gentleman from Virginia to notice that another gentleman in this House has taken my view.

Mr. SPARKS, (to Mr. ROBINSON.) He says you and the gentleman from Virginia agree.

Mr. ROBINSON. Well, there are three of us, including the gentleman from Virginia.
Mr. MILLS. The resolution says this:

If but one list of votes of electors from any State has been so submitted to each House for its decision, and it shall appear that the Houses have not concurred in rejecting said list—

You put a double negative there; that confuses the ideathe same shall be received.

Mr. McLANE. I beg my friend from Texas to understand that we all agree as to the intention of this resolution. We all agreed perfectly on this side of the House that we proposed to have a concurrence of the two Houses, and we do not propose to count any vote where there is not concurrence.

Mr. MILLS. Then you will agree to an amendment to make that Mr. McLANE. We will agree to an amendment if it be necessary. But I do not think I am called to consume more time in this verbal criticism.

Mr. SPARKS. Will the gentleman from Maryland allow me a moment 7

ment?
Mr. McLANE. Yes, sir.
Mr. SPARKS. This resolution contemplates that when there is a single return it shall be accepted unless the two Houses concur in rejecting that single return. That is correct, is it not?
Mr. McLANE. Yes, sir.
Mr. SPARKS. Then, if there is more than one return—if there be two returns—the resolution requires the concurrence of the two Houses in accepting. That is what the resolution provides, as I

Mr. MILLS. Now, suppose there is only one return from the State of New York, for instance

New York, for instance— Mr. SPARKS. The return from New York comes on some authority, and it is to be accepted unless the two Houses agree to reject. But if there be two returns from New York neither can be accepted without the concurrence of both Houses.

Mr. MILLS. We will suppose the vote of New York has been fraudulently made out in the interest of one set of electors; that the electors in whose interest that vote has been made out are in a majority in the Senate; that the party opposed to them are in a majority in the House of Representatives. That would be the same sort of thing we saw here four years ago. Now, when the question comes up before the joint assembly of the two Houses whether that vote of the State of New York shall be counted, the Senate will say it should be, because the vote is on its side of the question; the House will say it shall not be counted, the Senate will say it should be the question. shall not be counted, because it is against its side of the question. Under those circumstances, by this resolution this vote has to be counted, and the person for whom the vote of New York is counted is made President of the United States. But the law says the House is made President of the United States. But the law says the House must judge of the contingency when it occurs, that the constitutional duty is placed upon it to elect a President. It says there has been no legal election, and it proceeds to elect a President.

Mr. SPARKS. Will the gentleman allow me a moment?

Mr. MILLS. Yes, sir.

Mr. SPARKS. This resolution has nothing to do with the determination of the House or Senate that there is no election. This is a joint rule for counting the electoral vote. Now if the vote of New York comes here properly certified, suppose the House accepts it and says it shall be counted and the Senate refuses and says it shall not be counted, the certification of the State bears something and the rejection of one House will not defeat it. The two Houses must concur in rejecting. That is a plain proposition, and I think it is Now if there are two returns, which, if any, is to be taken? Suppose one House says that one shall be taken and the other says the other shall be. That defeats both. As the gentleman from Virginia has argued, I think very clearly, there must be concurrence as to which shall be taken. But where there is a single return coming certified from a State, that bears something, it is prima facic of itself, and the concurrence of one House carries it.

Mr. MILLS. You cannot divest this House of the constitutional authority it possesses to elect a President of the United States when it determines the contingency happens provided for in the Constitution. Therefore, whatever provision you make for counting the vote tion. Therefore, whatever provision you make for counting the vote it should depend upon the concurrence of both Houses, so that there shall be no collision, no double Executive. So long as you leave it to be determined by one House against the will of the other, the Senate may declare that one person has been elected President and the House may proceed to elect another. But if you proceed upon the hypothesis that both Houses must concur in everything, then that contingency never can happen.

Mr. Mclank. The case as presented by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Mills] is after all a question upon the phraseology of this resolution. We are perfectly of one mind as to what we intend to express, and that is the idea of the gentleman from Texas. We mean to express the idea that the two Houses have to concur in rejecting a vote or in receiving a vote. Upon that point there is no difference a vote or in receiving a vote. Upon that point there is no difference of opinion I think on this side of the House. If these two paragraphs do not express that idea, then as a matter of course they ought to be amended.

That is why I took it upon myself to say that it was a question of That is why I took it upon myself to say that it was a question or style, a play upon words. And in saying that it was a play upon words of course I mean no disrespect to any one. Being perfectly satisfied in my own mind that both paragraphs express the same idea, that both require concurrence, I am quite at liberty to treat the criticism as a play upon words. To my mind it is so, and I do not think it is possible to express more clearly than these two paragraphs do express the idea that the two Houses must concur to count a vote or to reject a vote.

Of course I must be excused; the House cannot refuse me the full-est possible indulgence for having taken up any time over my hour, because I had said everything I had to say at the close of my hour. If I have held the floor since, it has been out of courtesy to those who desired to ask me questions.

Mr. LAPHAM Mr. Speaker, nothing but the importance of the question now under consideration would prompt me to occupy the attention of the House at this stage of the session with any remarks on the subject. In the course of some views submitted by me near on the subject. In the course of some views submitted by me near the close of the last session, when this concurrent resolution was under consideration, I ventured the prediction that the result of the then pending political canvass would be so overwhelming as to put to confusion the men who, in my judgment, were attempting to debauch the electoral count for party purposes by the processes of this concurrent resolution. That prediction has been verified, the result has been reached. It is conceded by our opponents on the other side of this House that the voice of the people has been so overwhelmingly expressed that no question can properly arise as to the counting of the electoral vote in February next. the electoral vote in February next.

the electoral vote in February next.

Why, then, I ask, is this question pressed at this time to the exclusion of the ordinary legitimate business of this House? There are fonteen hundred bills upon our Calendar, embracing much needed legislation. Why are the wheels of legislation blocked in order to consider this question at this time, when it is admitted that there is no necessity whatever for the operation of the extraordinary provisions of this proposed rule in the next presidential count? That there is lying behind all this some undisclosed purpose I am bound to infer from the pertinacity with which this matter is being pressed. Before another presidential election there will undoubtedly be either an amendment of the Constitution or a law of Congress, or both, covering this whole subject and there is no need of this rule as a preparaing this whole subject and there is no need of this rule as a prepara-

What is the joint rule under consideration? In reference to the first, second, and the fifth sections of this concurrent resolution, no controversy can arise between members of this House. They are the customary provisions for the meeting of the two Houses for the purpose of ascertaining and determining the state of the electoral vote, and to those provisions there can be no possible objection.

But the third section of this joint rule is one which arrogates to the two Houses of Congress where there is but one return, and to either House of Congress where there is more than one return, the right to defeat the will of the people and to reject the electoral vote of a State. I am sure no man can read this language and give any other possible interpretation to its provisions than that which I have

Mr. Speaker, far less than a return will justify the political majority of this House if this rule shall be adopted in rejecting the vote of a State. "If more than one list of votes of electors from any State, or paper purporting to be such list," &c., then either House may refuse to receive the vote of a State. What description of paper is referred to by this language? An official paper? Not at all. A paper certified by the governor and the secretary of state? Not at all. But a paper sent by the chairman of a democratic State committee will answer all the requirements of this provision, and justify the rejection of the chairman of a State.

tion of the electoral vote of a State.

Then, again, not to dwell longer upon this, for the mere statement of it shows its monstrosity, the last section is objectionable, for it provides that this rule, if adopted, shall stand until "by the affirmative action of one of the two Houses the same shall be vacated." to remain an unalterable law, unless there is the decision of one of the two Houses in favor of its repeal. This concurrent resolution comes here from the Senate with the avowal made on the part of the gentleman who has it in charge that there shall be no amendment whatever permitted to its provisions. We are compelled to vote upon it as it is, or to resort to such action as will save as from voting upon it in the form in which it has come to us, or else we cannot vote upon it

Sir, we accept this challenge. We are willing to meet this question and discuss it upon its merits. We are willing to justify ourselves in resorting to every expedient which is provided by the rules of parliamentary usage to defeat the accomplishment of this purpose. of parliamentary usage to defeat the accomplishment of this purpose. Now, if any question should be regarded as settled, judicially settled, in this country, it is the question determined by the voice of the leading statesmen of the country and by the decision of the electoral commission created by the Forty-fourth Congress, that there is no power anywhere in this House, in the Senate, in the two Houses in joint meeting, or in any tribunal which can be created by the action of the two Houses—to go behind the electoral return of a State. Such return comes to us under the Constitution clothed with absolute verity, and cannot be questioned. That is the whole theory of our verity, and cannot be questioned. That is the whole theory of our verity, and cannot be questioned. That is the whole theory of our system; and that is the settled determination as to the law.

Now, this resolution authorizes in the broadest terms a transgression of this rule. It empowers either of the two Houses or both Houses to go behind the returns of a State to inquire into the regularity of the action of the electors in the State or of the people in choosing their electors, and for any conceivable cause to throw aside the return and reject the vote of the State. So that even upon the idea claimed that the two Houses are to be participants in the mere counting of the electoral vote those who advocate that doctrine can counting of the electoral vote, those who advocate that doctrine cannot stand up and defend the proposed resolution. It authorizes something more than counting. It authorizes the determination, as the gentleman from New Jersey well said yesterday, of grave judicial questions. It erects the two Houses of Congress into a tribunal cial questions. It efects the two Houses of Congress into a triumal to review the whole action of the States in the choice of presidential electors. It blots out of existence the power and authority of the States and substitutes for the will of the people as expressed at the ballot-box the will of a political majority in the two Houses of Congress as to who shall fill the highest offices in the gift of the people. There is no escape from this, Mr. Speaker; it is the inevitable result of the provisions of this resolution.

But, sir, I am here prepared to show, as I have endeavored to show on a former occasion, that the two Houses of Congress under the Constitution are in no sense participators in the mere counting of the electoral vote; and, at the hazard of repeating much that I have said on former occasions, I beg again to call the attention of the House to the history of the adoption of this clause of the Constitution and the contemporaneous construction which it received at the hands of its

I find in the records of the convention that on the 4th of September, 1787, Mr. Brearly, from the committee of eleven, a committee appointed for the purpose of drafting a constitution, submitted a report in which the clause under consideration was framed in language which I shall read. It is the seventh subdivision of the clause in regard to the presidential election. I quote from Elliott's Debates, volume 4, page 172. It was reported in these words:

The President of the Senate shall in that House

open all the certificates, and the votes shall be then and there counted.

Nothing whatever was said in regard to the House of Representatives or the two Houses of Congress; but it was provided that the returns shall be sent to the President of the Senate, and the Presi-dent of the Senate shall in that House open all the certificates, and the votes shall then and there be counted; that is, in the Senate Chamber. That was the first proposition.

On the 6th of September, in the same year, it was moved and seconded (I read now from page 177 of the same volume) to insert the words "in the presence of the Senate and House of Representatives" after the word "counted."

Now let us read it as thus amended:

The President of the Senate shall in that House open all the certificates; and the votes shall be then and there counted in the presence of the Senate and House of Representatives.

This amendment was adopted. That was the last action of the convention upon this subject, except that to which I will now refer. This was the last vote taken by the body, and it clearly contemplated—as clearly as the English language can express the idea—that the Senate and House of Representatives were to be present as mere witnesses of a transaction to be performed by some one else. The convention then appointed a committee on revision or style. On the 11th of September the convention met, but the committee on revision not having reported, and there being no business before the convention, the House adjourned. On the next day, the 12th of Septem-

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I would like to ask the gentleman one question at this point.

Mr. LAPHAM. Certainly.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. The gentleman says that the two Houses of Congress sit as mere spectators of the count. Now suppose it should be obvious to the two Houses that the Vice-President had committed an error, must they sit and see that error go uncorrected? Have they no power even to make a suggestion by way of correction

Mr. LAPHAM. Undoubtedly they have power to make a suggestion, as I have power to make a suggestion when, while standing at the polls in my village, I see that the canvassers have made an

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. Suppose the Vice-President refuses to make the correction, where is the remedy?

Mr. LAPHAM. That is an unsupposable case. There is the very difficulty with all the suppositions which have been made here, as I hope to show before I get through.

Mr. DAVIS, of North Carolina. Will the gentleman allow me to ask a question?

Mr. LAPHAM. Certainly.

Mr. DAVIS, of North Carolina. In 1876 the vote of Louisiana was counted here. As subsequently appeared there were forged names of electors in the certificate from that State. If the gentleman from New York had known at the time that those names were forged would he have been willing to sit here as a witness of the count without any power to object, without any authority in either the House or the Senate, or the joint convention of both, to prevent the

Mr. LAPHAM. I do not happen to have knowledge of the circumstance to which the learned gentleman is pleased to refer. I have never before heard that any such fact existed; I do not believe now

Mr. DAVIS, of North Carolina. This is the first time within the last two years that I have heard it denied that the name of Levissee and two of his associates were forged in the Louisiana return. Does the gentleman deny that those names were forged?

Mr. REED. Will the gentleman from New York allow me to answer that question?

Mr. LAPHAM. Certainly.

Mr. REED. Ido deny that any vote was counted which was forged. On the contrary, an examination of the case demonstrated to the committee which examined it, the committee of which Mr. Potter was the head, that the forged certificates were not the ones which were counted. On the contrary, the certificates which contained the undoubted and unchallenged signatures were the ones which were counted by the electoral commission and afterward by the two Houses

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. Who made the discovery?
Mr. REED. The gentleman from Virginia will permit me to finish. Mr. REED. The gentleman from Virginia will permit me to finish. I noticed, or thought I noticed, in the discussion yesterday some statement of that kind, but I did not catch it with sufficient distinctness

Mr. DAVIS, of North Carolina. Were not the first certificates returned and never counted, on account of informality?

Mr. REED. I repeat what I said, that—

Mr. DAVIS, of North Carolina. Were they not returned, and was not a certificate of the governor of Louisiana sent here to a forged

Mr. REED. I will repeat what I said, that the certificate from Louisiana which was counted by the electoral commission contained

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I desire to ask my friend a question.
Mr. REED. And that no man will dispute who has examined it.
Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. Who discovered the forgery, and what became of the forged return?

Mr. REED. Now you want to go into a very wide discussion, which will not trouble my friend with.

Mr. LAPHAM. I do not wish the discussion to run on in that way.

Mr. Speaker, it is a little remarkable this monstrosity cannot be supported by gentlemen on the other side unless they assume either that some monstrous crime has been, or is about to be, committed in reference to the electoral vote. All their suppositions are of that character.

I come back now to the point as to the report of the committee on revision and style. It was made on the 12th of September, 1787. The clause will be found on page 191 of the same volume of Elliott's

Debates, and there it reads:

The President of the Senate shall, in the presence of the Senate and House of Representatives, open all the certificates and the vote shall then be counted.

So that it will be seen, for the purpose of having what was regarded a better form of expression, that the words "in the presence of the Senate and House of Representatives" were inserted after the word "shall," instead of being inserted after the word "counted," as the convention had voted they should be. The point is, does that make any substantial difference with regard to the effect of this provision that in the presence of the Senate and House of Representatives these certificates are to be opened and the votes counted. They—the two -are described by this language still as mere spectators.

But, sir, if there were any ambiguity in this language, if something were needed to aid us in its interpretation we have it in the contemporaneous practice of the men who framed this Constitution. All the facts on that subject have been referred to in this debate by gentlemen who have preceded me, and it is unnecessary for me to dwell at length upon them. It is sufficient to say that the convention which framed this Constitution recommended to the Continental Congress that it should fix a day for the choosing of members of Congress under the new Constitution, that it should fix a day for the meeting of Congress, and that the Senate should choose a presiding officer—for what? For what, Mr. Speaker, I ask? For the sole purpose of receiving and counting the first electoral vote. I have the language here which has been repeatedly quoted and it is unnecessary for me to repeat it.

They recommended them to choose a presiding officer for this special purpose of receiving the votes as provided by the Constitution, and to count them. John Langdon was selected as President of the Senate for that purpose, and when the time came in the Senate Chamber and in the presence of the two Houses he did open the certificates and count the votes, and ascertained that Washington was elected President and Adams Vice President. He certified over his signature he had done all these things, and all these matters are recorded in our

Here, then, is a practical interpretation of the provisions of the Constitution in this respect, put upon it by the men who framed it, and this was the practice of counting the electral vote from that period until 1865. There was an attempt made in the year 1800, as it was anticipated there might be trouble in counting the electoral vote, to legislate on this subject. The effort failed by the disagreement of the two Houses, and the count of the electoral vote was conducted as it had been in the preceding years. The Vice-President counted the vote, declared the result, and signed the certificate, although he was himself in some cases one of the candidates before

It is important that I shall here call attention to a very significant fact, and that is that notwithstanding the discussion under the proposed legislation of 1800, and the difficulty in interpreting this very clause, as gentlemen now suppose, the amendment—the twelfth section by way of amendment was adopted in 1803—after all that discussion, and the language of the Constitution in this respect was left precisely where the framers of the Constitution left it. If it had been supposed then that there was any question about the authority of the Vice-President to count the vote, it is fair to assume that in that amendment the men who framed the Constitution would have provided for it, and the fact that they amended it in other respects, leaving this section untouched, is conclusive evidence that they regarded it as free from difficulty, and the power of the Vice-President to count the vote as beyond any question. For three-quarters of a century, then, the Vice-President exercised this power. He exercised it without question. Vice-Presidents counted themselves into the Presidency. Men as notorious as Aaron Barr afterward became exercised this power, and exercised it without question.

The Government has suffered no detriment from the exercise of the power. There have been no forged returns or burgianted appropriation of the possession and custody of the officer, or on their passage to the Capitol. There has been no disturbance of the peace of the the country. All has been quiet and harmonious. This brings us down to the year 1865, when it was proposed that the two Houses of Congress, for causes which were deemed a justification for the act growing out of the troublesome condition of the country, should arrogate to themselves by a joint rule the exercise of this power. When they undertook to arrogate it to themselves in 1800, what did the men who aided in framing the Constitution say upon the sub-ject? I desire to call the attention of the House for a moment to what was said at that time by so great and distinguished a man as Mr. Pinckney, of South Carolina. He said:

Mr. Pinckney, of South Carolina. He said:

Knowing that it was the intention of the Constitution to make the President completely independent of the Federal Legislature, I well remember it was the object, as it is at present not only the spirit, but the letter of that instrument, to give to Congress no interference in or control over the election of a President.

It never was intended, nor could it have been safe in the Constitution, to have given to Congress thus assembled in convention the right to object to any vote, or even to question whether they vere constitutionally or properly given. This right of determining on the manner in which the electors shall vote, the inquiry into the qualifications and the guards that are necessary to prevent disqualified or improper men voting, and to insure the votes being legally given, rests and is exclusively vested in the State Legislatures. If it is necessary to have gnards against improper elections of electors and to institute tribunals to inquire into their qualifications, with the State Legislatures, and with them alone, rests the power to institute them, and they must exercise it. To give to Congress, even when assembled in convention, a right to reject or admit the vote of States, would have been so gross and dangerous an absurdity as the framers of the Constitution never could have been guilty of. How could they expect that in deciding on the election of a President, particularly where such election was strongly contested, that party spirit would not prevail and govern every decision? Did they not know how easy it was more than probable the members would recollect their sides, their favorite candidate, and, sometimes, their own interests? Or must they not have supposed that in putting the ultimate and final decision of the electors in Congress who were to decide irrevocably and without appeal, they would render the President their creation decide irrevocably and without appeal, they would render the President their creation decide irrevocably and without appeal, ture and prevent his assuming and exercising that independence in the performance of his duties upon which the safety and honor of the Government must for ance of his diffes upon which the ever rest.

They well knew that to give members of Congress a right to give votes in this election, or to decide upon them when given, was to destroy the independence of the Executive, and make him the creature of the Legislature.

election, or to decide upon them when given, was to destroy the independence of the Executive, and make him the creature of the Legislature.

If the bill is not passed we are to depend, as we have hitherto done, on the attachment of the States and the good sense and integrity of their executives. That the Constitution makes this dependence necessary, and as we have never yet been disappointed, we are to hope we never shall. But surely its friends never could have considered the extent and danger of giving to this committee, or even to Congress, the right to decide on double returns, or they must immediately have seen the extreme impropriety of attempting it. It is, in short, nothing less than holding out to the minority in all the States a temptation to dispute every election and to always bring forward double returns. In every State where the election is strongly-contested there will of course be a minority. It will be easily known by the measures of Congress to which candidate the majority of that body inclines, and whose friends will compose the committee that are to be thus packed and selected. If the minority in a particular State find that the candidate they have unsuccessfully supported is the favorite one with the majority of Congress or the committee, they will easily discover the means of raising objections to the validity of the return of the electors, insist that they themselves are elected, proceed to the length of meeting and voting, and transmit to Congress a double return. It will not be difficult for them to accompany this return with plausible reasons, and perhaps with such unfounded assertions and specious although false documents as to give to the committee some colorable reason for rejecting the return of the elector certified by the governor and admitting the other. Knowing the situation of the Union, how differently some States think from others on political questions, how divided Congress has been for some years on certain great and trying subjects, who that is a friend to harmony and th

Now, if there is to be a contest of the right of persons to hold the office of elector it seems to have been the contemplation of the framers of the Constitution that that was a matter to be provided for by the States themselves; that each State must determine for itself the election of electors, and determine in such mode as it shall provide any question that may arise between different persons claiming to be elected to that office. No jurisdiction over the subject seems to have been given to Congress; at least none such was in the mind, I should think, of the framers of the Constitution, looking at the provisions of that instrument.

I wish also to ask the attention of the House to the language of Senator BAYARD upon the same subject:

Without having given the examination or consideration to this subject that its importance demands, yet I have for a long time been of opinion that the constitutionality of this rule altogether may well be doubted. I do not think that anywhere in the Constitution can be found language in any degree constituting the Senate of the United States a factor or an actor in the election of the President of the United States.

I quote also what was said by the late distinguished Senator from Indiana, Mr. Morton:

Indiana, Mr. Morton:

I now come to the consideration of the twenty-second joint rule of the two Houses, adopted in 1865, in regard to the counting of the electoral vote. This rule was undoubtedly the result of a conviction in Congress of the necessity of providing some method for avoiding the dangers I have been discussing; but it was certainly adopted without much consideration, and with a view apparently of furnishing an additional safeguard against receiving electoral votes from States that had been in rebellion. But it is general in its character, is applicable to all the States, and will continue in operation until it is amended or repealed.

It is in my judgment the most dangerous contrivance to the peace of the nation that has ever been invented by Congress; a torpedo planted in the straits with which the ship of State may at some time come into fatal collision.

It is this "torpedo" which it is now proposed to place in the track of the ship of State which we are resisting. This concurrent voice of distinguished men on both sides led to the abrogation of the twentysecond joint rule, which was adopted in 1865.

Gentlemen on the other side have quoted from the indorsement of President Lincoln upon this subject. It is true in a brief note, for it should not be designated as a message returning it to Congress, he expressed an opinion which, as we lawyers say, was entirely obiter and without examination, and which would, I doubt not, seem to give color to the idea under which the twenty-second joint rule was adopted. But gentlemen should also remember that they have been in the belief of the colors of Mr. I insolve an above that they have been in the habit of speaking of Mr. Lincoln as an ignorant rail-splitter; and his opinion should hardly be quoted by them on a constitutional question. When the exigency for its passage passed away the men who framed it agreed to wipe it out, regarding it, as the gentleman from Kentucky has said, as a part of the odious legislation engendered trom kentucky has said, as a part of the official registration engendered by the hates of the war. It was blotted from the records of Congress. The proposition now is to restore it; and in justification for its restoration what are the suppositions that have been indulged in?

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Springer] the day before yesterday asked me "Suppose the Vice-President in counting the vote should falsely certify, is there no remedy?" Why make a supposition like that? The Vice-President of the United States is acting under an oath of office, and liable to the penalties of impeachment if under an oath of office, and hable to the penalties of impeachment if he discharge his duties corruptly or unfaithfully. A political majority of this House are under no responsibility to anybody. They can vote on this question as they would vote on the question of a contested seat here, and disregard law and fact and precedent with impunity. But the Vice-President is clothed with authority to do a great act, ministerial in its character, it is true, but if he acts corruptly he is lighted to impressly ment.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. Will the gentleman allow me to ask a question at that point?

Mr. LAPHAM. Yes, sir.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. It is historically known to the country that the State of Georgia voted one week after the time prescribed by the Constitution, which says that electors of the several States shall meet on the first Wednesday in December after the election. They met on the second Wednesday. Suppose, then, the Vice-President in counting the vote or refusing to count the vote of Georgia acts in conflict with the opinion of the two Houses of Congress and thereby decides the election one way or the other, have the Houses of Congress any remedy

Mr. LAPHAM. None whatever; for the simple reason that the re-

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. But suppose it did change the result?
Mr. LAPHAM. That is asking us to suppose what is an impossibility in the present condition of things.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I ask my friend to answer me as a lawyer. Whether it affects the result or not, is it not as much the duty of Congress or of the presiding officer to count the vote correctly? Suppose the President of the Senate counts it incorrectly, though his doing so does not change the result; suppose he refuses to count it or counts it erroneously, are the two Houses of Congress to sit by and see the thing done wrong?

Mr. LAPHAM. That very case is put by Mr. Pinckney in the remarks I have alluded to, and he disposes of it by saying that the decision of the Vice-President in such a matter is absolutely beyond the control of either House or the two Houses.

Mr. WARNER. In that case would the decision of the Vice-President bind this House and the other House as to the election of Presi-

Mr. LAPHAM. Of course it precludes the House. The House can have nothing to do with the choice of President where there has been an election by the people. In the remarks of Mr. Pinckney he shows it was the intention of the framers of the Constitution to take from each House, and both Houses, absolutely all power to interfere with the presidential election; because, if you give it to them you destroy the independence of the executive department of the Government. The moment you make the choice of a President dependence of the course of t ernment. The moment you make the choice of a President dependent upon the will of the House and the will of the Senate, that moment you merge the independence of the Executive, and make him the mere creature of the legislative branches of the Government.

him the mere creature of the legislative branches of the Government. The design of the Constitution was to keep his selection free from any participation on the part of either House of Congress.

The case supposed by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Springer] is an impossible case, for in ninety years we have never had a Vice-President who has attempted anything of the kind. It is a case never to occur. And so it is with all the suppositions that have been made here.

The gentleman from New York, my colleague, [Mr. Cox.] says, suppose on the way here from Albany the returns from New York should be interfered with and Garfield and Arthur should be stricken out and Hancock and English be substituted, could there be no remedy? Well, that is answered by the fact that there are triplicate returns, and all three of them could not be thus tampered with. It is answered by the fact that coming in the mail it is an impossible transaction. You might as well try to drive a camel through the eye of a needle as to put Hancock in the place of Garfield. [Applause on the republican side.]

The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Hunton] says, suppose that the Vice-President should receive a forged return. Why make such a supposition as this? Has there ever been a forged return sent to the Vice-President? Is there infamy enough anywhere, in the North or the South, to attempt anything of that kind; for it must have the sanction of a governor and of a secretary of state in order to accom-

The Constitution was framed to be executed by statesmen and honest men. If we have become a nation of forgers and perjurers and ballot-box stuffers it will be necessary to amend the Constitution and adapt it to the changed condition of affairs

All these suppositions show the straits to which the advocates of this measure are compelled to resort. They can find no justification this measure are compelled to resort. They can find no justification for this provision except upon the supposition that some monstrous crime has been or is to be committed. Why is it that they dwell upon this condition of things when advocating this resolution? Why is it that there rises up before their imaginations the idea of a forged return or an altered return or a breach of official duty on the part of the second officer in the Government, a breach of duty and a viola-tion of his oath? Is it because they like to dwell on this condition of things, upon the possible happening of such events?

I am fearful that our friends on the other side are disposed to look too leniently upon the commission of crimes against the ballot. The blistering infamy which attaches to those who in the last days of the late presidential contest sought to thrust that colossal crime, the for-gery of the Morey letter, into the canvass will not deprive those men of their share in the future councils and confidence of their party. The men who undertook to steal from the republican party in 1879 the State of Maine are yet honored and trusted by the democratic party, and the measures to which they resorted have never been denounced by them.

Tweed, who with his confederates, by the most stupendous frauds upon the ballot-box in all our history, stole the State of New York from the republican party in 1868, in full view of the enormity of his offenses was elected to the senate of the State of New York by 11,000 majority in his district after his crimes had become so notorious that he never dared present himself at Albany and ask to take his seat. He was also received and accredited as a delegate in a dem-seat. He was also received and accreated and accreated accreate State convention at Rochester.

There is a disposition manifested to look leniently at political offenses, and that is the foundation of all these suggestions. They are warnings to us on this side of the House to tread carefully in view of the concurrent resolution. "Forethe proposition now made by this concurrent resolution. "Forewarned, forearmed." I am impressed with the conviction that there is some undeveloped and unannounced purpose in pressing this measure at this time, and that cautions me to the course which I have firmly resolved to adopt, to resist the passage of this measure by every means which the rules of parliamentary law put into the hands of the minority of this House.

I now yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. Newberry.]

own right, I will now yield to the gentieman from Alabama [Mr. Herbert] for fifteen minutes.

Mr. HERBERT. Mr. Speaker, it would be impossible in fifteen minutes, even if I desired to do so, to discuss this question. I have not arisen for that purpose. The question is threadbare. No question has ever been more thoroughly discussed in Congress or out of it than that which lies at the foundation of this proposed concurrent resolution.

Four years ago, exactly four years ago to-day, I believe both Houses of Congress were engaged in the discussion of this same question. The records and the history of this Government were ransacked, every principle was discussed, every precedent was found and cited, and both Houses, the one republican and the other democratic, came to the conclusion at that time, as had been the practice of this Government for eighty years before, that it was for the House of Representatives and the Senate, assembled as such in joint convention, to surpervise and control the count of the presidential vote.

vention, to surpervise and control the count of the presidential vote. I do not believe that it is in the power of any gentleman in this House, however industrious he may be, however able he may be, to shed any additional light upon that question. But I desire to reply to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. LAPHAM,] who has attributed to the democratic party here some undeveloped, some ulterior, some "unannounced purpose," as he puts it, and to call the attention of the country at large to the position that the republicans on this floor occupy here to-day.

They have taken a new departure. As I have said, the discussion four years are showed clearly that for eighty years it had been the

They have taken a new departure. As I have said, the discussion four years ago showed clearly that for eighty years it had been the practice and the undoubted right, so conceded, of the two Houses of Congress to supervise and control the count of the vote for President and Vice-President. Such was the practice of the democratic party for many years. Such was the practice of the whig party. Such was the practice of the republican party without a break for four consecutive terms. consecutive terms.

Even in the Forty-fifth Congress a republican Senate passed a bill to regulate the count of the electoral vote, known as the "Edmunds" bill, which was bottomed upon the assumption that the two Houses of Congress, and not the Vice-President, had the right to supervise and control the count of the electoral vote. That bill passed the other branch of the Forty-fifth Congress by practically a unanimous republican vote.

Yet, sir, to-day we see republicans of this House coming to the front, the leaders of that party, announcing the old and the exploded doctrine that the President of the Senate has the power to count the electoral vote. And the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAPHAM] charges on this side of the House, because we want to pass a rule very much like the rule always practiced upon by the republican party, that we have an ulterior object in view.

succession was kept up among the patriarchs. We read also in the history of England that Henry IV begat Henry V, and that Henry V begat Henry VI, and so the line of succession was kept up in the Plantagenets. And if these gentlemen succeed here to-day in establishing the precedent for which they now come to the front and contend, that the Vice-President, or "the President of the Senate," as he is termed in the Constitution, has the power to count the electoral vote, that the Constitution gives him that power, that it is for him and him alone to determine all questions in relation to that count, then perhaps the future student of American history will read that Wheeler, President of the Senate, begat Garfield and Arthur, or declared them to have been elected, and at the end of their term Arthur declared that Garfield and Arthur were again elected; and at the clared them to have been elected, and at the end of their term Arthur declared that Garfield and Arthur were again elected; and at the end of that time Arthur declared that another republican was elected President and another republican Vice-President. And so, the history will perhaps read, the Republic of America glided into an empire. Sir, I desire to call the attention of the people at large to this new departure on the part of the republicans of this House. What can it departure on the part of the republicans of this House. What can it mean if it has no political purpose? It has but one meaning; it can tend to but one result—to keep the control of this Government in the hands of the republicans, to them and their heirs forever.

But before I sit down I should perhaps reply to an uncalled-for remark of the gentleman from New York [Mr. Lapham] in answer to a gentleman on this side who had quoted the message of Abraham Lincoln. The gentleman from New York says we have no right to quote Abraham Lincoln here because the democrats have revited him as an ignorant rail-splitter. Six I affirm that no upon this country as an ignorant rail-splitter. Sir, I affirm that no man this country has produced has more of the unqualified respect of the democrats of this country, North and South, than Abraham Lincoln; and I hurl back the insinuation that we on this side do not regard his authority as entitled to weight, and great weight, on any question. We look upon it (especially we of the South) as one of the greatest misfortunes that ever befell us that Abraham Lincoln fell at the hands of an as-

But, sir, I desire to call attention briefly, in conclusion, to what I conceive to be the theory of this resolution. The gentleman from Texas and the gentleman from Maryland in their colloquy seemed to beget, as I thought, some confusion as to the meaning of the resolution. As I understand, sir, the difference between this proposed joint rule and the famous twenty-second joint rule, now repealed, is this: Under the twenty-second joint rule either of the Houses, the Senate or the House, had the power by an objection to disfranchise a State. Under this proposed joint rule, if it be adopted, there is required affirmative action—the concurrence of the two Houses—to reject the vote of a State.

It is true that when there are two sets of certificates there arises a difficulty to be provided for. In that case affirmative action is necesdifficulty to be provided for. In that case affirmative action is necessary. I think gentlemen on the other side were correct in saying that in some cases which might arise, where there are two sets of returns, one House rejecting one return, the other House rejecting the other return, the practical result might be that one House might succeed in disfranchising a State or in rejecting its vote. That is a difficulty inherent in the very nature of the question. It is imbedded in the Constitution itself, if we are correct in our construction of it. The Constitution provides that the President of the Senate shall open the votes in the presence of the Senate as a looky sitting as such

In the Constitution itself, if we are correct in our construction of it. The Constitution provides that the President of the Senate shall open the votes in the presence of the Senate as a body, sitting as such, and of the House of Representatives as a body, sitting as such; and it is these two bodies, each acting individually for itself as an organization, who are to decide on every question.

There is no difficulty at all in the case of a single return. This resolution provides (and in this respect it differs from the twenty-second joint rule) that if only one House objects to such a return, which is apparently certified by the authorities of the State, the vote of that State shall be counted. But when it comes to deciding which of two returns shall be counted as the real vote of the State, then there is necessarily required affirmative action. Now affirmative action cannot be had without concurrence; and if the two bodies are to act separately, and if they cannot concur, there can be no affirmative action. That is a difficulty that this joint rule could not provide against. It is not the fault of the rule; it is the fault, if it be a fault, of the Constitution. Under the twenty-second joint rule the same difficulty might arise. But can any gentleman devise a better rule than this? That is the question. This resolution has been maturely considered and comes before the House after much deliberation upon it in the Senate. It is in principle very much like, almost entirely analogous to, the Edmunds bill which passed the Senate in the Forty-fifth Congress but was never acted upon in this House. There is a difference in this respect: in that hill the provision was that if Forty-fifth Congress but was never acted upon in this House. There is a difference in this respect: in that bill the provision was that if a State had provided some final arbiter, the decision of that arbiter should be conclusive and the vote as determined upon by that arbiter

But, Mr. Speaker, I have consumed, I believe, the whole of my fifteen minutes. I have said more, perhaps, than I intended to say when I took the floor. But the question for us to decide in this case is simply whether we shall provide a rule under which we can in an orderly manner count the votes for President and Vice-President Those gentlemen have certainly been studying history. The succession to the Presidency was determined four years ago by 8 to 7.

But they have discovered a method that is easier still. We read in sacred history that Abraham begat Isaac, and Isaac begat Jacob, and Jacob begat Joseph and his brethren, and in that way the line of that the Vice-President has the power to count the votes. If that be a political motive, then I plead guilty. But if to desire to count the vote as it was cast, according to the Constitution, giving expression to the will of the people—and I believe they have expressed their will in no unmistakable terms—if this is not a political motive, then there is no such motive entertained on this side of the House, and there is no such motive entertained on this side of the House, and gentlemen on the other side cannot make out any such motive. We have given them every opportunity for discussion, and, as I understand, they will be allowed by the gentleman in charge of this resolution to offer amendments if they see proper. What we want to establish is a rule—the best rule that can be devised for counting the vote and giving expression to the will of the people. When the people have elected a President let him be counted in as provided by the Constitution. We do not intend you shall establish a precedent here by which when in the future your candidate is defeated by the here by which when in the future your candidate is defeated by the people you can count him in by the voice of one man.

Mr. NEWBERRY. Mr. Speaker, the discussion to day has taken a more practical range than heretofore. In the previous discussion the great constitutional questions which form the basis of the rule of action in the electoral count have been brought more particularly to the front; and at this point in the discussion I propose to make a clear and concise statement of the provisions of the Constitution, showing exactly what is provided, the jurisdiction of the several men or bodies of men who take part in the settlement of the question; and I shall endeavor to point out the omissions, if any, and the constitutional methods, if any, of supplying the omissions, so as to make a perfect, compact, constitutional plan of proceedings for the electoral count, if it does not already exist. The amended article 12 provides constitutional duties for four men or bodies of men. When, as is said by the gentleman from Maryland, [Mr. McLane,] the jurisdiction of one attaches to the subject-matter, he must, under the Constitution, follow it to the end, and he cannot be divested from that jurisdiction by any act of Congress or of either House. It is given to him by the Constitution and must be exercised by him, and no power can divest him of that right. Now, what does article 12 provide? It first contains the duties of electors and Vice-President, and in brief it provides they shall meet, vote by ballot, make lists of candidates, sign and certify them, and transmit them sealed to the seat of Government, directed to the President of the Senate. In fulfilling those duties there is no power which can divest them. If there is an omission or an uncertainty, the law may provide, as it has provided, methods of doing certain things. Thus a law has been passed particularizing and specifying more fully the duties of electors under this article. Among other things, it provides when and where they shall meet, how many lists shall be made, and how they shall be transmitted, and other proceedings. It provides for the loss of either of the original lists, &c.; all of which powers or methods of proceeding are clearly authorized by and are within the last clause of section 8, article 1, of the Constitu-tion, authorizing Congress "to make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution the foregoing powers, and all other powers vested by this Constitution in the Government of the United States, or any department or officer thereof." Congress cannot add or subtract one iota of the constitutional right of the electors.

A good illustration of what might or might not be done by the electors exercising their constitutional rights, and outside of the present law of Congress, might be the following: Suppose the whole electoral college of a State should come here in their own proper persons, bringing their list to Washington with them sealed, and tender it in that way to the President of the Senate, acting under the Constitution. The President of the Senate, so acting under his obligation imposed directly by the Constitution, would be compelled to receive such list transmitted in that way.

It has been said by the Speaker of this House at this session, and it is right-

The Chair takes no cognizance of any rule when the Constitution of the United States and the laws of the land come into conflict with it.

So under the right of the electors to transmit the list, if they should bring it in the way illustrated, the President of the Senate should bring it in the way illustrated, the President of the Senate would be compelled to receive it.

Article 12 further provides for the duties of the President of the Senate, under which clause arises the whole difficulty here. The duties of the President of the Senate are, as provided under the Constitution: He shall, in the presence of the Senate and the House of Representatives, open all the certificates, and the votes shall then be counted. What is the proper interpretation of this clause? The grand question before the House now is, in whom is the power vested "to count?" It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, the power to count does involve something outside of the simple enumeration of votes. It involves the necessity of examination, discrimination, and passing involves the necessity of examination, discrimination, and passing upon what shall be counted, and, as between two or more lists, which shall be counted if they are presented. It seems impossible to avoid the conclusion that somewhere there must be vested the right to judge before the count is commenced.

It matters not, however, what may be our private opinion, the real question is, What does the Constitution provide? Is that power vested in the President of the Senate alone, or in the two Houses of Congress when assembled? Or is it a case where the Constitution provides that the votes shall be counted, and does not provide who shall count them? The rights and obligations apon this House, and upon the President of the Senate, are different as that question shall be decided, or as either of these three questions shall be decided.

First. Is this power vested in the President of the Senate? In this connection, and relying strictly on the words of the Constitution, article 12, there are several things about which there is no dispute and which are very clear. First, the list must be delivered to this officer, sealed. Right here the jurisdiction of that officer, the President of the Senate, attaches for the constitutional purposes in reference to those papers so delivered to him. His right to control these papers never will cease until by the Constitution he is relieved from their never will cease until by the Constitution he is relieved from their custody. They are legally in his custody, and in his alone, and they must remain in his custody. I assert that Congress cannot by any power take them from his custody, for by the force of the Constitution he is the only constitutional custodian. I beg earnest attention to this, for certain inevitable conclusions will follow after that is conceded.

The jurisdiction has attached to him, as was said by the gentleman from Maryland, [Mr. McLane,] and when the jurisdiction has attached all the incidents thereto become attached also; and he must fulfill, and thoroughly fulfill, all his constitutional duties in connection with those papers. Here the Constitution has placed the whole responsibility upon the President of the Senate, and there is no dis-

Now, Mr. Speaker, take all the suppositions of gentlemen upon the other side as to what the President of the Senate might or might not other side as to what the Fresident of the Senate might or might not do. He has the sole, the only responsibility of the custody of these papers. He may do what he chooses with them—nobody can take them from him. If he chooses to open them and put in papers which are false or forged and seal the envelopes up again he can do so. There is no one to prevent him. Who will control him I fi he chooses to lose the papers accidentally he may do so. If he chooses corruptly to allow somebody else to take and destroy them he has the full power to do it; there is no one to prevent him; they are in his possession and you cannot get them out of it. Now, the Constitution of the United States lodged that power with the President of the Senate, and they knew he had full control and must have full control, and every supposable case and ten thousand others that might happen to those returns you could easily see could happen to them if he so chose.

Now all at once it is found by gentlemen on the other side that when he comes to open these certificates then he is going to become a villain, a scoundrel, a rascal, to forge, or, what is just as bad, to miscount or falsely count. If the Constitution gave him the full customistic or the property of the constitution of the co tody of those papers at one time to work his own will about them, it continues to do so until he is relieved constitutionally from the custody of them. The Constitution provides no guards of punishment York [Mr. LAPHAM] says, of the possibility of such infamy. The Constitution is grand in its own integrity and simplicity. It places this great trust implicitly in the hands of one man—the Vice-President of the United States—and for nearly one hundred years that trust has never been betrayed, and I believe, sir, that for a thousand years to come it would never be betrayed. The betrayer of such a trust would instantly become infamous the whole world over, the mark of Cain, or worse, on his brow, and to the day of his death he would be scourged through the world with whips of scorpions, and his children would pray for death, while his memory for all time would be coupled with that of Judas, the betrayer of the Christ. This responsibility of sole possession, being so placed, is followed by the further injunction:

Third. He shall open all the certificates in the presence of the Senate and House of Representatives.

Here, again, the fullest control is placed with the President of the Senate by the Constitution itself. He cannot, by his constitutional duty, allow them to go out of his posession. He cannot, without dereliction of the solemn trust reposed in him, allow anybody or any authority or pretended authority whatever to take them from his possession. What power up to this point, then, have the two Houses of Congress? They are witnesses merely. They have the full power of Congress? They are witnesses merely. They have the full power of inspection, because, based upon such witness and upon the arising of a certain contingency provided in the same article 12, they have a constitutional duty to perform. Now, it being under the Constitution itself, and this list being entirely under the control of the President o dent of the Senate, they cannot be counted by anybody but the one-who is entitled to have possession. Until he is relieved of that pos-session given to him by the Constitution, there is nobody who can have anything to do with the list or the papers. Given to him by the Constitution, he is never to give them up antil by some act or pro-vision of the Constitution they are taken from his possession, or when the duty that is to be performed in reference to them, has been fully the duty that is to be performed in reference to them has been fully accomplished. They cannot count the votes, for they have not possession of them, and they have no right of possession. They are witnesses—constitutional witnesses—witnesses to see if the count is right, and equally witnesses to know if the count is wrong. And no doubt, as has been said also in this discussion, as such witnesses they might call attention to an error, undoubtedly, under occasions that might arise; the President of the Senate might ask their advice; but with him who is sole custodian of the lists must rest the constitutional count. Such conclusion is deduced clearly from article 12 of the Constitution.

Again, the Constitution provides, and that is perfectly clear, that he also shall open all the certificates. That is what is required to be done, and that is what he is required to open. Right here comes up the question which has been asked so many times by gentlemen upon the other side, namely: Suppose there is something else that comes before the President of the Senate, is he bound to open it? If, as before the President of the Senate, is he bound to open it? If, as provided in this very rule, there are papers purporting—I quote the words of the rule—"purporting to be certified lists," what authority has the President of the Senate over any such papers? They are not constitutional certificates; and the only power the President of the Senate has in reference to the matter, by the Constitution, is over constitutional certificates. It follows, therefore, if an envelope is among these papers which, upon being opened, or upon its face, does not contain constitutional certificates, he may, by the force of his obligation, nay, by the plain obligation of his trust he must, reject it, as he is the sole judge. Neither the House of Representatives nor the Senate, nor any one, nor the Congress in joint convention assembled, may inject an unconstitutional certificate into the electoral count.

Where, Mr. Speaker, by express words or by direct implication is bled, may inject an unconstitutional certificate into the electoral count. Where, Mr. Speaker, by express words or by direct implication is it possible for any paper to come into the possession of the President of the Senate and be by him opened in the House except it be a constitutional certificate, one provided for under the twelfth article of the Constitution? As I said a moment ago, neither the President of the Senate nor the House of Representatives nor the Senate can by any possibility inject any other paper into the proceedings. The opening of such a purported list as is provided in the rule does not and cannot make it a genuine certificate. Neither can it, by being opened, be properly before the President of the Senate for count. When, therefore, the Vice-President has received and opened and counted the votes which also logically includes a statement of the count but not a declaration of who is President, his constitutional duty is ended and not before.

count but not a declaration of who is President, his constitutional duty is ended and not before.

Right here again let me call attention to the magnificent simplicity of the Constitution. What does it say? Not that the President of the Senate shall announce the vote; not that the House of Representatives shall announce the vote; but it gives exactly what is the truth: the person receiving the majority of votes shall be President. It provides the person having the greatest number of votes for President shall be the President, if such number be a majority of the whole number of electors appointed. That is his warrant for holding the office of President, not any declaration of any officer in the known world. By the simple votes and majesty of the votes he becomes the President.

Now such substantially has been the proceeding under the Constitution for the last eighty years. Those provisions in their simple directness and power were adopted by honest, patriotic men, the fathers of this Republic. They have their foundations and their sanctions or this kepublic. They have their foundations and their sanctions in the innate principles of right and wrong implanted in the breasts of honest men. As they have stood in the past unquestioned, so will they stand in their simple honesty for the future; and I trust that the man does not live who will dare to attempt by any finesse, trick, or subterfuge to cheat the people out of an election. As in all other things, I believe in straightforward honesty and directness in all political matters.

The history of our country shows that this power to receive, open, and count has been exercised without question. A President of the Senate has counted and declared himself President. Vice-President Breckinridge counted and declared Lincoln President strictly under the constitutional duty that devolved upon him. Who ever dared to think Breckinridge, even taking into consideration the state of the country at that time, would have been recreant to his trust; and I do not believe the man lives who as President of the Senate would dare in the face of his country to do so despicable or so unfair a thing as to miscount the vote. I now call attention to the proceedings in the election of the first President of the United States. In the Senate April 6, 1787, it was-Ordered, That Mr. Ellsworth inform the House of Representatives that a quorum of the Senate is formed; that a President is elected for the sole purpose of opening the certificates and counting the votes of the electors of the several States in the choice of a President and Vice-President of the United States.

And then-

The Speaker and the House of Representatives attended in Senate Chamber, and the President elected for the purpose of counting the votes declared the Senate and House of Representatives had met, and that he in their presence had opened and counted the votes of the electors for President and Vice-President of the United States, which were as follows.

And again in the proceedings of the House of Representatives the following appears

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Ellsworth:

Mr. Speaker, I am charged by the Senate to inform this House that a quorum of the Senate is now formed; that a President is elected for the sole purpose of opening the certificates and counting the votes of the electors of the several States in the choice of a President and Vice-President of the United States; and that the Senate is now ready in the Senate Chamber to proceed in the presence of this House to discharge that duty.

There with the ink, as I may say, almost still wet upon the signatures of those who framed the Constitution, those very men interpreted it and proceeded precisely as we think the duty of the Vice-President

To show that I am not so far out of the way in this interpretation of that clause, let us test its conclusion by a very simple reversal of the duties devolved upon the President of the Senate and the two Houses of Congress, as stated in the twelfth article of amendment to the Constitution. Suppose the Constitution read as follows: They, the electors, shall make distinct lists, which lists they shall sign and certify and transmit sealed to the seat of government, directed to the Senate and House of Representatives, simply changing the respective duties; and then suppose it went on to provide: The Senate and House of Representatives, in the presence of the President of the Senate, shall open all the certificates and they shall then be counted, &c.; could there be any doubt as to the meaning of such a provision in the Constitution? Is there a man so wild that he would contend for an instant that the President of the Senate, called as a witness, is to be the judge of the validity of the returns, and that he, called as a witness, should decide what votes should be and what should not be counted. But that is precisely the position in which the gentlemen counted. But that is precisely the position in which the gentlemen on the other side put themselves, claiming that a person called as a witness should be the full executor of the paper.

It has been asked, Why are both Houses of Congress assembled to-simply witness the ministerial act of the President of the Senate, this discharge of one of the most important duties ever devolved upon mortal man? But if the will of the whole people is to be determined, what bodies could be more fitted to witness such an act than the Repesentatives of the people and the Senate who represent the States?

But there is another obligation growing out of the performance of this duty that may devolve upon the House under the Constitution, a duty also devolving upon the Senate. Article 12 provides, if no person has such majority, &c., then the House of Representatives shall proceed to elect a President; and so in regard to the Senate, they will proceed to elect a Vice-President. These duties devolving upon the House of Representatives and the Senate immediately upon the hap-House of Representatives and the Senate immediately upon the happening of the contingency are the strongest arguments in support of the necessity of Congress being present as witnesses only. Their constitutional duty commences when the constitutional duty of the Senate ends. They take up the matter if there is no President counted in by a majority of the electors and they elect a President. I have in this matter simply directed my attention to the actual words of the Constitution and its true meaning as those words and their collocation indicate, calling attention to the practical construction that has been given to the Constitution from 1787 to the present time, and especially by the founders and formulators of the Constitution, as was so thoroughly illustrated by the remarks of the distinction, as was so thoroughly illustrated by the remarks of the distintime, and especially by the founders and formulators of the Constitution, as was so thoroughly illustrated by the remarks of the distinguished gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. Keffer.]

But if it shall be held that the power to count is not by the Constitution vested in the President of the Senate, there are certainly no words in the Constitution to vest such power in Congress; and that it cannot be assumed by implication has been thoroughly proven hereafters. heretofore.

Is this, then, a case where the Constitution has provided that the electoral votes shall be counted, and has not provided who shall count them? If so, then such omission can only be provided for by the passage of a law under the eighth section of the first article of the Constitution, heretofore quoted.

But the passage of a law requires that the bill shall pass both Houses of Congress and be signed by the President. We insist, therefore, that the Senate resolution now before the House is not and cannot be such a measure as can be enacted into a law. It is simply a rule, which if it shall pass both Houses cannot be presented to the President for his signature.

We conclude, therefore, that this proposed rule is unconstitutional, in that, first, it attempts to take from the President of the Senate powers and rights given him by the Constitution; second, that it gives to the House of Representatives and to the Senate powers over the electoral vote and count in violation of the Constitution, and enables either House to nullify a lawful election of President by the people; and, third, that the proposed rule is not a law under section 8 of article 1 of the Constitution.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Burch, its Secretary, motified the House of the passage of the following bills; in which concurrence was requested:

A bill (S. No. 753) to provide for the sale of the remainder of the reservation of the confederated Otoe and Missouria tribes of Indians in the States of Nebraska and Kansas, and for other purposes; and

A bill (S. No. 1587) to secure the safe-keeping of money paid into-

Mr. WHITE. I move that the House now adjourn.

WASHINGTON MONUMENT.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. A communication from the Washington Monument Association was yesterday referred by the Chair without objection to the Joint Committee on the Library. The Chair now asks unanimous consent that that reference be changed, and that the communication be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

YORKTOWN CENTENNIAL CELEBRATION.

Mr. BALLOU, by unanimous consent, presented the resolutions of the Rhode Island Society of the Cincinnati in relation to the York-town centennial celebration; which were referred to the Select Com-mittee on the Yorktown Centennial Celebration.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. BLAND, by unanimous consent, obtained leave of absence for his colleague, Mr. WADDILL, until after the holidays.

ADJOURNMENT.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question recurs upon the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. White,] that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to, upon a division—ayes 72, no 1; and (at four o'clock and five minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following memorial and petitions were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows, viz:

By Mr. AIKEN: Memorial of the National Grange, asking the aid of Congress to stamp out and exterminate the pleuro-pneumonia-to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. ANDERSON: The petition of William T. Allen, S. L. Palmer, F. G. McHenry, and others, ex-soldiers of the United States, asking Congress to donate soldiers' clothing to them—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. DEUSTER: The petition of Henry Bruckner, inmate of the National Home near Milwaukee, Wisconsin, for arrears of pension—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HUNTON: The petition of Maria G. Devereux and others, that the road leading from Georgetown to Tenallytown, in the District of Columbia, be taken under the immediate control of Congress—by Mr. JOHN W. RYON: The petition of R. A. Wilder, of Pennsylvania, for an extension of his patent for improvements in hoisting-machinery for inclined planes—to the Committee on Patents.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, December 10, 1880.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev.

W. P. Harrison, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The Chair, if there be no objection, will lay before the House some communications for reference. There was no objection.

CONSULAR OFFICERS NOT CITIZENS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of State, transmitting a statement of the names of consular officers not citizens of the United States to whom salaries have been paid during the fiscal year which ended June 30, 1880, and of the circumstances under which they were appointed; which was referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the State Department.

SPEECHES OF M. THIERS.

The SPEAKER. The Chair also presents a letter from the Secretary of State, transmitting two additional volumes of the speeches of M. Thiers, presented by Madame Thiers. The Chair suggests that these volumes should be accepted and the communication referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs. Mr. COX. I make that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

EXCHANGE OF PUBLIC DOCUMENTS WITH FRANCE.

The SPEAKER. The Chair also presents a letter from the Secre-The SPEAKER. The Chair also presents a letter from the Secretary of State, transmitting a communication from M. Léon Gambetta, president of the Chamber of Deputies of the Republic of France, in relation to the exchange of documents between that body and the United States House of Representatives. The Chair suggests that this communication should be printed and referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, with authority to report at any time.

Mr. COX. I make that motion, and also that the communication be printed in the Record.

The motion was agreed to.

The communication is as follows:

Sig.: I have the honor to transmit herewith for your information a translation of a letter, dated the 22d of July last, from M. Léon Gambetta, president of the Chamber of Deputies in France, to the American minister at Paris, in relation to the establishment of an exchange of documents between the Chamber of Deputies of the French Republic and the corresponding legislative body in this country. In accordance with Mr. Gambetta's request, I inclose a letter addressed to the President of the House of Representatives of the American Republic, and I likewise forward a package of documents which accompanied the letter just named.

I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant.

CHAMBER OF DEPUTIES, (PRÉSIDENCE,) Paris, July 22, 1880.

Sin: Exchanges of parliamentary documents have for a long time been organized between the political assemblies of most of the European states.

I believe it would be useful to establish analogous exchanges between the Chamber of Deputies of the French Republic and that of the American Republic. In consequence I have the honor to address to you a case containing what has been published by the French Parliament during the session of 1880.

I would be obliged to you if you would please forward this case, together with the inclosed letter, to the President of House of Representatives of the American Republic.

REPRINTING OF A BILL.

REPRINTING OF A BILL.

Mr. SHELLEY. I ask unanimous consent that House bill No. 6313, to provide for ocean mail service between the United States, West Indies, South America, Central America, Mexico, and the trans-pacific ports, be reprinted, and also the majority and minority reports on the subject from the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

PENSION APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HUBBELL, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported a bill (H. R. No. 6532) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882; which was read a first time, ordered to be printed, and recommitted.

ELEVATOR IN SOUTH WING OF CAPITOL.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a communication; which was read, as follows:

To the House of Representatives:

By the act approved June 16, 1880, the undersigned were required to locate and construct a passenger elevator in the south wing of the Capitol. The conditions imposed by the law rendered the location and construction of said elevator impracticable. The law reads "that the location of said elevator shall not in any wise interfere with the use or occupation of, or communication between, any of the offices or committee-rooms of the House, or with the light or ventilation thereof, nor of any corridor." While it was practicable to locate and construct an elevator so that it would not seriously interfere with the rooms or corridors, it was not possible to locate and construct one so that it would not in any wise obstruct or interfere with the light or ventilation of any of the offices, committee-rooms, or corridors of the House. In consideration of the above they were unable to take any steps in the matter. They recognize the necessity for an elevator, for the convenience of public business, in the south wing of the Capitol, and recommend further legislation in relation to the same. The appropriation for this purpose might be allowed to remain available, in order that the elevator may be constructed during the present fiscal year.

SAM. J. RANDALL.

SAM. J. RANDALL, Speaker.
EDWARD CLARK,
Architect United States Capitol.

WASHINGTON, D. C., December 10, 1880.

Mr. CONGER. This communication is a privileged report, I pre-

The SPEAKER. The Chair would so suppose, as it relates to the convenience of the House.

Mr. CONGER. Has any disposition been made of it?

The SPEAKER. Nothing has been done with it. The Chair submitted it for the action of the House.

Mr. ATKINS. I suggest that the communication be referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. CONGER. I do not see why that should be done. If we can have no elevator here until some change can be made in the building or until further legislation can be had, then of course it is useless to press this matter now. But it seems to me that the suggestions which were made to the Speaker the other day should be laid before the Architect for his consideration. I should be very glad if this question could be further examined and another report made upon it.

could be further examined and another report made upon it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair can say that his own opinion agreed with that of the Architect as to where this elevator should be; but, as we understood the amendment adopted in the Senate, it precluded the possibility of locating the elevator where we supposed it should be. This location, the Chair will state, was in the corridor between the two rooms of the Appropriations Committee. But, in consideration of the wording of the law and the wishes of the committee on the subject, no action was taken.

Mr. CONGER. Was it supposed that it would interfere with the

Mr. CONGER. Was it supposed that it would interfere with the views of the Senate or with any law if the elevator should be placed in the corner of the small room this side of the corridor?

The SPΕΛΚΕR. The debate in the Senate seemed to indicate that the amendment was put in at the request of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. ATKINS. I suppose that is true.
Mr. CONGER. I move that the matter partially reported upon be recommitted for further consideration.

The SPEAKER. Recommitted to whom?

Mr. CONGER. To the same persons who have made this report. I suggest that, taking this as a partial report, they make some further examination and recommendation.

* Edition exhausted.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman might offer a resolution that the persons authorized by law to locate this elevator and superintend its construction be requested to make further investigation and report to the House their opinion as to where it should be located.

Mr. REAGAN. If that is not acted on so as to revive the committee, in view of the report just made, would it not be proper to refer so much to the Committee on Appropriations as perpetuates the item for another year?

The SPEAKER. That part might be referred to the Committee on Appropriations. Mr. CONGER. Mr. CONGER. In the opinion of a good many members of the House, and probably without objection from anybody, the elevator might be so constructed as to come up through the small room this side of the corridor, now set apart for the Committee on Approside of the corridor, now set apart for the Committee on Appropriations. It perhaps would take up not more than a quarter of that room, leaving sufficient private room for the Committee on Appropriations, and not interfere with any passage or corridor or light in any part of the building.

Mr. ATKINS. Does the gentleman suggest it be inclosed and cut off from the building?

Mr. CONGER. Yes; that it be inclosed and cut off from the other part of the room.

Mr. ATKINS. That might be done.
Mr. CONGER. Those who examined the subject think that an elevator could be placed there in a suitable position coming right up through the corner of the room now appropriated to the Committee

Mr. ATKINS. That would do if we are to have an elevator, but I myself do not see any necessity for going to any such expense; not at all, sir.

Mr. CONGER. I did not hear the latter remark of the gentleman from Tenne

from Tennessee.

Mr. ATKINS. I said, Mr. Speaker, I do not myself see any necessity for going to the expense of having an elevator.

Mr. CONGER. Why, sir, there are gentlemen, members of this House, who are brought in here on the shoulders of their fellow-members, by the hands of their fellow-members or by men employed for that purpose, members who without assistance cannot ascend the stairs. If all the members in the House were young and vigorous like my friend from Tennessee and myself, there would be no need of an elevator. [Langther.]

elevator. [Laughter.]

Mr. ATKINS. That is so; I can help myself.

Mr. CONGER. I submit, sir, there are reasons why there should be an elevator for the accommodation of infirm members of this House. We now see those members brought up from the outside by fellow-members, and I say it is a shame that while the Senate has an eleva-tor for the ease and comfort of luxurious Senators, infirm and maimed members of this House are denied the ordinary means of access to the floor of this hall.

Mr. ROBESON. I can give two hundred and fifty reasons why we should have an elevator.

Mr. HAWK. Mr. Speaker, I introduced the other day resolutions on this subject. Members of the House, of course, must know I am peculiarly interested in the erection of such an elevator, and I introduced those resolutions for the purpose of calling attention to the fact that while there has been an appropriation made for the purpose, nevertheless nothing has been done. I wish to have pushed forward as rapidly as possible the construction of the work. Now, in order that this enterprise may be accomplished—and I certainly believe it is necessary or I would not advocate it for a moment—believing, as I do, it is a necessary improvement in this building, I shall move the do, it is a necessary improvement in this building, I shall move the report be recommitted, with instructions to further consider the propriety of execting the elevator, and that steps be taken to have the elevator constructed with as little delay as possible.

The SPEAKER. To what committee does the gentleman wish these instructions to a state of the special construction to a state of the special constru

Mr. HAWK. To the same committee from which the report now

The SPEAKER. That is, to the gentlemen who are authorized by law?
Mr. HAWK. I am not particular about that, Mr. Speaker. Let it go to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds if it be agreeable to the Speaker, and let that committee be instructed to provide under the Architect of the Capitol for the construction of an elevator.
Mr. McMILLIN. What instructions do I understand the gentleman proposes to give?
Mr. HAWK. That this report be recommitted to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds with instructions to such committee to further consider the propriety of erecting an elevator, with leave to further consider the propriety of erecting an elevator, with leave to report to this House by bill or otherwise.

I wish to say in this connection that this elevator, it seems to me, should be erected for the purpose of accommodating citizens visiting the Capitol. Many aged and infirm persons visit the Capitol of the country, and it is difficult for them to ascend to the second or third stairs of this building. This elevator should be erected for their accommodation as well as for the accommodation of members of this House.

Mr. REAGAN. In order to meet the views of the gentleman from Illinois, I propose to offer the following as a substitute:

Resolved, That the report of the persons charged with the duty of locating and constructing and constructing for the construction of an elevator in the south wing of the Capitol be recommitted to said persons, with instructions to see what further can be done to secure the construction of such an elevator.

I offer that, in view of the remarks made by the gentleman from Michigan, and seemingly concurred in by the gentleman from Tennessee, that an elevator should be constructed, so the committee may make further inquiry to see whether the difficulties presented in the report cannot be overcome.

Mr. ATKINS. I am not myself sure whether if constructed as provided for under the suggestion of the gentleman from Michigan it would destroy that room as a committee-room or not. I do not know but what the noise of the elevator would prevent its use as a deliberation room. I can tell nothing about that. It is not a matter, however, which I expect to have much interest in. [Laughter.] That is one thing sure, for it cannot be constructed before the 4th of March next.

Mr. HAWK. If the location of the elevator in that part of the building would make such noise as to destroy the deliberations of the building would make such noise as to destroy the deliberations of the committee, then the committee might find some other room. The improvement is certainly needed, and should be made at once.

Mr. McMILLIN. According to the report of the committee there can be no elevator constructed there. If constructed, it has to be done in pursuance of the statute. And the committee report the said statute is not broad enough to authorize the construction of an elevator in this end of the Capitol.

Mr. HAWK. The gentleman from Tennessee seems to forget that it is suggested the elevator is to be so created as to not interfere with

Mr. HAWK. The gentleman from Tennessee seems to forget that it is suggested the elevator is to be so erected as to not interfere with the light or ventilation of the Hall or any of the committee-rooms.

Mr. McMILLIN. And the committee which have had this matter in charge report that it is impossible to erect the elevator without

The SPEAKER. It was found on examination by the Architect of the Capitol and the Speaker that it could not be erected in compliance with the strict letter of the law without interfering in some way with the halls or some of the committee-rooms. Of course we could not erect it inside of the committee-rooms, and if erected in any of the corridors it would obstruct the light from some of the windows, so that in either case it could not be done under the law

Mr. McMILLIN. It would be an equal violation of the statute whether it was erected in the committee-room or in the corridor.

Mr. HAWK. But the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Conger.] has suggested that possibly on re-examination of the subject this committee might find that it could be located without seriously interfermitable in the corridor or the committee rooms; and with a view. ing with either the corridor or the committee-rooms; and with a view to have a further examination of the subject, recognizing the im-portance of the erection of the elevator, I favor the resolution of the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. REAGAN. If it be found on examination that there is space sufficient to cut off a portion of that room now used by the Committee on Appropriations, and dead-walls are left, it is not likely or possible that the noise will interfere with the deliberations of the com-

The resolution, as amended, was then agreed to.

PRIVATE LAND CLAIMS, ARIZONA.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, submitted a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting papers in four private land claims in Arizona Territory; which was referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

J. W. STONE.

Mr. BRIGHT, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 6533) for the relief of J. W. Stone; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

WILLIAM II. BROWN.

Mr. WHITTHORNE, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 6534) for the relief of William H. Brown; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

BONDS BY MARSHALS AND DEPUTIES.

Mr. HERBERT, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported, as a substitute for the bill of the House No. 6465, a bill (H. R. No. 6535) to allow marshals and deputy marshals to take bonds in certain cases; which, with the accompanying report, was ordered to be printed, and placed upon the House Calendar.

MARY B. HOOK, PENSIONER.

Mr. KIMMEL, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 6536) for the relief of Mary B. Hook, a pensioner; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

MARY. B. HOOK.

Mr. KIMMEL also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 6537) for the relief of Mary B. Hook, widow of Lieutenant-Colonel James H. Hook, of the United States Army; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

CLARMS UNDER THE ACT OF JULY 4, 1864.

Mr. SIMONTON. Mr. Speaker, on yesterday a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting lists of claims arising under the act of July 4, 1864, was referred to the Committee on Claims. I think under the rules of the House organizing that committee that letter and the subject-matter to which it relates should have been referred to the Committee on War Claims.

The SPEAKER. The present occupant of the chair was absent when that letter was presented to the House.

Mr. SIMONTON. And I move, therefore, Mr. Speaker, that the Committee on Claims be discharged from the further consideration of the said letter, and that the same be referred to the Committee on War Claims

The SPEAKER. That can be done by consent simply by changing the reference.

Mr. BRIGHT. May I make a statement in this connection?
The SPEAKER. Certainly.
Mr. BRIGHT. I understand, and the fact is generally well understood, that there are two branches of the Government—the Quarterstood, that there are two branches of the Government—the Quarter-master's Department and the Commissary Department—that are charged with the duty of investigating these claims. They are required to investigate them and report them, through the proper accounting officer of the Government, to this body. One of these reports has generally been referred to the Committee on War Claims, and the other to the Committee on Claims. There certainly ought to be no controversy on the subject. The reference in the present case has been made for the purpose of facilitating the investigation of these claims by these respective committees.

I would state upon the question of jurisdiction, Mr. Speaker, that the Committee on Claims is one of general jurisdiction and has jurisdiction over all claims that may be presented against the Government of the United States. The Committee on War Claims was simply a separate committee organized for the purpose of relieving the general committee of the great burdens which were imposed upon it. So I again say that there is no conflict between the committees upon the question of jurisdiction over these subjects, one branch of them being referred to the Committee on Claims, the other branch, according to the usual custom, being referred to the Committee on War Claims, and so referred in order that the legislation upon the subject

Mr. SIMONTON. If the War Claims Committee have any duty to perform at all, it seems to me that it is in relation to claims arising out of the late war, and with reference to their examination and adjudication. There can be no question in the mind of anybody that the claims referred to in this letter are claims arising out of the late war. Our present rules say:

To private and domestic claims and demands, other than war claims, against the United States—to the Committee on Claims.

Which language in express terms excludes the class of claims referred to in this letter.

And again:

Claims arising from any war in which the United States has been engaged—te the Committee on War Claims.

Evidently showing that the Committee on War Claims has jurisdiction over this question, and that the Committee on Claims has not.

I have here also the act of 1864, but it may not be necessary to read it. The act of July 4, 1864, has reference to claims arising out of the war then existing, and no other. I desire to say that General Bragg, the chairman of the Committee on War Claims, is not present, would not have called this matter to the attention of the House.

The SPEAKER. What motion does the gentleman desire to submit to the House

Mr. SIMONTON. I ask that the reference be changed to the Committee on War Claims.

Mr. BRIGHT. I am opposed to changing the reference for the reasons which I have stated. These claims have generally gone to the Committee on Claims, which is a committee of general jurisdiction; and I maintain it is not ousted of its jurisdiction by the creation of the Committee on War Claims.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would suggest to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Simonton] that the proper mode of reaching his object would be to reconsider the reference.

Mr. SIMONTON. I make that motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee moves to reconsider the vote by which the paper referred to was on yesterday referred to the Committee on Claims. The Clerk will report the title of the paper.
The Clerk read as follows:

Letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting lists of claims arising under act of July 4, 1864.

The House divided on the motion to reconsider; and there were-ayes 40, noes 29; no quorum voting.

Mr. BRIGHT. I call for tellers.

The SPEAKER. The Chair appoints as tellers the gentleman from Tennessee, Mr. ВRIGHT, and the gentleman from Tennessee, Mr. SIMONTON.

Mr. COX. Will the Speaker please tell us what we are to vote on f The SPEAKER. The Chair caused to be read the title of the com-munication about which the controversy has arisen. It is in reference to whether the communication shall go to the Committee on War Claims or to the Committee on Claims, and the decision of the House is reached by a motion to reconsider. Yesterday the communication went to the Committee on Claims; the effort to-day is to have it referred to the Committee on War Claims.

Which way would the Speaker advise us to vote? Mr. COX. [Laughter.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has no right to control anybody's vote but his own.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported-ayes 25, noes 43.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 25, noes 43.

Mr. SIMONTON. A quorum has not voted.

The SPEAKER. The Chair suggests that the gentleman from Tennessee had better call the yeas and nays to save time.

Mr. SIMONTON. I do not want to be captious; but this is a matter, it seems to me, of some interest; and it is a question which I think may as well be settled now as at any other time. It seems to me the language of the rule is perfectly plain. It says "private and domestic claims and demands, other than war claims against the United States," shall be referred to the Committee on Claims; while "claims arising from any war in which the United States has been "claims arising from any war in which the United States has been engaged" shall be referred to the Committee on War Claims.

Now, these are matters arising under the act of July 4, 1864, which has reference entirely to the late war of the rebellion. There is no has reference entirely to the late war of the resemble. There is no dispute whatever but they are war claims; and in the very language of the rule they are excluded from going to the Committee on Claims. The caption of the act of July 4, 1864, is as follows:

An act to restrict the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims and to provide for the payment of certain demands for quartermaster stores and subsistence supplies furnished to the Army of the United States.

All those claims are war claims, and by the very language of the rule are excluded from going to the Committee on Claims. There-fore, it being a matter of some importance to settle this question of jurisdiction as between the two committees, I make the point that a quorum has not voted.

The SPEAKER. If the point of order had been raised at the time of the reference of the communication yesterday, of course the Chair would have made a decision on it. But it is a different question which is now presented. The House has referred the paper, and the only way now to reach a change of reference is the way indicated by the gentleman from Tennessee—by a motion to reconsider. The Chair, therefore, at this time cannot decide under the new rules where this therefore, at this time cannot decide under the new rules where this paper should go. He has caused the paper to be sent for so that the House may act understandingly on the subject.

Mr. BRIGHT. I have no doubt both the Committee on Claims and the Committee on War Claims would have jurisdiction over this matter. But it has been the practice, and I believe the uniform construction of these rules, to divide the labor of the investigation of these labor of the investigation of these claims between the two committees. Inasmuch as the House has heretofore assented to this I can see no good reason now why the consent of the House should be sought for a reconsideration of the action of yesterday, or why these claims should be referred to another committee. It would simply encumber that committee with the additional work of the claims which have been decided by the Commissary Department of the Government.

There is a reason for the action which the House took not only on yesterday but on all previous occasions, inasmuch as that action facilitates the business of legislation. The parties who are interested in these claims are seeking the earliest adjustment of them, so that they can pass both branches before the termination of this Congress. I can see no good reason at allon the question of jurisdiction why there can see he good reason at all of the question of jurisdiction why care should be a change of reference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMONTON] makes the point of order that on the last division a quorum did not vote. The Chair suggests to the gentleman that if he calls the yeas and nays a quorum would probably appear, and the time that would be occupied by a call of the House would be saved.

Mr. SIMONTON. I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. SIMONTON. I call for the yeas and nays.
Mr. ROBESON. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.
Mr. ROBESON. I would be glad to have the gentleman who has brought this question before the House explain whether these are claims growing out of the war.

Mr. SIMONTON. There is no dispute but they grow out of the late

Mr. ROBESON. Then, how can the paper go anywhere else but to the Committee on War Claims?

Mr. SiMONTON. That is what I say.

Mr. BLOUNT. I would like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Claims [Mr. BRIGHT] if these are claims growing out of the war?

Mr. ROBESON. If that be so, then how can the reference to the Committee on Claims be made under the rule without a two-thirds

The SPEAKER. This question comes up on a motion to reconsider, which is a privileged motion.

Mr. ROBESON. Does not this matter go prima facie to the Committee on War Claims?

The SPEAKER. As a fact it has gone elsewhere.

Mr. BRIGHT. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] asks me whether there is any doubt upon the subject of these claims growing out of the war. I would state that there is no doubt upon that point. But while I make that statement I wish to make the additional statement that this is not the primary introduction of these claims, and I apprehend that it is the meaning of the rule that independent claims growing out of the war are to be referred to the Committee on War Claims. These are claims that under the law have gone to the Commissary or Quartermaster's Department for adjudication. There is a special law upon the subject which carries them there; they are not carried there under any rule of the House.

Then the supplementary duty is imposed upon the Department to simply refer the claims and the action of the Department thereon to this body for revision and appropriation. It is not necessary that they should go to either of the Committees on Claims, because the work of investigation has already been done by the Department. There is no duty for any committee to perform except that of revision; simply to ascertain that the names of the claimants and the amounts adjudicated have been properly stated by the Department.

Mr. ROBESON. Do I understand my friend from Tennessee [Mr. BRIGHT] to say that these are claims that have already been passed upon by the tribunal to which they have been by law referred, and that they now come here for the necessary review by Congress and that they now come here for the necessary review by Congress and for the proper appropriation?

Mr. BRIGHT. That is all.

Mr. ROBESON. That is entirely a different thing.

Mr. BRIGHT. It is not necessary that these should be referred to any particular committee; but in order to facilitate the transaction of business the investigation of claims which have come before the Commissary Department and the Quartermaster's Department has been divided between the two Committees on Claims been divided between the two Committees on Claims.

Mr. CONGER. These are purely war claims, and without any question should have been referred to the Committee on War Claims, as they have been heretofore. The Department submits a report that certain claims have been examined by that Department, which claims are sent to the House. Such claims heretofore have always gone to the Committee on War Claims, have always been examined by that committee, and if found to be correct and proper they have been reported to the House, and passed by the House on the report of the Commit-tee on War Claims. That is where these claims should have been sent; and if they have been sent to the Committee on Claims, it is a wrong reference, contrary to the rules and to the custom of the House. In my opinion, therefore, the reference should be reconsidered, and these claims should be sent to the appropriate committee, the Committee on War Claims.

Mr. BRIGHT. I beg leave to correct the honorable gentleman from Michigan in one regard. These claims have not always gone to the Committee on War Claims, they have occasionally gone to the Committee on Claims. When the claims for quartermaster stores have been referred to the Committee on War Claims, the claims for commissary stores have been referred to the Committee on Claims; and These claims have been divided between the committees, and neither one nor the other, so far as the question of jurisdiction

Mr. CONGER. They may have gone to the Committee on Claims by inadvertence, as now. But when I was a member of the Committee on War Claims they were always referred to that committee, mittee on War Claims they were always referred to that committee, were examined by that committee, and were reported upon by that committee. If they have ever gone to any other committee it has been contrary to the rules of the House.

Mr. BRIGHT. During the last session of Congress they were divided; the Committee on Claims had jurisdiction over the claims from the Commissary Department and the Committee on War Claims had jurisdiction over the claims from the Operator as Papart.

had jurisdiction over the claims from the Quartermaster's Depart-

Mr. BLOUNT. I submit that this very same class of claims has not only been referred to the Committee on War Claims and to the Committee on Claims, but also to the Committee on Appropriations. What has been done heretofore in regard to referring these claims does not settle the question of the jurisdiction of any committee in regard to them. I remember one occasion when these claims had been regard to them. I remember one occasion when these claims had been referred to a particular committee, and the committee reported them back, saying they had no jurisdiction over them, and there was considerable discussion upon the subject. In that particular instance the House referred some five hundred or six hundred cases to the Committee on War Claims.

My friend from Tennessee [Mr. Bright] says that these are not claims at all. Then if they are not claims at all they belong neither to the Committee on Claims nor the Committee on War Claims. But the House has always treated them as claims, whenever the issue has been raised. They come here, having been examined by the Department, for revision, and they have been revised and in some instances rejected. Therefore I do not think my friend is correct in saying that these are not claims at all. Their very reference to either one of these committees shows that they have been treated by the House as claims.

I think it very important that we should observe the rules of the House in the conduct of its business. Those rules are very clear, and aunounce distinctly the jurisdiction of the Committee on Claims. In that announcement all war claims are excluded from the considerathat announcement all war claims are excluded from the consideration of that committee. My friend from Tennessee [Mr. Simonton] has already cited the statutes of 1864, which citation discloses the fact that these are war claims. Therefore if they belong to any Committee on Claims, under the rule they belong distinctly and unquestionably to the Committee on War Claims. It does seem to me important that when the question is brought before the House we should not needlessly violate our rules.

The SPEAKER. The Committee on Rules thought that in the recent revision they made the two rules defining the jurisdiction of the Committee on War Claims and the Committee on Claims so distinct that there could be no controversy with reference to the business that there could be no controversy with reference to the business properly belonging to each.

Mr. BLOUNT. The rules are perfectly clear.

The SPEAKER. References made by the House prior to the adoption of the new rules were governed by rules not now in existence. A reading of the two rules recently adopted by the House in reference to the business of these committees will show, in the opinion of the Chair, that there ought not to be any controversy in the minds of members as to where this communication should be a lift relates. of members as to where this communication should go. If it relates to war claims, it goes to the Committee on War Claims; if it relates to any other species of claim, foreign or domestic, then it goes to the Committee on Claims. The present occupant of the chair was not in the chair when this reference was made, and in fact there was no dispute about it. The question now comes up on a privileged motion to reconsider, and the Chair thinks the House may intelligently pass judgment upon the spirit and purpose of the rule.

Mr. NEW. I would like to make a single observation. I understand that the communication from the Secretary of the Treasury is stand that the communication from the Secretary of the Treasury is accompanied by findings in favor of certain claims. So far as I am informed, there is no law requiring those findings to be revised by Congress. If that be a fact, I submit that this matter ought to be referred to the Committee on Appropriations; and if such is not the state of the law, I would like to be so informed by any of the gentlemen who have addressed the House. Unless the law requires the revision of these findings by Congress, it is obvious to my mind that this communication and the claims accompanying the same ought to be referred to the Committee on Appropriations. If under the law everything required has been done with reference to the question as to whether these claims should be paid, then they certainly are here to whether these claims should be paid, then they certainly are here simply to be appropriated for. Why should there be now any question as to what ought to be the reference of this matter? If it be in order, I would like to move its reference to the Committee on Appro-

The SPEAKER. The Committee on Appropriations, under Rule XXI, would not have authority to appropriate unless for a matter authorized by law. The usual practice has been to introduce a bill from one or the other of these committees authorizing payment, and then the Committee on Appropriations has inserted the substance of such bill in one of the regular appropriation bills. Or sometimes a bill coming from the Committee on Claims or the Committee on War Claims has by its own terms authorized the payment of the claim.

The motion indicated by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. NEW] would not be in order until the House, by agreeing to the motion to reconsider, brings the communication back. If the motion to reconsider should prevail, the Chair will entertain the motion of the gentleman from Indiana.

The question being taken on the motion to reconsider, it was agreed to; there being—ayes 84, noes 28.

Mr. SIMONTON. I now move the reference of this communication to the Committee on War Claims.

Mr. NEW. I move to amend so as to refer e communication to the Committee on Appropriations.

The motion of Mr. New was not agreed to.

The motion of Mr. SIMONTON was agreed to.

So the communication was referred to the Committee on War Claims.

SALE OF LANDS IN VINCENNES, INDIANA.

Mr. COBB. I ask unanimous consent to have a bill taken from the Speaker's table for concurrence in amendments of the Senate. It is House bill No. 3742, to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to sell certain real estate belonging to the United States, and vesting the title to certain other lands in the city of Vincennes, in the State of Indiana, and for other purposes

The SPEAKER. The amendments of the Senate will be read, after which there will be opportunity for objection.

The Clerk read the amendments, as follows:

On page 2, in line 15, after the word "city," insert "and cause the same to be appraised at its fair cash value."

On page 2, in line 24, after the word "cash," insert "at not less than the appraised value."

Mr. WILLITS. Is objection in order?
The SPEAKER. It is.
Mr. WILLITS. I object.
Mr. COBB. I hope the gentleman will not object. This bill has been considered by the Committees on Public Lands in both Houses, has been passed by both Houses; and the question is now simply upon concurring in two amendments of the Senate. This is an important measure, indorsed, I may say, by the Secretary of the Treasury and the Solicitor of the Treasury. It provides for selling certain lands in the city of Vincennes.

lands in the city of Vincennes.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WIL-

LITS] object?

Mr. WILLITS. Let the bill go over for one day. I want to investigate a certain matter in connection with it.

SALE OF INDIAN RESERVATION.

On motion of Mr. VALENTINE, by unanimous consent the bill (S. No. 753) to provide for the sale of the remainder of the reservation of the confederated Otoe and Missouria tribes of Indians in the States of Nebraska and Kansas, and for other purposes, was taken from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

FEES IN DONATION CASES.

Mr. WHITEAKER. I ask unanimous consent to have taken from the Speaker's table, for concurrence in a verbal amendment of the Senate, the bill (H. R. No. 3921) to amend section 2238 of the Revised Statutes of the United States in relation to fees for final certificates in donation cases

The Clerk read the amendment of the Senate, as follows:

In line 7, after the word "hundred," insert "and twenty."

Mr. WHITEAKER. This is simply a verbal amendment. The intention was that the phrase should read "three hundred and twenty acres;" that is, a full half section. The words "and twenty" were omitted by inadvertence. The Senate has inserted these words by way of amendment.

Mr. CONGER. If the bill is a short one let it be read as proposed to be amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the sixth paragraph of section 2238 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and the same is hereby, repealed, and that in lieu thereof the following paragraph be inserted:

"A fee in donation cases of $2.50 for each final certificate for one hundred and sixty acres of land; $5 for three hundred and twenty acres; and $7.50 for six hundred and forty acres."

There being no objection, the bill was taken from the Speaker's table and the amendments of the Senate concurred in.

WHITEAKER moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendments of the Senate were concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LIVE-STOCK GROWERS.

Mr. CASWELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask by unanimous consent that the resolutions adopted by a convention of live-stock growers of the United States, recently held in Chicago, in reference to pleuro-pnenmonia of, cattle, be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Agriculture. They are brief, and relate to a subject-matter interesting to every member on this floor.

Mr. CONGER. Yes; let them be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Agriculture.

ferred to the Committee on Agriculture.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection, and the resolutions are accordingly ordered to be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Agriculture.

They are as follows:

the Committee on Agriculture.

They are as follows:

At a meeting of the live-stock growers of the United States, held in Chicago, Illinois, November 17, 1880, Hon. S. R. Scott, of Champaign, Illinois, was called to the chair, and General George E. Bryant, of Madison, Wisconsin, was chosen secretary. The meeting, after a lengthy discussion, passed unanimously the following preamble and resolutions:

Whereas the contagious pleuro-pneumonia of cattle exists in several of the States of the Union bordering on the Atlantic scaboard; and

Whereas it is evident that, so long as unrestricted traffic in live cattle is permitted between these infected States and those not infected the live-stock interests of all sections of our country are menaced by a terrible danger; and

Whereas it is evident that country, thereby entailing great damage to all cattle raisers and feeders in the United States; and

Whereas in view of the decision of our State and Federal courts the States at ing as such are powerless to protect themselves from infection from an adjoining State and for the same reason an infected State is powerless to stamp out the contagion as long as it exists on its borders in an adjoining State: Therefore,

Resolved, That it is the imperative duty of Congress to enact such a law as shall effectually prevent the spread of this disease into States not already infected, and which shall result in its entire extermination at the earliest practicable date.

Resolved, That as an important proliminary step we heartly second the recomendation made by Judge Jones, of Ohio, to the President of the United States for the appointment of one or more veterinary inspectors, who shall definitely ascertain and designate the infected regions.

Resolved, That we recognize the bill introduced into the House of Representatives at its last session by General Keifer, of Ohio, to the President of the United States for the appointment of one or more veterinary inspectors, who shall definitely ascertain and designate the infected regions.

Reso

J. E. CHRISTY.

Mr. SPEER. I move by unanimous consent the following resolution be adopted:

Resolved, That the Committee on Elections be authorized to continue J. L. Christy in the position of assistant clerk to that committee for such time during this session as the committee may require his services, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Honse at the rate of $6 per day for the time actually employed.

Mr. ATKINS. Let it go to the Committee on Accounts.

The SPEAKER. It requires unanimous consent to consider the resolution at this time. The rule requires it to go to the Committee on Accounts. The Clerk will read clause 42 of Rule XI touching the expenditure of the contingent fund of the House.

The Clerk read as follows:

Touching the expenditure of the contingent fund of the House, the auditing and settling all accounts which may be charged therein by order of the House—to the Committee on Accounts.

The SPEAKER. This requires unanimous consent to evade that rule. The Chair hears objection, and the resolution is not before the House.

PRIVATE BUSINESS.

Mr. BRIGHT. I now demand the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER. This being Friday, business of a private nature is in order. The first business in order is the morning hour, during which committees will be called for reports of a private nature.

Mr. BRIGHT. I move to dispense with the morning hour so that we may go into the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar

The SPEAKER. It requires a two-thirds vote to dispense with the morning hour. Mr. HAYES. I think the disposition of the House is to dispense with the morning hour if we can go into the Committee of the Whole House for the purpose of taking up and considering private bills.

The SPEAKER. This being Friday, and the day set apart for consideration of private business, it requires a two-thirds vote to discuss the committee of the commit sideration of private business, it requires a two-thirds vote to dispense with the morning hour.

Mr. WHITE. But what about pending questions?

The SPEAKER. On a former occasion the Chair said he waived any decision on that point, but with the consent of the House would give precedence to the morning hour, as he thought that was an equitable view to take of the subject under the rules. The privileged question continues to run and can be taken up at any time. The Chair did not think it was an equitable view of the rules to cut off business in the morning hour when, under the rules, two-thirds were required to dispense with that morning hour.

Mr. BRIGHT. I withdraw my demand for a morning hour.

The SPEAKER. In that view, without any decision-from the Chair on the subject, it seems to have been concurred in by the House that there should be a morning hour unless dispensed with by a two-thirds vote. The Chair, therefore, to-day, as on former days during this week, has proceeded with the call of committees in the morning hour.

Mr. WHITE. Does the Chair decide it takes precedence of all

The SPEAKER. That point has not yet arisen, and "sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof."

Mr. WHITE. Does the Chair decide the Private Calendar comes up to the exclusion of all other business?

The SPEAKER. He does not decide that, as that question has not yet come up in issue.

Mr. WHITE. I understood there was an intimation to that effect from the Chair.

The SPEAKER. I know. The Chair is prudent.

MORNING HOUR.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour now begins at one o'clock and fifteen minutes p. m., and reports are in order from committees on

NEW YORK AND CONNECTICUT BOUNDARY-LINE.

Mr. LAPHAM. I am directed by the Committee on the Judiciary to report back the bill (H. R. No. 6514) concerning settlement of boundary-lines between New York and Connecticut and put it upon the SPEAKER. It is not in order to put a bill on its passage during the morning hour when committees are called for reports.

Mr. LAPHAM. This is a local bill, and there can be no objection

The SPEAKER. The Chair has never allowed a bill reported in the morning hour to be taken up for consideration and put upon its passage at that time, for if any debate should arise and consume the morning hour, it would result in the subversion of the rule, and other committees would be prevented from submitting their reports for reference.

for reference

Mr. LAPHAM. But the bill does not involve any debate.

The SPEAKER. The bill is a public bill, and cannot be received on private bill day. The committee has leave to report at any time, and the Chair will recognize the gentleman to-morrow, or later on this day if the private business should then be disposed of.

POWERS, NEWMAN, AND OTHERS.

Mr. HASKELL, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported, as a substitute for House bill No. 5731, a bill (H. R. No. 6538) for the relief of Powers and Newman and D. and B. Powers; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

The call of committees was concluded.

THOMAS PETTLIOHN.

Mr. POEHLER. I ask, by unanimous consent, to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. No. 5918) granting a pension to Thomas Pettijohn, received from the Senate with an amendment, for the purpose of moving that amendment be concurred in.

There was no objection, and the amendment of the Senate was read, as follows:

Strike out all after the word "laws," in line 5, and in lieu thereof insert "for total blindness."

Mr. BROWN. Let the bill be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and required to place the name of Thomas Pettijohn, late a corporal of Company D, Ninth Regiment Minnesota Volunteers, on the pension-rolls, subject to the limitations and provisions of the pension laws, for total blindness.

The amendment was concurred in.

Mr. POEHLER moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PRIVATE CALENDAR.

Mr. BRIGHT. I now move the House resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole House for the purpose of considering the Private

Mr. BICKNELL. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Has not the question of privilege, which was pending when the House adjourned yesterday, precedence even on a private bill day?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will have read the words of Rule XXVI.

The Clerk read as follows:

Friday in every week shall be set apart for the consideration of private business, unless otherwise determined by a two-thirds vote of the members present and voting.

Mr. BICKNELL. Does that apply to privileged questions?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has never decided that point under the new rules, but has entertained the morning hour on each day for the reason that under the rule it requires two-thirds to dispense with the reason that under the rule it requires two-thirds to dispense with the morning hour. The same rule, which has just been read, requires a two-thirds vote to dispense with private business on Friday, and the gentleman from Tennessee indicated his purpose to secure the floor to make that motion, which the Chair has recognized. The Chair does not decide now as to the status of the privileged question.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, that question is now before the House in proper form and ought to be settled by ruling, one way or the other, whether privileged questions do not rise above the rules and set aside all ordinary rules; that is to say, whether privileged questions are not really above all rules.

The SPEAKER. The Chair then decides that a privileged question rises above the rules, but for the convenience of the House and the equitable adjustment of its business he has, by consent of the House heretofore, directed that there should be a morning hour. If the issue is raised now the Chair will decide it. The question of consideration is for the House.

sideration is for the House.

Mr. BICKNELL. I desire to raise the point whether the privileged question does not take precedence to-day of private business?

The SPEAKER. It does.
Mr. BICKNELL. Then if it has precedence, I desire to call up the Senate resolution on which the House was engaged yesterday.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana calls up the privilence of the pr leged question which was under consideration on yesterday.

Mr. BRIGHT. And I raise the question of consideration.

The SPEAKER. The effect of that will be to cut off private busimess, or the reverse, according to the judgment of the House.

Mr. CONGER. If the question of consideration is raised the effect will be to give private business the preference.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would immediately recognize the gentleman from Tennessee to make his motion again.

The question was taken; and the motion to proceed with considera-tion of the unfinished business was not agreed to.

Mr. BRIGHT. I now renew my motion that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. HUNTON. Before the gentleman from Tennessee presses his motion I ask him to yield to me for a moment in order to make a personal explanation. My attention, Mr. Speaker, was called last evening to the speech made by the honorable gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. Keifer] in which I find the following paragraph, which I will ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

My friend from Virginia, [Mr. Hunton,] in a speech here, says President Lincoln approved the twenty-second joint rule, adopted in that year. It was adopted by a concurrent resolution, (February 6, 1865), and it was never submitted to him for his action. Other members have fallen into the same error. I understood the honorable Speaker, to-day, to cite this message of President Lincoln in support of the power of Congress to count the vote. Errors of judgment track in the wake of errors of history.

Mr. HUNTON. That allegation in the speech of the gentleman from Ohio is a misrepresentation of the sentiment contained in the speech which I had the honor to deliver on the 8th of June, 1880—of course unintentional misrepresentation. Herepresents me there—

Mr. CONGER. I raise the point of order that this is not a question of personal privilege.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that the gentleman from Michigan should have objected before the gentleman from Virginia had proceeded. The gentleman from Virginia rose and had read an extract from the speech of the gentleman from Ohio, to which he desires to call attention and on which his personal explanation is based. No one objected at the time.

Mr. CONGER. But no one could have known what he claimed as a matter of personal privilege until after he begun. I waive the objection, although I cannot see any reason why because one member differs from another that should be considered a matter of personal

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that the question of privilege which the gentleman from Virginia raises is based on what he regards as a misrepresentation of what he had said.

Mr. KEIFER. I hope the gentleman from Virginia will be allowed

Mr. KEIFER. I hope the gentleman from virginia will be allowed to proceed.

Mr. HUNTON. This, Mr. Speaker, I regard as an imputation upon me—that I have committed an error of history, of which I am not guilty. According to the statement of the gentleman from Ohio I am made to say in my speech of June 8, 1880, that President Lincoln approved the joint rule of 1865. The meaning I attach to the language of the gentleman is, that I stated in my speech that Mr. Lincoln signed the joint rule in approval of it. But I find by reference to the speech which I then delivered that, after quoting the President's message upon another matter, which states upon its face that it has reference to a joint resolution declaring certain States not entitled to representation in the electoral college, I then commented upon the docsentation in the electoral college, I then commented upon the doctrine of that message, but did not state that Mr. Lincoln had approved of the joint rule in the sense that he signed it. He approved of the joint resolution of the two Houses declaring that certain States were not entitled to representation in the electoral college; but in his message he announces the doctrine which I say is applicable to a joint rule and to the power of the two Houses to count the electoral vote. And that there may be no mistake upon the subject I ask the Clerk to read the President's message and my comment thereupon.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives:

The joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution declaring certain States not entitled to representation in the electoral college" has been signed by the Executive in deference to the view of Congress implied in its passage and presentation to him. In his own view, however, the two Houses of Congress, convened under the twelfth article of the Constitution, have complete power to exclude from counting all electoral votes deemed by them to be illegal; and it is not competent for the Executive to defeat or obstruct that power by a veto, as would be the case if his action were at all essential in the matter. He disclaims all right of the Executive to interfere in any way in the matter of canvassing or counting electoral votes; and he also disclaims that, by signing said resolution, he has expressed any opinion on the rectals of the preamble or any judgment of his own upon the subject of the resolution.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, February 8, 1865. Mr. Hunton. It appears from this message that Abraham Lincoln, then President of the United States, not only thought that the two Houses of Congress alone had the power to count the vote, but believed it was not competent for the President of the United States, by vetoing a bill or resolution on the subject, to interfere with that power. President Lincoln stands upon record committed to the doctrine that a joint rule, which does not require the signature of the President, is the true and only mode of determining how the presidential vote shall be counted.

Mr. HUNTON. The gentleman from Ohio will see by the reading Mr. HUNTON. The gentleman from Ohio will see by the reading of that message and my comments upon it that I did not state that Mr. Lincoln signed the joint rule of 1865, but I did state that he approved the resolution declaring that certain States were not entitled to representation in the electoral college, and from that message I deduced the doctrine that the President entertained at the time, to wit, that the two Houses of Congress had the right to count the electoral vote. That was all I meant to say and all I said upon the subject. I take pleasure, however, in saying that I have no idea the gentleman from Ohio meant to misrepresent my opinion or position.

Mr. KEIFER. I certainly did not intend to misrepresent, if I did so at all, the distinguished gentleman from Virginia, and I have no

Mr. KEIFER. I certainly did not intend to misrepresent, if I did so at all, the distinguished gentleman from Virginia, and I have no sort of objection to the gentleman making clearer if possible what he did intend in what he said. I ought to add by way of justification of the remark I made that I had reference to language in his speech which he has not given to the House this morning. I understand he which he has not given to the House this morning. complains that I used this language:

My friend from Virginia, [Mr. Hunton] in a speech here, says President Lincoln approved the twenty-second joint rule adopted in that year.

Now, it will be noticed that in his speech the gentleman from Virginia spoke of the year 1865, when the joint resolution he and I were referring to was passed. In that speech, which he had the courtesy to furnish me some time ago under his own frank, I find this language:

The President of the Senate had a right to say how Louisiana had voted, and no member of either House of Congress had the right to do more than sit there and see the President of the Senate usurp authority and declare a man elected as President who perchance might not have received one third of the electoral votes. But the twenty-second joint rule was in operation, a rule which met the approval of two-thirds of both Houses and the approval of the President of the United States.

And that is precisely the language I used when I said the gentleman stated that the President of the United States had "approved the twenty-second joint rule." Now I do not know that he meant to say that, and if he chooses to correct his language I have no objection. I have stated this in order to justify myself. But taking the gentleman's speech and the message which has just been read, I think if the gentleman will examine the message he will see there is not a single word in it that could by any possible strained construction be interpreted to be in favor of any joint rule by any sort of implication. And what is more, the very message of President Lincoln, which the gentleman has caused to be read, stands upon the doctrine that Congress has no right to interfere with this matter as strongly as it possibly could. In that message the then President of the United States uses this language:

In his own view, however, the two Houses of Congress convened under the twelfth article of the Constitution have complete power—to do so and so. Not the two Houses of Congress acting separately; not Congress acting; but the two Houses of Congress convened under the twelfth article. There is no inference to be drawn from that that President Lincoln ever believed in any such doctrine as is connected with this rule

So to take the gentleman on his own language when he says in one place that President Lincoln approved of the doctrine, there is not a scintilla in this message that indicates that fact. But it is sufficient for me to say that on page 13 of his printed speech he uses the lan-guage I attributed to him, almost in words; that is, that the twenty-second joint rule had the approval of the President of the United States.

Mr. HUNTON. I desire to say when I used the word "approval," I did not mean to convey the idea that President Lincoln had approved in the sense that the President approves by signing. All I wish to make out of the President's message on that subject was the approval by the then President of the United States of the doctrine that the two Houses, without the interference of the Executive, had a right to count the electoral vote. That is all I meant to say.

Mr. KEIFER. The gentleman used the same word in his speech that I used; and I do not wish to give it any other meaning than he has the technical meaning of his approved, as applied to the Fresident, has the technical meaning of his approving and signing a bill or joint resolution. I used the word "approval."

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to say in this connection that he directed the attention of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Keifer] to the connection in which he placed the view of the Chair, in delivering his desired with the language area of the connection of the same and the same area. decision, with the language preceding it, in speaking of the twenty-second joint rule, and stated the language of the gentleman might by implication make it to appear that the Chair in rendering his decision had fallen into the error of saying the President of the United States, Abraham Lincoln, had approved the twenty-second joint rule, when the Chair knew the opposite and had made the matter clear and distinct by causing to be read the message of President Lincoln with the title of the joint resolution to which the Chair had referwith the title of the joint resolution to which the Chair had reference. The Chair having directed the attention of the gentleman from Ohio to that privately, that gentleman gave the assurance to the Chair, and he presumes it has been done, that he would disconnect the two matters so that it would not appear even by implication that the Chair had referred to the twenty-second joint rule as having been approved by any President. And he is obliged to the gentleman from Ohio if he has done so.

Mr. KEIFER. I did not say in my speech that the Speaker in any way speke of the twenty-second joint rule as having been approved.

way spoke of the twenty-second joint rule as having been approved by President Lincoln. The language I used was this:

I understood the honorable Speaker to-day to cite this message of President Lin-coln in support of the power of Congress to count the vote.

The SPEAKER. That is all right if disconnected from what the mr. KEIFER. The sentence is complete, a period being there.

The SPEAKER. The sentence is complete, a period being there.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio having made the correction, that is all the Chair desires.

Mr. KEIFER. At the suggestion of the Chair, I have put in the precise title of the joint resolution approved by President Lincoln.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is obliged to the gentleman.

Mr. KEIFER. And I disclaim that by implication in any way President Lincoln affirmed the doctrine that the two Houses of Congress had the right to count the vote.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is aware of that.

PRIVATE CALENDAR.

Mr. BRIGHT. I now insist on my motion that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House to consider the Private Calendar.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, Mr. Sparks in the chair.

WILLIAM A. AND ADELICIA CHEATHAM.

The first bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 3561) The first oil on the Frivate Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 3361) for the relief of William A. and Adelicia Cheatham, reported from the Committee on Claims by Mr. O'CONNOR.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I ask that that bill be passed over for the present.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the Chair understand the gentleman to object to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I simply asked that it be passed over for the

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair knows of no rule by which that can be done. If any gentleman objects to the consideration of a bill, then under the rule the committee must rise and report the objection

Mr. O'CONNOR. I do not object to the consideration of the bill, except that I desire it passed over for the present to be taken up on some future Friday. I think it is customary for the Committee of the Whole to pass over bills informally.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read clause 4 of Rule XXIII.

The Clerk read as follows:

In Committees of the Whole House, business on their calendars shall be taken up in regular order, except bills for raising revenue, general appropriation bills, and bills for the improvement of rivers and harbors, which shall have precedence, and when objection is made to the consideration of any bill or proposition, the committee shall thereupon rise and report such objection to the House, which shall decide, without debate, whether such bill or proposition shall be considered or laid aside for the present; whereupon the committee shall resume its sitting without further order of the House.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I hold that it is competent for this Committee of the Whole, without objection, to pass over informally any bill upon its Calendar. It has been frequently done here. I simply ask that this bill be informally passed over for the present.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that it is not competent under the new rules for the Committee of the Whole to do that. If objection is made to the consideration of any bill or proposition, the committee must rise and report that objection to the House.

Mr. BLOUNT. I do not understand the gentleman from South Car-

Mr. BLOUNT. I do not understand the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. O'CONNOR] to object to the consideration of this bill, but merely to ask that it be passed over for the present.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would suggest to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. O'CONNOR] that the Committee of the Whole

South Carolina [Mr. O'CONNOR] that the Committee of the Whole can do anything by unanimous consent.

Mr. BLOUNT. The gentleman, however, has not indicated when he desires that this bill be taken up hereafter.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I will state to the committee that since filing the report in this case I have been in correspondence with the Secretary of the Treasury. It is necessary for me to take further action before I shall be prepared to present this case to the House and ask for a vote on the bill. If it is desired, I am willing that the bill shall be placed at the foot of the Calendar, so that it shall not interfere with the consideration of any other bill on the Calendar.

Mr. BLOUNT. I can see no objection to that.

The CHAIRMAN. The suggestion of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. O'CONNOR] that this bill be passed over for the present can be agreed to by unanimous consent. If there be no objection this bill will be passed over.

Mr. BLOUNT. The gentleman also suggested that it be placed at the foot of the Calendar.

The CHAIRMAN. And placed at the foot of the Calendar. If there be no objection that order will be made.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

CHARLES W. ABBOT AND W. W. BARRY.

CHARLES W. ABBOT AND W. W. BARRY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2828) for the relief of Charles W. Abbot, a pay-director, and W. W. Barry, a passed assistant paymaster, in the United States Ravy, reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs by Mr. Monse.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That Charles W. Abbot, a pay-director, and W. W. Barry, a passed assistant paymaster, in the United States Navy, be, and they are hereby, released from liability or loss in consequence of the embezzlement of $2,605.54 by R. J. O'Reilly, a paymaster's clerk in the navy-yard at Boston. And the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to refund to said Abbot the sum of $797.15, and to said Barry $1,808.39, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. BROWNE. Is there a report accompanying this bill? Mr. MORSE. There is.
Mr. BROWNE. Let the report be read.

The report was read, as follows:

Mr. BROWNE. Let the report be read.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2828) for the relief of Pay Director Charles W. Abbot and Passed Assistant Paymaster W. W. Barry, of the United States Navy, having had the same under consideration, submit the following report:

It appears that on the 19th of October, 1876, R. J. O'Reilly was appointed paymaster's clerk by Paymaster W. W. Woodhull, then discharging the duties of paymaster of the navy-yard. Boston, Massachusetts, which appointment was approved by the commandant of the station. Since the above date O'Reilly continued to hold the position of paymaster's clerk, his duty being to assist the paymaster of the navy-yard at Boston, until the 25th of October, 1878, when, having been detected in a dishonest transaction, he was suspended from duty, and a thorough examination disclosed the fact that he had embezzled of the Government moneys $2,605.54. Prompt measures were taken to effect his arrest after his defalcation was ascertained, but he had absconded. On the 10th of July, 1878, Pay Director Charles W. Abbot was ordered to relieve Paymaster F. H. Swan at the Boston navy-yard. After taking charge of the pay office, Pay Director Charles W. Abbot became suddenly ill, and on July 22, 1878, was relieved by Passed Assistant Paymaster W. W. Barry. Again, on October, 1.878, Pay Director Charles W. Abbot, having recovered his health, relieved Passed Assistant Paymaster W. W. Barry. The fidelity, competency, and integrity of the clerk, O'Reilly, having been vonched for by Paymaster Swan, who relieved Paymaster Woodhull, and had continued the clerk through his term of service, he was, therefore, retained by Passed Assistant Paymaster W. W. Barry and by Pay Director Charles W. Abbot.

After the discovery of this deficiency in the cash, the fact was at once reported to the commandant of the station, and an investigation requested by Pay Director Charles W. Abbot.

After the discovery of insideling investi an opportunity was afforded the clerk O'Reilly to carry over from one to the other any frauds that he had kept concealed."

Having carefully considered all the facts and circumstances connected with the case, the committee report favorably thereon, and recommend the passage of the bill.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

BENJAMIN F. BINGHAM.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 1729) for the payment of certain Indian war bonds of the State of Cali-

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to pay to Benjamin F. Bingham, of Washington. District of Columbia, out of any money not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,416.88, the amount of four Indian war bonds issued by the act of the Legislature of California, approved May 3, 1852, for the suppression of Indian hostilities in that State, and for which Congress assumed the payment, appropriating the sum of $224,263, August 5, 1854, the unexpended balance of which appropriation was covered into the United States Treasury June 29, 1863.

Mr. BLOUNT. Let the report be read. The report was read, as follows:

Mr. BLOUNT. Let the report be read.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1729) for the payment of certain Indian war bonds of the State of California, have had the same under consideration, and beg leave to submit the following report:

The evidence laid before the committee clearly establishes the fact that Indian war bonds were issued by the State of California under an act approved May 23, 1852, in payment of expenses incurred in the suppression of Indian hostilities within that State.

It is also shown that these bonds named in the bill (four in number) were issued as a part payment of the debt incurred as above stated and under the authority referred to, and were made payable in ten years, with interest at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum.

It is found that the bonds are properly authenticated, being signed by J. Neely Johnson, governor; G. W. Whitman, comptroller; and Henry Bates, treasurer. The certificate of James J. Green, comptroller of California in 1872, as to the genuineness of the bonds, was submitted by the claimant and is filed with other papers in evidence, and also a letter from Hon. Horace Austin, Fifth Auditor of Treasury United States.

Following numerous precedents, that the General Government was liable for all expenses incurred by States in the suppression of Indian hostilities, Congress, by an act approved August 5, 1854, assumed the payment of this class of bonds, and the sum of $924,259.65 was appropriated for that purpose. On the 29th day of June, 1863, there was an unexpended balance of this appropriation of $10,188.63, which, under the provisions of law, was carried to the surplus fund of the Treasury. This unexpended balance arose out of the fact that certain of these bonds had not been presented for payment. Among this number were the bonds now in the hands of the committee, which the holder is therefore compelled to ask that Congress will confer upon the Secretary of the Treasury authority to pay to him the

Mr. FINLEY. I desire to inquire of the gentleman having this bill in charge whether Congress at any time has made a specific appropriation for the payment of these bonds? I could not understand exactly from the reading of the report whether the appropriation made had been or not a specific appropriation for the payment of these bonds. It seems that these bonds were issued by the State of California in the second of fornia for the payment of expenses incurred in an Indian war. From the reading of the report I understand that an appropriation was made, but that statement was coupled with a statement of the precedents for the payment of such bonds, so that I am not certain cedents for the payment of such bonds, so that I am not certain whether the report states that Congress at a former session made a specific appropriation or not for the payment of these bonds. I desire to inquire whether that is so.

Mr. DEERING. I will state that war bonds were issued by the State of California under authority of an act passed by its Legislature in 1852 for the payment of expenses incurred in the suppression of Indian hostilities within that State. In 1854 Congress, according to the established policy of the Government, assumed the payment of these expenses and directed the Secretary of War—

Mr. FINLEY. Allow me. Were these particular bonds described in that act of Congress?

Mr. DEERING. They had not been issued at that time. If the gentleman will hear me for a moment I think I can make it perfectly clear to him. In 1854 Congress assumed the payment of these expenses and authorized the Secretary of War to ascertain what was the amount so expended, and made an appropriation at the same time of penses and authorized the Secretary of War to ascertain what was the amount so expended, and made an appropriation at the same time of something like $925,000. In 1856 Congress passed another act directing the payment of all this class of bonds that had been issued prior to 1854. These bonds, however, did not come under that act, because they were not issued until May, 1856.

In 1860 Congress passed another act, by which it directed the payment of this class of bonds which were issued subsequently to 1854. But the holder of these bonds in the mean time had gone away to the plains, and was not aware of the passage of that act. But the bonds were certified by the comptroller of California in 1862 to the Treasury of the United States, and are now fully authenticated by the action of the late Third Auditor of the Treasury, Mr. Austin, and the late Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Sawyer, as well as by the officers of the State of California. I have their statements here, and also letters of the late Third Auditor, and of Mr. Sawyer. I will state for the information of the House that this bill was before the Committee on Claims in the Forty-third Congress and received from that committee a unanimous report in its favor. It was also before the Forty-fifth Congress, and the Committee on Indian Affairs of that the Forty-fifth Congress, and the Committee on Indian Affairs of that Congress was unanimous in reporting it favorably. I have carefully examined the bill, and believe it is just and ought to pass.

Mr. FINLEY. The passage of this bill, as I understand, does not carry interest on the bonds.

Mr. DEERING. As I understand, it does not. Mr. WARNER. Do I understand the gentleman from Iowa to say that interest is not included in this appropriation?

Mr. DEERING. I understand that interest is not included. I have the bonds here, and can easily make the computation.

Mr. WARNER. I understand that interest is included at 7 per cent. Let the bill be again read.

The Clerk again read the bill.

Mr. BLOUNT. What is the amount of the bonds?
Mr. DEERING. Two hundred and fifty dollars, each.
Mr. WARNER. The language of the bill does not say whether interest is included or not.

Mr. DEERING. I will state, on reflection, that interest is included.

Mr. WARNER. Interest has been included at 7 per cent.?

Mr. DEERING. Yes, sir.

Mr. WARNER. I submit that, in view of the statement which has been made here, the holder of these bonds cannot claim interest, as it was his fault that the bonds were not presented for payment after the appropriation was made.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman offer an amendment?

Mr. WARNER. I move to strike out the amount of the interest.

Mr. DEERING. Will the gentleman hear me one moment? The holder of these bonds was certainly not responsible for their non-payment up to 1862. Though they were dated in 1856, they were not certified by the officers of the State of California to the officers of the United States in Washington until 1862. It would certainly be very unjust to withhold interest up to that time.

Mr. BLOUNT. I would like to ask the gentleman whether it is not the usage of the Government in this class of cases to pay no interest?

Mr. DEERING. My judgment is—
Mr. BLOUNT. I do not ask the gentleman's judgment. What is the practice?

Mr. DEERING. I think that when the paper calls for interest on

Mr. DEERING. I think that when the paper calls for interest on its face the Government always pays it, but not otherwise.

Mr. WARNER. I move to amend the bill by striking out the words "four hundred and sixteen dollars and eighty-eight cents." This will leave $1,000 as the amount of the appropriation. The Government does not pay 7 cent. interest to anybody now.

Mr. PAGE. It seems to me that interest ought to be allowed by the Government column to the time when paying on was made for the Government only up to the time when provision was made for the payment of these bonds. After that there ought to be no interest paid; up to that time interest should be allowed.

Mr. WARNER. What would interest up to that time amount to?

Mr. PAGE. I do not know.

Mr. DEERING. Certainly the bonds should draw interest up to 1862

Mr. FINLEY. Is $416.88 the amount of the computed interest?
Mr. WARNER. Yes, sir.
Mr. DEERING. Certainly the Government ought to be willing to pay interest up to the time when it made provision for the payment

Mr. BLOUNT. If it be true that the Government ought to pay interest on this claim, it certainly ought to pay interest on every war claim and on all claims of every character. The precedents have been the other way. The Government has not been in the habit of paying interest, and I do not see why an exception should be made in this particular case.

Mr. WARNER. There ought not to be any interest paid.

Mr. ROBINSON. I have no information about this matter, except Mr. ROBINSON. I have no information about this matter, except as I collect it here and now. It seems to me, however, if I understand the facts, that there is a distinction to be observed here, and perhaps my friend from Ohio [Mr. WARNER] will concede it at once. If the contract was not only to pay a certain amount of money, but also to pay interest, then I take it the Government, according to the principles of justice and fair dealing, ought to pay interest. In cases of claims for damages and losses we do not allow interest, (although such claims are often unpaid a long time,) because there is no contract to pay interest. If the fact in this case is—I am not informed about the facts except as the gentleman from Iowa states them—if the fact is that these bonds are an obligation not only to pay the principal but to pay interest, then we ought to pay interest. s I collect it here and now. It seems to me, however, if I undertand the facts, that there is a distinction to be observed here, and the contract was not only to pay a certain amount of money, but also to pay interest, then I take it the Government, according to the principles of justice and fair dealing, ought to pay interest. In although such claims are often unpaid a long time,) because there is no contract to pay interest. If the fact in this case is—I am not informed about the facts except as the gentleman from Iowa states hem—if the fact is that these bonds are an obligation not only to any the principal but to pay interest, then we ought to pay interest was a part of the contract, of course the bill should include interest up to the ime when provision was made for the payment of the bonds. I would like to know the facts of the contract.

Mr. DEERING. Well?

Mr. FINLEY. Hear me through. If in 1860 they could get payment by presentation and having them certified and then neglected to do it, or the officers of California neglected to do their duty, I do not think the Government by reason of any such carelessness ought to be compelled to pay more than was originally intended to be paid.

Mr. DEERING. It is impossible for us to decide who is responsible for that neglect or delay. One thing appears of record, and that is the fact that the officers of the State of California failed to certify the genuineness of these bonds to the officers of these bonds only ask for the payment of interest up to that time.

Mr. WARNER. I offered my amendment under the impression and to do it, or the officers of California neglected to do their duty, I do not think the Government by reason of any such carelessness ought to be compelled to pay more than was originally intended to pay more than the holders of them could get their money of the sentation of them in 1860—

Mr. DEERING. Well?

Mr. DEERING. I in 18 pay the principal but to pay interest, then we ought to pay interest until the time when we provided means of payment.

Mr. WARNER. I agree that if the payment of interest was a part of the contract, of course the bill should include interest up to the time when provision was made for the payment of the bonds. I would like to know the facts of the contract for 7 per cent. interest. The Government made no provision for the payment of the bonds until 1862, they having been issued in 1856.

Mr. WARNER. Then the Government was not a party to the contract until 1862, and therefore did not obligate itself to pay interest.

Mr. BLOUNT. The Government was not bound, as my friend said, until 1862, but at that time the appropriation was made and these gentlemen failed to call for their money. It was their own fault. It was in the Treasury waiting for them until under the law it was covered back into the Treasury.

Mr. WARNER Linest on mr. amendment.

ered back into the Treasury.

Mr. WARNER. I insist on my amendment.

Mr. WHITE. May I ask the gentleman having charge of the bill, and who made the report, whether the Government paid a similar class of bonds to these? There were more than these four bonds.

Mr. DEERING. Mr. Chairman, I would like to state that on the computation of interest on the bonds by my friend since the debate began it is found that it was only computed in the bill up to the time when the Government made provision for payment, which was in 1862. Let seems to me to be eminently just and proper that it should be so computed. be so computed.

Mr. BLOUNT. I should like to ask my friend a question right here. He says this bill does not provide interest beyond the time when the appropriation was made for payment.

Mr. DEERING. When they were certified and accepted.
Mr. BLOUNT. The gentleman says when they were certified and ecepted. What date is that?

Mr. DEERING. Eighteen hundred and sixty-two; I cannot tell the exact day.

Mr. BLOUNT. I desire to ask my friend, that being assumed there is no interest computed after that time, whether the Government proposes to pay the interest up to that time if appropriations were proposes to pay the interest up to that time it appropriations were made prior to 1862 on these four bonds?

Mr. DEERING. What does the gentleman say?

Mr. BLOUNT. Did the act assuming the payment of these bonds touch the principal only, or principal and interest?

Mr. DEERING. I understand it to have covered the interest.

Mr. BLOUNT. Did the gentleman examine the act himself?

Mr. DEERING. I have the date of the act, and it can easily be

Mr. BLOUNT. Give us the date, and it will be easy to refer to it.
Mr. PRESCOTT. The bonds on their face appear to have coupons for the payment of interest running to May, 1862. This bill provides for the amount of these bonds and for interest according to the coupons attached to them, and nothing more.

Mr. BLOUNT. The gentleman says that he understands that the act provides for interest. The gentleman in charge of the bill is not sure. It is an easy matter to have the act read, and that will settle the whole question.

Mr. FINLEY. I have one of the bonds here. The State of Cali-Mr. FINLEY. I have one of the bonds here. The State of California proposes to pay the holder of this bond $250, with 7 per cent. interest. It is dated the 11th of May, 1856, with coupons running to the 2d day of May, 1862. I understand the gentleman from Iowa, and I hope I can have his attention for a moment, because I wish to know whether I am right—I understand the gentleman to say that Congress assumed the payment of those bonds in 1860, and made no provision for their payment patil 1862. It that so?

mr. DEERING. That is what I understood the gentleman to say.
Mr. DEERING. It ordered payment and made provision for these bonds

Mr. FINLEY. When?
Mr. DEERING. In 1860. But the bonds were not certified by the State officers of California to the officers of the Treasury Department until 1862.

Mr. FINLEY. Through whose fault or by whose negligence?

Mr. DEERING. I cannot state.
Mr. FINLEY. The holders of the bonds?
Mr. DEERING. No; the officers of the State of California.
Mr. FINLEY. Then, Mr. Chairman, that raises a different ques-

Mr. DEERING. Certainly the delayed settlement was not through any fault of the holders of the bonds.

Mr. FINLEY. If the Government made provision for the payment of these bonds and the holders of them could get their money on pre-

I am satisfied, on examination of the bill, it only appropriates for the face of the bonds and coupons which entered into and constituted a part of the contract assumed by the Government. I therefore withdraw my amendment.

Mr. BLOUNT. I ask for the reading of the law upon the subject.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the section of the statute which covers this case

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, suthorized to pay, out of the unexpended balance of appropriation for the war debt of the State of California made by the last section of the act approved August 5, 1854, entitled "An act making appropriation for the support of the Army for the year ending the 30th of June, 1855," any outstanding and unpaid bonds and coupons issued by said State for said war debt prior to the passage of said act, but bearing date subsequent to the 1st day of January, 1854. Provided, That no payment shall be made beyond the unexpended amount of said appropriation now remaining in the Treasury; and also that there be paid, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $22,000, or so much thereof as may be required, for extra compensation and salaries to the district judges of California, under the provisions of the seventh section of the act entitled "An act to define and regulate the jurisdiction of the district courts of the United States in California private land claims," approved June, [16,] 1860.

M. DEFEING: It will be seen Mr. Chairman that that covers

Mr. DEERING. It will be seen, Mr. Chairman, that that covers this whole case

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the gentleman from Ohio as having withdrawn his amendment.

Mr. WARNER. I have withdrawn the amendment.
Mr. DEERING. I move, Mr. Chairman, that the bill be laid aside and reported favorably to the House.
The CHAIRMAN. If there be no further amendment, the bill will be laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

There being no further amendment, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

JOHN H. W. RILEY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2503) for the relief of John H. W. Riley.

The bill, which was read, authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $350 to John H. W. Riley, of San Francisco, California, the same to be in full compensation for services rendered the United States as phonographic reporter during the investigation into the claim of one Charles Murphy for extra compensation for excavating for dry-dock at the Mare Island navy-yard.

The report was read, as follows:

The report was read, as follows:

In the winter of 1876-77, one Charles Murphy had, or protended to have, a certain claim for a large amount against the Government for extra work in excavating a pit for the stone dry-dock at the navy-yard on Mare Island, California; that Admiral John Rodgers was then in command at said navy-yard, and such claim was referred to him to take testimony and report an award to the Department, and as Murphy was represented by counsel, Admiral Rodgers deemed it necessary to employ counsel on the part of the Government, and also a phonographic reporter to transcribe and report the proceedings, and he notified the Secretary of the Navy to that effect, and was authorized by the Secretary to use his own judgment in the premises. Thereupon the admiral employed the claimant in this matter as such phonographic reporter, and he was so employed from December 9, 1876, to January 13, 1877. Mr. Riley claims for his services $82.40, but the Secretary of the Navy does not feel authorized to pay the claim without further legislation. The claim is approved by the counsel for the Government employed by Admiral Rodgers, as well as by the admiral himself. The committee find that Mr. Riley was employed not exceeding thirty working days, and the committee are of the opinion that $10 per day would be a just and reasonable compensation for the services rendered, but as the claimant has lain out of the use of his money for two years and upward, we are of the opinion that he should be allowed the sum of $350, and we recommend that the bill be amended accordingly, and that when so amended the same do pass.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment, in line 6, to strike out the words "eighty-two," "and forty cents," and insert "fifty;" so that the bill, as amended, will read, "the sum of $350."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was laid aside to be favorably reported to the House.

JOHN ADAMS AND OTHERS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2437) for the relief of several persons impressed into the United States naval service.

The bill, which was read, authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Treasury, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to settle and pay to the several persons comprising the crews of the steamers Champion, Nos. 3 and 5, or their legal representatives, for the time they were each held as prisoners of war, including the necessary time it took them to reach their homes after their release at the same rate of pay per month they were each reaching at lease, at the same rate of pay per month they were each receiving at the time they were captured; also for commutation for rations for same time, to be settled and paid upon proper applications to be made under this act, and passed upon by the proper accounting officers of the Treasury.

The report was read, as follows:

The claimants under this bill are John Adams, William B. Clift, David Dunseath, William Killinger, J. F. Scott, administrator of the estate of Obadiah Scott, deceased; Davis C. Peak, Charles Linderman, James Linnane, Patrick Carey, John McMahon, and James Gorman, administrator of the estate of Patrick Gorman, deceased. A bill for their relief was introduced into the House of Representatives during the second session of the Forty-fifth Congress. It passed the House in the third session of that Congress, and was sent to the United States Senate. The Committee on Claims in the Senate reported in favor of said bill, and it passed the Senate with an amendment and was returned to the House for concurrence therein the last day of that session, too late to be called up or acted upon by the House, and failed for want of time.

The claims of these parties are the same as those in the case of John Ray, for whose relief an act was passed at the second session of the Forty-fifth Congress.

After a full examination of the evidence in support of this bill, the committee find the facts are accurately set forth in the report made to the House of Representatives by the Committee on War Claims in the case of John Ray. (See H. R. 208, second session Forty-fifth Congress.) Your committee agree with and adopt said report, which is as follows:

[Report to accompany bill H. R. No. 4143.]

said report, which is as follows:

[Report to accompany bill II. R. No. 4143.]

The vessels Champion No. 3 and Champion No. 5 were engaged in company in the same service and were impressed under the same order, at the same time, and for the same expedition, and proceeded thereon under the same command, and were destroyed while attempting to run the same battery, one on the 56th of April, 1864, and the other the day following. The claims are for payment of wages during the same captivity, and were presented in the same manner for payment, and rejected for the same reasons. In that case your committee reported as follows:

'In April, 1864, said Ray was employed, at a salary of $400 per month, as pilot of the steamboat Champion No. 3, then employed in towing barges of coal for the army and navy of the Lower Mississippi. When the boat reached the month of Red River, about the 15th of April, she was ordered and compelled, against the protest of her officers and crew, to proceed up that river to Alexandria, about one hundred and twenty miles, and report to Commodore D. D. Potter with one barge of coal; and when she did so she was then required and compelled, against the protest of officers and crew, to proceed about one hundred and twenty miles farther up the river to assist in raising the sunhen United States vessel Eastport.

"Commodore Porter accompanied the expedition in his flag-boat and commanded it. On the return, they came to a confederate battery of nineteen gans, meantime creeded near the mouth of Cain Creek; and in running the same, under the orders of Commodore Porter, the boiler of the Champion No. 3 was expleded by a shot, and only seven persons, out of one hundred and seventy on board, escaped with their lives. The Champion No. 5 was also totally destroyed, and the survivors of both crews made prisoners of war, and confined at Camp Ford. Texas, where they suffered privations and exposures scarcely paralleled in the history of the war. This claim was presented to the accounting officers of the Navy for "'Congress has directedly provided (R. S., § 3483) that one who sustains damage by the destruction by an enemy of a vessel, while such property is in the military service, shall be paid the value of the vessel. And section 4693, Revised Statutes, has been construed to authorize the payment of a pension in a case where the terms of employment were the same as that under which claimant was engaged at the time of the disaster. I have examined carefully the regulations of the Army and of the Navy and the acts of Congress, together with the authorities cited by the claimant's attorney, and I am unable to find any like provision that would authorize the accounting officers of the Treasury to sustain this claim without further legislation. legislation.

"I am, very respectfully,

". W. W. UPTON. "Second Comptroller."

"Your committee fully concur with the Second Comptroller as to the justice and merit of this claim."

Under the laws above referred to the owner of the vessel has been paid its value, and the widows of the killed have been pensioned. No good reason exists why the survivors should not be paid wages during the time of their captivity. If their comrades who lost their lives were in the service of the United States so as to entitle their widows to pension, surely the survivors were in the service and entitled to pay. If the owner of the vessel, who risked his property in the service of the United States, was entitled to compensation for its loss, then a fortiorial life and liberty are dearer than property) he who risked his life and lost his liberty in the service of the United States should at least have pay for the time lost in captivity. And such is the ruling and practice in auditing accounts for services in the Quartermaster's Department of the Army in precisely similar cases, as appears by the following letter received by your committee in reply to an inquiry addressed to the Third Auditor of the Treasury, who has charge of that duty in Army accounts:

"Treasury Department, Third Auditor's Office, quiry addressed to the Third Auditor of the Treasury, who has charge of that duty in Army accounts:

"TREASURY DEFARTMENT, THED AUDITOR'S OFFICE,
"Washington, D. C., January 24, 1878.

"In response to your letter of the 23d instant, asking as to the practice of this office in reference to claims filed by employes of the Quartermaster's Department for compensation as such employes while held as prisoners of war, you are informed that it has not been the custom of this office to make any allowance to such persons merely as damages for detention while in captivity. The action of the office has been founded on the theory that persons hired by the Quartermaster's Department and carried on the rolls of that department continue to be the servants thereof during captivity, and are entitled to be paid at the rate of hiring until discharged from the service.

"The favorable action of this office has not, however, been confined to persons in the service of the Quartermaster's Department under express contract, but has been extended to the crews of boats which have been impressed into the military service, which crews have been subsequently captured, upon the theory that by the impressment of the boat the Government makes the employes of the owners its servants.

"There is no special statute authorizing these allowances, but the act of 1817 (section 217, Revised Statutes) imposing upon the Third Auditor the duty of examining all accounts of the Quartermaster's Department has been deemed to confer ample authority for the action taken.

"In reference to compensation, the rule has been to continue to an employé the pay he was receiving from his employer at the time of the capture, and to continue the same while he is actually held as a prisoner of war—that is to say, up to the time of his parol—allowing, in addition, a reasonable time for his return to the port of shipment.

time of his passes, port of shipment.

"'I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
"'HORACE AUSTIN, Auditor.'

"It would thus seem that in precisely similar cases pay is allowed in the Army and disallowed in the Navy. Your committee do not question the correctness of the ruling in either case. It is probably casus omissus in the case of the Navy, as the Second Comptroller suggests; but it is evident that the Government should be prompt to mete out the same justice to the gallent men who do the same services in the time of danger, whether done in the Army or Navy. Whether an act be performed under the orders of a general or a commodore can make no possible difference either in its merit or its worth."

These men were all captured on the 26th and 27th days of April, 1864, and were exchanged on the 27th day of May, 1865, and reached Cincinnation their return on the 11th day of June, 1865. Although the wages for like service on Red River were much greater than they were receiving for service on the Missispip, yet your committee feel bound by the rule of the Department, as above stated, and recommend the payment of the same wages they were receiving when impressed, from the time of their capture up to the time of their return to Cincinnati, and report the following substitute for all of said bills, and recommend its passage.

The bill was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

JOHN H. AND ROBERT F. SHUGART.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 3782) for the relief of John H. Shugart and Robert F. Shugart.

The bill, which was read, provides that John H. Shugart and Robert F. Shugart, late privates in Company G, Twenty-first Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, be relieved from the charge of desertion, which now appears to be unfounded, and from the finding and judgment thereon of a court-martial, approved and promulgated in General Orders No. 12, headquarters First Division, Twentieth Army Corps, June 6, 1863: provided, that by reason of the act no right to any pay for service while under arrest and imprisonment shall be revived, but all claim and right to bounty shall be as if no such charge had been all claim and right to bounty shall be as if no such charge had been made or trial had.

The report was read, as follows:

The report was read, as follows:

The committee have carefully considered the same, and find the facts relative to the claim for relief to be:

First. The claimants, John H. Shugart and Robert F. Shugart, enlisted as private soldiers in the Twenty-first Regiment of Illinois Volunteers in 1861, and served faithfully as such, without any reflection or imputation upon their soldierly conduct until the battle of Stone River, December 30, 1862, when the regiment and that portion of the Army to which they belonged was repulsed in great disorder, and these men were reported as deserters by reason of temporary absence in the mélée and confusion incident to a rout. Upon their return to their regiment, shortly after, they were arrested, tried, and convicted of desertion, and sentenced to military prison for the unexpired term of their service.

The evidence, as well as the conduct of the men, shows this to have been an unmerited sentence and an undeserved accusation. Absence without leave is full as strong a charge as the facts will support, and it is quite apparent from outside history that other elements than a desire to promote the good of the service actuated or at leastaggravated the charge and entered into the prosecution. But on that it is not necessary to now decide, and is only alluded to in justice to the soldiers.

The soldiers were sent to prison under the sentence and were returned to their regiments from prison in 1864, and went upon duty as usual in active service.

They were both mustered out at the end of their first enlistment and received honorable discharges; and one of them re-enlisted as a veteran and served through the remainder of the war.

They took part in several battles and were never accused of cowardice or mishebacing except in the instance above a rated.

They took part in several battles and were never accused of cowardice or misbehavior except in the instance above stated.

Second. The committee find, and report as matter of law, that an honorable discharge purges a soldier's record from stain which would otherwise attach to it from the charge of descrition, but the committee are advised the practice of the officers of the Government ignores the law in that regard, and for that reason legislation is necessary to the promotion of justice.

Third. The committee do not feel, the sentence having been regular in form and execution, that it is a proper exercise of their duty to recommend its vacation by act of Congress; but they are of the opinion that the soldiers should be relieved of the taint of desertion and receive the bounty promised them at their enlistment, but no pay while under sentence, and therefore report a substitute for said bill (H. R.
No. 877) and recommend its passage.

The bill was laid aside to be favorably reported to the House.

A. B. ROWDEN.

The next business on the Private Calender was the bill (H. R. No. 706) for the relief of A. B. Rowden.

The bill, which was read, directs the proper accounting officers in the Treasury Department to pay to A. B. Rowden, of Meigs County, Tennessee, the pay due him as a second lieutenant of cavalry, from the 31st day of August, 1863, to the 7th day of January, 1865, deducting all payments bereitofore made to said Rowden as first sergeant in said regiment. ments heretofore made to said Rowden as first sergeant in said regiment.

day of August, 1863, to the 7th day of January, 1860, deducting all payments heretofore made to said Rowden as first sergeant in said regiment. The report was read, as follows:

That from the testimony on file it appears that Abednego B. Rowden, of Meigs County, Tennessee, was promoted from a first sergeant to a second lieutenancy in Company C. Eleventh Regiment Tennessee Cavatry, United States Army, on the 31st day of August, 1863, by the major of the regiment, and that he performed duty as such second lieutenant until February 2, 1864, when he was captured by the enemy, in the line of his duty, in Lee County, Virginia. Soon thereafter his commission was received at regimental headquarters, dated 21st March, 1864, to date 31st August, 1863, and signed by the governor of Tennessee, but, being in prison, he was not mustered until after his escape, to wit, on the 7th day of January, 1865, and that he has only been paid as a licutenant from the date of his muster, 7th January, 1865.

The committee recommend that he be paid the rate of pay of second lieutenant from the date of his appointment as such, 31st August, 1863, to the date of his muster as such, 7th January, 1865, deducting any and all payments already made him for that period in any lower rank as a soldier, and for that purpose recommend the passage of the accompanying bill for his relief.

The committee would further report that this claim was favorably reported upon by the Committee of Claims in the Forty-third Congress, and by the Committee on Military Affairs in the Forty-fifth Congress, passed the House unanimously, but failed in the Senate. It also passed the House in April, 1870.

Your committee think that, inasmuch as the officer was promoted by his superior regimental officer, did duty as such, and could not well receive his commission because of his active field service, he should be paid as a second lieutenant for the time he served as such, with deductions of all former payments.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. Chairman, I do not object to the bill, but I

Mr. WARNER. Mr. Chairman, I do not object to the bill, but I think it is competent now for the Adjutant-General under existing law to adjust the account of this man.

Mr. DIBRELL. Under a joint resolution of 1869 there is authority, for that resolution covers all such cases. But the Pay Department disregards it, and it requires a special act of Congress to put it right. The soldier served, and he ought to have his pay.

The bill was laid aside to be favorably reported to the House.

DR. JOHN BLANKENSHIP.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 735) for the relief of Dr. John Blankenship.

The bill, which was read, directs the proper accounting officers of the War Department to change the date of muster-out and discharge of Dr. John Blankenship, late assistant surgeon of the Third Regiment Tennessee Volunteers so as to make it bear date April 24, 1863, the date of his discharge; and that the said John Blankenship be paid the balance of his salary due him for such service up to April 24, 1863, deducting former payments.

The report was read, as follows:

The report was read, as follows:

That from the proof and the records it appears that said Blankenship was appointed assistant surgeon for said regiment 22th February, 1862. That on the 20th June, 1862, he was sent for medical supplies for his regiment in Kentucky, and was himself taken sick with pneumonia, and had a long spell of sickness; that he returned to his regiment (date not given) still in bad health. His discharge was recommended by the colonel of the regiment and approved by General Rosecrans, departmental commander. He was ordered to duty by the medical director 8th March, 1863. After his arrival a field board of examiners was ordered to examine and report upon his efficiency, &c. Instead of appearing before said board he tendered his unconditional resignation on the 14th April, 1863, which was approved and accepted on the 24th April, 1863. He had not been regularly mustered into the service; but on the 23d April, 1869, he was mustered in as assistant surgeon Third Tennessee Volunteers, to date from February 28, 1862, and on May 4, 1869, his discharge of April 24, 1863, was revoked, and he was mustered out and discharged, to date 26th June, 1862, and paid to that date.

Inasmuch as this officer's sickness was contracted in the discharge of his official duties, as he returned to his regiment in obedience to orders, was borne on the rolls of his regiment until 24th April, 1863, when his resignation was accepted, your committee think the Adjutant-General was not authorized to revoke the date of his muster-out, and that he is entitled to pay until his resignation was accepted. They therefore recommend the passage of said bill.

The bill was laid aside to be favorably reported to the House.

The bill was laid aside to be favorably reported to the House.

NEZ PERCÉS WAR.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 1320) for the relief of citizens of Montana who served with the United States troops in the war with the Nez Percés, and for the relief of the heirs of such as were killed in such service.

The bill, which was read, provides that each volunteer who joined the forces of the United States, in the Territory of Montana, during the war with the Nez Percé Indians, shall be paid $1 per day during the term of such service, from the time that he left his home until he was returned thereto, including all time spent in hospital under treatment by such as received wounds or other injuries in such

The second section provides that all persons who were wounded or disabled in such service, and the heirs of all who were killed in such service, shall be entitled to all the benefits of the pension laws, in the same manner and to the same extent as if they had been duly mustered into the regular or volunteer forces of the United States

The third section provides that all horses and arms lost in such service shall be paid for at their actual value, to be duly ascertained by the commanding officer of the district of Montana: provided no payment shall be made for such losses except upon the statement of the commanding officer of the United States troops, or such other officer of the regular Army as might be in control of the volunteers at the time of such loss, and such other proofs as may be required by the commanding officer and the United States quartermaster for the district of Montana, to establish the fact that such losses were made district of Montana, to establish the fact that such losses were made in the service of the United States.

in the service of the United States.

The report was read, as follows:

From the letter of Colonel John Gibbon, of the Seventh Infantry, which is herewith filed and asked to be made a part of this report, it appears that in the expedition against the Nez Percé Indians in Angust, 1877, thirty citizens of the Territory of Montana volunteered their services and served with the United States troops in that expedition; that five of the number were killed, four wounded, and twenty-one survived.

Your committee think, under the circumstances, that the services of these men were invaluable to Colonel Gibbon and his command, and that the amount allowed them, of $1$ per day, would not reach the amount they would have received had they been regular soldiers, entitled to clothing and other allowances.

A similar bill passed the House at the last Congress, went to the Senate and passed that body, but failed in the House on Senate amendments for want of time. Your committee unanimously recommend the passage of the bill.

HEADQUARTERS DISTRICT OF MONTANA, Fort Shaw, Montana Territory, September 5, 1877.

Sie: I have the honor to report that the following named citizens of Montana Territory accompanied me as volunteers in the late expedition against the Nez Percé Indians. Most of them were in the battle on the 9th, and remained faithfully with us till the last.

Those who were killed and wounded are marked in the margin.

I trust some provision may be made by law by which these parties may be placed on the same footing in regard to pay, allowances, pensions, &c., as is now provided for soldiers duly mustered into the service of the United States.

ASA WEEKS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 3784) to compensate Asa Weeks for his labor and expenses in perfecting torpedoes, torpedo machinery, and the art of torpedo warfare for the sole and exclusive benefit of the United States, and for other pur-

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. I desire to say, Mr. Chairman, in reference to this bill for the payment of Asa Weeks, that there are circumstances which induce me to request that it be laid over. It will be recollected by some gentlemen that at the last session of Congress an appropriation was made and put in the hands of the Secretary of the Navy to be expended by him in testing certain torpedoes and torpedo inventions then before the Department. One of the secretary of the Navy to be expended by him in testing certain torpedoes and torpedo inventions by Asa Weeks was for what is known as a local content of the secretary of the seconomic secretary of the secretary of the secretary of the secret torpedo inventions by Asa Weeks was for what is known as a loco-motive torpedo; that is, a torpedo that would go of its own force upon motive torpedo; that is, a torpedo that would go of its own force upon the surface of the water.

Mr. FINLEY. Is that the "alarm" torpedo?

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. No, sir. It never has been tested. It was agreed by the Secretary of the Navy that the test should be applied some time during the summer. In testing that invention it was found necessary to use a large machine which is at the Navy Department, but it was also ascertained that this machine was broken down and could not be used, and it has not been until within a month past that the Secretary of the Navy has ordered the necessary. month past that the Secretary of the Navy has ordered the necessary repairs upon that machine.

The experiment is now being carried on and will soon be perfected. The Committee on Naval Affairs are not prepared now to recommend what sum if anything should be paid this man, and will not be until this experiment has been tried. Therefore I ask the consideration of the bill be postponed and that it retain its place on the Calendar.

Mr. FINLEY. I object. I have no objection to the bill going to the foot of the Calendar, as I understand all bills will do that are passed

The CHAIRMAN. By unanimous consent the bill can be passed over, but nothing can be determined as to its place on the Calendar without the order of the House.

without the order of the House.

Mr. FINLEY. I desire to ask the Chair a question for information.

Did not the first bill that came up to-day go to the foot of the Calendar by virtue of being passed over?

The CHAIRMAN. It did not. Something to that effect was said, but that could not be done. This Committee of the Whole cannot make any such order under the rule.

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. I ask, then, that the bill be passed over for the present, and I understand from the Chair that it retains its place on the Calendar.

its place on the Calendar.

There being no objection, the bill was passed over.

MARTHA J. PORTER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2044) granting a pension to Martha J. Porter; reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions by Mr. Coffroth.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted &c. That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Martha J. Porter, widow of William M. Porter, late a captain in the One hundred and thritteth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay the said Martha J. Porter a pension at the rate of §20 per month, commencing from the date of the death of the said William M. Porter, deceased, and to continue during the widowhood of the said Martha J. Porter.

The report of the Committee on Invalid Pensions was read, as fol-

William H. Porter, the late husband of the claimant, was mustered into the military service of the United States as captain of Company A, One hundred and thritieth Regiment of Pennsylvania Volunteers, on the 11th day of August, 1862, and was honorably discharged from said service on the 21st day of May, 1863. He died at Carlisle, Pennsylvania, on the 27th day of July, 1873, of paralysis or serous apoplexy. The claimant, on the 20th day of September, 1875, filed her application for a pension. This application was rejected on the ground that "a case of apoplexy cannot be the result of a ten years' anteceding disease."

Hon. John Hays, who was a lieutenant in the same company with the deceased, and subsequently acting assistant adjutant-general of the brigade to which the company was attached, testifies that at the battle of Antietam, on the 17th day of September, 1862, Captain Porter got very wet in fording a creek in going into action and remained on the field all day and bivonacked on the field at night; that on the succeeding day Captain Porter was ill and remained so for some time; that in November or December, 1862, before the battle of Fredericksburgh, the captain was again subjected to great hardship and exposure; that on the morning after said battle, on rising from the ground, Captain Porter's one side was in a half-paralyzed condition—numb and without feeling—and that he was unfit for duty for several days thereafter; that after the battle of Chancellorsville, in which Captain Porter was engaged, he complained very severely and frequently of numbness in his left side from sleeping on the ground; that after the march from Aquia Creek the numbness continued and increased to such an extent that a needle or pin run into his fiesh caused no pain; that deponent on several occasions run a pin into the captain's fiesh and tested fully the numbness and want of feeling; that after Captain Porter's discharge deponent frequently talked with him, and he always spoke of the numbness and want of feeling in his side an color-bearer of the regiment; that he was very well acquainted with the captain both before his entering the service and after his return home and up to the time of his death; that when the captain entered the Army he was a sound and healthy man and appeared to remain so until after the battle of Antictan; that on the morning of the lith day of September, 1862—the day of that battle—in going into neition the regiment, in crossing Antictan Crock, were compelled to vade through, pletely saturated. The regiment was in action and under arms the whole of that day and bivouched on the field. The next day Captain Porter complained of being ill, and was so for several days, struggling along with the regiment to Harper's Ferry. About the latter part of November or beginning of December the regiment was removed from Aquia Creek to Falmouth, just before the battle of Fredericksburgh, during which time it rained heavily and the weather was very cold and I slept beside him; in the morning when we got up Captain Porter complained of numbress in his side; he remained with the regiment, however, until after the battle of fredericksburgh; on the night after that battle we were again compelled to sleep on the ground in the cold, mud, and rain; I slept with Captain Porter that the cold of the cold of bill.

Mr. BROWNE. I move to amend the bill by striking out all after the word "infantry."

Mr. WHITE. Let the bill be read as it will be if amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, éc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Martha J. Porter, widow of William M. Porter, late a captain in the One hundred and thirtieth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was laid aside to be reported favorably to the MARY A. SIMMONS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2852) granting a pension to Mary A. Simmons.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That there is hereby granted to Mary A. Simmons, widow of Naval Constructor Melvin Simmons, United States Navy, late of Kingston, Massachusetts, a pension at the rate of $30 per month, to commence from May 13, 1871; and the Secretary of the Interior is hereby directed to place her name upon the pension-rolls accordingly.

The report was read, as follows:

Mary Ann Simmons is the widow of Melvin Simmons, who enlisted and was mustered into the service of the United States June 11, 1864, and died at Charlestown, Massachusetts, May 13, 1871, of applexy. At the time of his death, his rank was equal to that of lieutenant-commander in the Navy of the United States. The application has been rejected by the Pension Commissioner on the ground that the evidence does not show that he died of disease contracted in the service. It appears that he served nearly seven years, and was a sound and healthy man when he enlisted; and we are of the opinion that the report of the surgeon, as appears by the record, shows that the proximate or immediate cause of his death was the excitement and fatigue incident to the service, and the record substantially so

In view of these facts, your committee report back the bill and recommend that Mr. BROWNE. I desire to offer an amendment to make this bill conform to the rule which seems to have been adopted by the House of Representatives. In order to do that it is necessary to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert substantially a new bill. I offer the following amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

"That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the limitations and provisions of the pension laws, the name of Mary A. Simmons, widow of Naval Constructor Melvin Simmons, United States Navy, late of Kingston, Massachusetts, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month from and after the passage of this act."

sion at the rate of $30 per month from and after the passage of this act."

I leave the rate in because I understand the pension laws fix no rate of pension for persons in the naval service of the rank held by the deceased husband of this claimant.

Mr. WARNER. Do I understand the gentleman to say the law furnishes no rate for officers of that rank?

Mr. BROWNE. That is my understanding.

Mr. WARNER. I move to amend the amendment by striking out all after the word "pension."

Mr. BROWNE. I do not from my own knowledge of the state of the law make the statement that the rate of pension is not provided by law in those cases; but I am so informed by my friend from New York [Mr. VAN AERNAM] who was formerly Commissioner of Pensions, and also by the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions. I am by them informed that unless the rate be fixed in this bill it will be wholly inoperative. I agree with the gentleman from Ohio in the main that these bills should name no rate, but that we should allow that to be fixed by the Commissioner of Pensions. But should allow that to be fixed by the Commissioner of Pensions. But if this act be nugatory without a statement of the amount it ought to be stated

Mr. COFFROTH. If the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio

Mr. COFFROTH. If the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Warner] prevails, it defeats the bill entirely. All the bills that are presented here of this class fix the amount of pension. To pass this bill without fixing the amount is to defeat its object entirely.

Mr. WHITE. I see, Mr. Chairman, it is stated in the report that this application was rejected by the Commissioner of Pensions because, as the report undertakes to say, the surgeon thought and reported that the disability was not contracted in the line of duty. Now that is a question of fact, and that being so I am not willing to override the decision of the Commissioner. The application is for a certain allowance as a pension for the widow of a person who held a certain rank, and now Congress is asked to act as a court of review, supervising the action of the Commissioner in refusing the pension claim.

I think the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Warnen] is all right. It merely brings the bill under the provisions of the general laws we are passing on this subject.

Mr. WARNER. I will modify my amendment so as to strike out after the word "pension" the words "at the rate of $30 per month."

Mr. BROWNE. How will the amendment then read?

The Clerk read as follows:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the limitations and provisions of the pension laws, the name of Mary A. Simmons, widow of Naval Constructor Melvin Simmons, United States Navy, late of Charlestown, Massachusetts, and to grant her a pension from and after the passage of this act.

Mr. COFFROTH. I have here the pension law, which I will read for the benefit of my colleague, [Mr. White,] being section 4695 of the Revised Statutes:

The pension for total disability shall be as follows, namely: for lieutenant-colonel and all officers of higher rank in the military service and in the Marine Corps, and for captain, and all officers of higher rank, commander, surgeon, paymaster, and chief engineer, respectively ranking with commander by law, lieutenant commanding and master commanding, in the naval service, $30 per month.

Gentlemen will find by reference to the law that the words "naval constructor" are not included in this section. Therefore the rate of pension should be fixed in this bill in order that it may be of any advantage to this applicant.

Mr. WHITE. I hold in my hand the report of the committee in this case. It states this:

Mary Ann Simmons is the widow of Melvin Simmons, who enlisted and was mustered into the service of the United States June 11, 1864, and died at Charlestown, Massachusetts, May 13, 1871, of apoplexy. At the time of his death his rank was equal to that of lieutenant-commander in the Navy of the United States. The application has been rejected by the Pension Commissioner on the ground that the evidence does not show that he died of disease contracted in the service.

The report, therefore, is predicated upon the fact that this class of officers are entitled to receive pensions. It they are not, then I am not willing to vote for this bill. If this person was merely a naval constructor he stood upon the same footing as a contract surgeon in the Army. If they are to receive pensions there should be a general law upon the subject. I think this is an argument in favor of the amendment offered by my friend from Ohio, [Mr. WARNER,] which I hope will be adopted.

The question was taken upon the amendment of Mr. WARNER, and it was agreed to, upon a division—ayes 39, noes 17; no further count being called for.

The amendment, as amended, was then adopted; and the bill, as amended, was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

DENNIS M'GINNIS.

The next busniess on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 280) granting a pension to Dennis McGinnis, reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions by Mr. Coffrotti.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, de., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Dennis McGinnis, formerly a private in Company D of the One hundred and seventieth Regiment of New York Volunteers.

The report was read, as follows:

of the pension laws, the name of Dennis McGinnis, formerly a private in Company D of the One hundred and seventisth Regiment of New York Volunteers.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 280) granting a pension to Dennis McGinnis, have had the same under consideration, and beg leave to submit the following report:

The committee, after considering the evidence, see no reason to alter the report presented to the second session of the Forty-fifth Congress, and therefore adopt the same, as follows:

"That the said Dennis McGinnis was a private in Company D, One hundred and seventieth New York Volunteers; enlisted September 2, 1862, to serve three years in the war for the Union, and was homerably discharged July 15, 1865, after the close of the war; that he filed an application for a pension October 30, 1874, for disability, which he alleges arose as follows:

"That while in the service aforesaid, and in the line of his duty, near Patrick Station, Virginia, in December, 1864, or January, 1865, while building a corduroy road, he was thrown from a wagon onto a stump by the sudden starting of a team, and his right hip was badly injured by the fall, by reason of which he was laid up for several days, and was treated in his tent by Surgeon Olmstead, of said regiment; that his hip has troubled him ever since, and is much wasted in size, and at times very painful, and he is greatly disabled by it; and the same fall injured his back.

"At the time of this injury he was detailed and acting as teamster, and none of his own officers were present; that the surgeon who treated him for the injury is dead; that he has advertised and tried at considerable expense to find the officer who had charge of the detail, but cannot; that he was not sent to hospital, and no record of his injury or treatment can be found; that his family physician, who knew him intimately before and at the time of his endistment as well as since his discharge; that before his enistment

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BROWNE. I move that the committee now rise.
Mr. BRIGHT. Ob, no; let us work until four o'clock.
Mr. BROWNE. Very well; I will withdraw the motion.
Mr. OSCAR TURNER. I renew the motion that the committee

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Sparks reported that the Committee of the Whole House had had under consideration the Private Calendar and had directed him to report sundry bills to the House, some with and some without amendment.

The SPEAKER. The bills reported without amendment will first be considered.

CHARLES W. ABBOT AND W. W. BARRY.

The first bill reported from the Committee of the Whole without amendment was the bill (H. R. No. 2828) for the relief of Charles W. Abbot and W. W. Barry.

The question was upon ordering the bill to be engrossed and read

Mr. MORSE. There is a Senate bill substantially the same as this, and I ask consent that it be considered now instead of the House bill reported from the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BLOUNT. Does the gentleman say that it is the same bill as this in substance?

Mr. MORSE. It is.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is advised that the Senate bill to which the gentleman refers is now before the Committee on Naval Affairs of this House. Mr. MORSE.

The SPEAKER. The proper motion, then, is that the Committee on Naval Affairs be discharged from the further consideration of the Senate bill, and that the same be now considered by the House.

Mr. MORSE. I am authorized to make that motion.

There being no objection, the motion was agreed to.
The House accordingly proceeded to the consideration of Senate bill No. 533, for the relief of Charles W. Abbot, a pay director, and W.
W. Barry, a passed assistant paymaster in the United States Navy.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MORSE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.
The House bill No. 2828 was laid on the table.

BILLS PASSED.

The following bills reported from the Committee of the Whole without amendment were then taken up and ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, they were accordingly read the third time, and passed:

A bill (H. R. No. 1729) for the payment of certain Indian war bonds of the State of California;

A bill (H. R. No. 2437) for the relief of several persons impressed into the United States naval service;

A bill (H. R. No. 3782) for the relief of John H. Shugart and Robert

F. Shugart;

A bill (H. R. No. 706) for the relief of A. B. Rowden;
A bill (H. R. No. 735) for the relief of Dr. John Blankenship;
A bill (H. R. No. 1320) for the relief of citizens of Montana who served with the United States troops in the war with the Nez Percés and for the relief of the heirs of such as were killed in such service; and

A bill (H. R. No. 280) granting a pension to Dennis McGinnis.

JOHN H. W. RILEY.

The SPEAKER. The bill reported from the Committee of the Whole with amendments will now be considered.

The bill (H. R. No. 2503) for the relief of John H. W. Riley, of California, was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $392.40 to John H. W. Riley, of San Francisco, California, the same to be in full compensation for services rendered the United States as phonographic reporter during the investigation into the claim of one Charles Murphy for extra compensation for excavating for dry-dock at the Mare Island

The amendment reported from the Committee of the Whole was to strike out "$82.40" and insert "$50."

The question was upon concurring in the amendment reported from the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. WHITE. I am opposed to this amendment; I do not want the Government to pay interest.

Mr. PAGE. There is no interest in this.

Mr. WHITE. The fifty dollars is for interest.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can call for a division on agreeing to the amendment reported from the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. WHITE. If this amendment is voted down, can I move to strike out "$82.40" in the original bill? [After a pause.] However, I will let the bill go with a protest against paying interest.

The amendment of the Committee of the Whole was then concurred in.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third

The question was upon the passage of the bill, and was taken; but before the result was announced,

Mr. BREWER said: Will the Chair state what is the bill?
The SPEAKER. It is a bill for the relief of John H. W. Riley, reorted from the Committee on Military Affairs by the gentleman from Michigan himself, [Mr. Brewer.]
Mr. PAGE. It is a bill to pay a man as short-hand writer at Mare Island.

Mr. BREWER. This man was employed by the Navy Department, and his account is approved by Admiral Rodgers, who was in charge of the navy-yard at the time the service was rendered, and it has also been approved by the Secretary of the Navy. This man has been waiting for his pay from 1876 or 1877, and I see no reason why this bill should not pass any more than any bill to pay for services renored the Government.

Mr. ATHERTON. Allow me a suggestion. In this case the committee report that the person is entitled to $300 for his services, and they also report that they have allowed him $50 additional by reason of the delay in the payment of this debt. I hold it to be an established principle that the Government does not pay interest on a claim. We object to this bill, not because we do not want this man to receive any part but because the bill makes an additional allowance for payment, but because the bill makes an additional allowance for interest. If the extra $50 be struck out, I am willing to vote for the bill; and I believe that all these other gentlemen who have just voted against it will vote for it.

Mr. WHITE, Let the $50 go out by unanimous consent.

Mr. ATHERTON. Very well; let that be done.

Mr. BLOUNT. How does the gentleman know that the bill in-

Mr. ATHERTON. It is not included in terms; but the committee in their report say that they have allowed this man $50 more than they would have allowed him because payment has been delayed for

Are wears.

Mr. PAGE. I think there will be no objection to striking out the $50.

Mr. WHITE. I ask unanimous consent that the bill be so amended.

Mr. FINLEY. If this is a just debt, and was due two years ago, then the Government ought to pay interest on it.

Mr. ATHERTON. If the principle were established that the Government should pay interest on all money the payment of which is delayed, I would agree to do it in this case.

Mr. FINLEY. When the Government owes a debt which it does not pay it seems to me it is just as much bound to pay interest as an individual would be.

Mr. ATHERTON. That principle has never been conceded by the practice of the Government.

Mr. BREWER. I will consent to the amendment suggested rather than imperil the bill.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection the bill will be so amended as to make the amount of the appropriation $300.

There was no objection, and the bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

The following bills reported from the Committee of the Whole with amendments were taken up, the amendments agreed to, and the bills, as amended, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed:

A bill (H. R. No. 2044) granting a pension to Martha J. Porter; and

A bill (H. R. No. 2852) granting a pension to Mary A. Simmons.

COLLECTION DISTRICTS IN CALIFORNIA.

On motion of Mr. PACHECO, by unanimous consent, the bill (S. No. 1271) to amend sections 2582, 2583, 2607, and 2684 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to the collection districts of California, was taken from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted— To Mr. Martin, of North Carolina, for ten days, on account of important business;

To Mr. Scales for five days, on account of death in his family; To Mr. Ryon, of Pennsylvania, until Friday next, on account of important business;

To Mr. URNER until Tuesday next, on account of important busi-

To Mr. Talbott for one day; To Mr. McMahon until Wednesday next, on account of sickness in his family; and

To Mr. NEWBERRY for two weeks, on account of important business.

APPROPRIATION FOR NATIONAL MUSEUM.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution, transmitting a recommendation of the Board of Regents of said Institution for an appropriation of $25,000 for the flooring of the main hall of the National Museum; which was referred to the Committee on Appropri-

M. M. HERR.

Mr. FINLEY, by unanimous consent, introduced a joint resolution H. R. No. 343) to pay M. M. Herr for services as messenger to the Sergeant-at-Arms; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Accounts, and ordered to be printed.

IMPROVEMENT OF LYNN HARBOR.

Mr. BOWMAN, by unanimous consent, presented the petition of the city of Lynn, in Massachusetts, for the improvement of Lynn Harbor; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

YACHT STEPHEN D. BARNES.

Mr. O'NEILL, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 6539) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to change the name of the yacht Stephen D. Barnes, of Philadelphia; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

ADJOURNMENT OVER.

Mr. BLOUNT. I move that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourns to meet on Monday next.

Mr. DIBRELL. I move as an amendment that the session to-morrow be for debate on the electoral count.

Mr. SIMONTON. I move the House do now adjourn.
Mr. FINLEY. I understand that when the House adjourns it adjourns to meet to-morrow for debate on the electoral bill.

The SPEAKER. That cannot be received as an amendment to an adjournment-over resolution. If the motion to adjourn over be voted down, then the gentleman can ask for unanimous consent that there be a meeting to-morrow for debate. It is a change of the order of business for to-morrow's session, if there be one, and would require unanimous consent.

Mr. MITCHELL. I object to any such unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. The question first recurs on the motion made by the gentleman from Georgia, to adjourn over until Monday next.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 98, noes 46.

Mr. SIMONTON. No quorum has voted.

The SPEAKER ordered tellers, and appointed Mr. BLOUNT and Mr.

Mr. CONGER. I see gentlemen present who have not voted. Now is there not some way to compel those present to vote when they have not voted? [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan knows better on that point than even the Chair does.

Mr. SPRINGER. I move the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The motion to adjourn over takes precedence of the motion to adjourn. Besides, the House is dividing.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 107, noes 32.

Mr. FINLEY. I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. SPRINGER. I move the House adjourn.

Mr. FINLEY. I withdraw the demand for the yeas and nays.

Mr. BLOUNT. I renew the demand for the yeas and nays on the motion to adjourn over.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative-yeas 106, nays 69, not voting 115; as follows:

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and other papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows, viz:

By Mr. BRIGHAM: The petition of John J. Coffey and B. R. Lewis, for compensation for services rendered as employés of the consulate-general of the United States at Shanghai, China—to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. COOK: A bill for the improvement of the navigation of Ocmulgee River, in the State of Georgia—to the Committee on Com-Ocmulgee River, in the State of Georgia—to the Committee on Commerce.

Also, a bill for the continuation of the improvement of navigation of the Oconee River, in the State of Georgia—to the same committee. Also, a bill for continuing the improvement of the navigation of the Flint River, in the State of Georgia—to the same committee. By Mr. DUNNELL: The petition of Zeena Banker and 28 others, citizens of Minnesota, that all soldiers discharged for disease be granted the same bounty as those discharged on account of wounds—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, the petition of George W. Mills and 38 others, citizens of Houston, Minnesota, of similar import—to the same committee.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in compliance with a suggestion of the Committee on Appropriations, communications from Norman Wiard in relation to the solution of the ordnance problem, &c.; which, on motion of Mr. MORGAN, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, in pursuance of the requirements of the eighth section of the act of 22d of July, 1854, the reports of the surveyorgeneral of New Mexico Territory on sundry private land claims; which was referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting papers pertaining to the estimates of the District of Columbia, and matters connected therewith; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of State, transmitting, in compliance with the requirements of section 208 of the Revised Statutes, a statement of such fees as have been collected, accounted for, and reported by the various diplomatic and consular officers of the United States during the year ending December 31, 1879, together with the rates or tariffs of fees, and a full list of consular officers in office in December, 1879; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, transmitting documents from the Commissioner of Agriculture, in reply to Senate resolution of the 7th instant, relating to the contagious diseases of cattle; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture, and ordered to be printed.

LIST OF PRIVATE CLAIMS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter of the Secretary of the Senate, communicating, in obedience to the resolution of the Senate of June 16, 1880, an alphabetical list of all private claims before the Senate with the action of the Senate thereon since the 3d day of March, 1867; which was referred to the Committee on Printing.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Society of Cincinnati, in the State of Rhode Island and Providence Plantation, inclosing resolutions adopted at the annual meeting of that society, favoring the passage of an act authorizing the Presi-dent of the United States to invite the Government of the French Republic to send a suitable representation from the French army and navy to the centennial celebration at Yorktown, that a suitable detachment of the United States Army be sent there, and that a suitable sum be appropriated therefor; which was referred to the Committee on the Library.

Mr. INGALLS presented the petition of John McKee and others, citizens of Leavenworth, Kansas, praying for the passage of the bill (S. No. 1852) granting a pension to Francis Smith; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented the petitions of William Grinder and Olivia Van Riswick, of Washington, District of Columbia, praying for the adjudication and payment of damages done their property by order of the District commissioners; which were referred to the Committee on the

TREASURY ACCOUNTS.

Mr. WHYTE. I am instructed by the Committee on Printing to report back the letter of the Treasurer of the United State in regard to certain accounts which, under sections of the Revised Statutes, are reported and furnished to the Senate, and which letter was submitted to the Committee on Printing, to say that they have examined the papers, and have concluded that there is no necessity for their printing, and therefore ask leave to be discharged from the further consideration of the matter.

The report was agreed to.

PRESIDENT'S ANNUAL MESSAGE.

Mr. WHYTE. I am further instructed by the same committee toreport back the resolution in regard to printing 3,000 additional copies of the President's Message, for the use of the Senate, with a recommendation that it pass; and I ask for its immediate consideration.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That 3,000 additional copies of the President's Message, without the accompanying documents, be printed for the use of the Senate.

CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Mr. WHYTE. I am also instructed by the same committee to report back, with a favorable recommendation, House joint resolution No. 338, directing one copy of the Congressional Record to be sent to each of our legations abroad, without amendment. I ask for the immediate consideration of that joint resolution.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, Proceeded to consider the joint resolution. It directs the Public Printer to forward, free of charge, one copy of the daily CONGRESSIONAL RECORD to each of our legations abroad, commencing at the beginning of this session and continuing each day until the 4th day of March, 1881.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the Vice-President:

A bill (S. No. 1583) to change the name of the schooner-yacht Nettie to Nokomis; and

A bill (H. R. No. 3191) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to dispose of a part of the Fort Dodge military reservation to actual settlers under the provisions of the homestead laws, and for other purposes.

PRINTING OF A BILL.

Mr. WITHERS. I am notified by the clerk in charge of the document-room that the copies of the bill (S. No. 496) providing for the examination and adjudication of pension claims have been exhausted.

Many applications are made both to the Committee on Pensions and additional copies of it for the use of the Senate.

The order was agreed to, as follows:

Ordered. That the bill (S. No. 496) providing for the examination and adjudication of pension claims, as reported March 25, 1880, by Senator Withers, with an amendment, be reprinted with the usual number of copies.

SAINT JEROME'S RIVER, MARYLAND.

Mr. WHYTE submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved. That the Secretary of War be requested to furnish to the Senate, at the earliest practicable period, an estimate of the cost of deepening the entrance to Saint Jerome's River, in Maryland, so as to make it an available harbor.

ELECTRIC LIGHT FOR CAPITOL.

Mr. HARRIS submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds be, and hereby is, instructed to investigate the method and plans of the Northern Electric Light Company for lighting the Capitel and adjacent grounds by electric lights, and report by bill or otherwise.

TRICHINÆ IN SWINE.

Mr. KIRKWOOD submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed to furnish the Senate with copies of any documents in the possession of that Department touching trichine in swine, and the restrictions upon our trade with foreign countries in consequence of this disease.

AGRICULTURAL REPORT FOR 1879.

Mr. JOHNSTON submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved. That the Public Printer be directed to inform the Senate why the Agricultural Report for the year 1879 is not ready for distribution.

COMMITTEE SERVICE.

Mr. HAMLIN. I rise for the purpose of asking the Senate to excuse me from further service upon the Select Committee to examine the several branches of the Civil Service. I make that request because I am already connected with three other committees, two of which are pretty hard-working committees, and I think I am assigned to as are pretty hard-working committees, and I think I am assigned to as much duty as is my proportion. I therefore ask the Senate to excuse me from further service on the committee I have named.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Maine asks to be excused from further service upon the Committee to examine the several branches of the Civil Service. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Senator from Maine is excused.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask leave of the Senate for the sub-committee of the Committee on the District of Columbia, having in charge the District code, to sit during the sessions of the Senate, the sub-committee being composed of the Senator from Maryland, [Mr. Whyte,] the Senator from Minnesota, [Mr. McMillan,] and myself.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair hears no objection.

JAMES H. CARPENTER.

Mr. BURNSIDE. At the last session of Congress a bill (S. No. 129) authorizing the restoration of the name of James H. Carpenter, late authorizing the restoration of the name of James H. Carpenter, late captain Seventeenth United States Infantry, to the rolls of the Army, and providing that he be placed on the list of retired officers, was before the Committee on Military Affairs and reported upon unfavorably and indefinitely postponed. I now present new evidence in the case. I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was indefinitely postponed, and that it be, with the papers on the files in relation to this case, recommitted to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

HENRY O. WAGGONER.

Mr. TELLER. At the last session of Congress I introduced a bill (S. No. 1834) to pay the creditors of the late Henry O. Waggoner, late consular clerk at Lyons, France, which was read twice but not referred. I move that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The motion was agreed to.

SIGNAL CORPS.

Mr. VEST. I offer the following resolution, and ask for its immediate consideration:

Resolved. That the special Committee to examine the several branches of the Civil Service be instructed to inquire into the propriety of such legislation by Congress as may require the filling of all vacancies in the Signal Corps above the rank of sergeant by promotion from said corps or by the appointment to such vacancies of officers from the Navy of the United States; and that said committee report by bill or otherwise.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It rather strikes me, as that is a branch of Army affairs, that the direction ought to be to the Committee on Military Affairs. The Signal Service is a mere branch of the Army establishment, if I correctly understand it. I move to amend the resolution, if agreeable to the mover, so as to make it a direction to the Com-if agreeable to the mover, so as to make it a direction to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. VEST. I object to the reference to the Committee on Military Affairs, and I will state the reasons if the Senator from Vermont will give me his attention for a moment. It is true that the appointment of the principal officer of the Signal Corps has been made from the Army, but under no statute that I know of. I believe that what is called the weather bureau was established in 1870, at which time General Myer was appointed, but it has not even the sanctity of custom. The very object I have in view in this resolution is, if possible, to prevent appointments from the Army alone; at any rate, that the committee shall inquire into the expediency of confining these appointments in the case of officers above the rank of sergeant in the Signal Corps to promotions from sergeauts or by selections from officers of the Navy.

I desire to state further that I have no purpose whatever to interfere in the slightest degree with the appointment already made and now pending before the Senate. This is not the time to discuss that. It is the practice of taking the principal officer of this corps from the It is the practice of taking the principal officer of this corps from the Army to which I object; and my reason is that the Army officers are neither by education nor by their habits of life (about which I say nothing) peculiarly adapted to this service. On the contrary, naval officers, from their education and from their duties, are peculiarly the officers of the Government to whom this duty should be assigned. It is made the duty, I believe, of every naval officer to take observations in regard to the weather once in every two hours, whether in port or upon the ocean; and it is well known that a sailor without this knowledge, acquired from practice and acquired from education, is unfit for his professional duties. is unfit for his professional duties.

For this reason, in my judgment, an inquiry at least ought to be made why there should be confided to officers of the Army the prin-cipal offices of the Signal Corps. I ask the reference of the resolution to the Select Committee to examine the several branches of the Civil Service because by the resolution organizing that committee it is made their duty to examine the different branches of the civil is made their duty to examine the different branches of the civil service with a view of increasing their efficiency. This is a branch of the civil service, and if its efficiency is to be increased by legislation such as I contemplate, then it seems to me peculiarly within the purview of this committee to make the examination.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think probably, considering the importance of it, the resolution had better go over, but before it does I should like to say that I think the Senator from Missouri is mistaken in supposing that the present Signal Service is without authority of law.

Mr. VEST. I did not state that.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I then am glad to have misunderstood the Senator. The present Signal Service is a regularly constituted lawful branch of the military establishment of the United States. In 1870, if that was the year, there was added to its duties as a merely military signal service the duty of making weather reports, so that the tary signal service the duty of making weather reports, so that the weather part is a duty that is attached to this existing military establishment. It being an existing military establishment, I am unable to perceive how the President of the United States and the Senate could, in the present state of the law, appoint anybody but a military officer to perform that service, because the law did not create a new establishment; it took an existing Army establishment and imposed upon its officers, organized by regulation in a certain way, these additional duties, which in time of peace it was supposed they could perform without any inconvenience to their other duties, in keeping up the signal military service of the Army.

Therefore I do not see how it is possible for the President and the Senate to import a civilian into the office, as the law now is. Perhaps it ought to be changed; possibly the whole of it ought to be made a civil weather establishment of some kind under the perturbate of Agriculture or Commerce or whatever it might be. I express ment of Agriculture or Commerce or whatever it might be; I express no opinion about that; but as it now exists, the inquiry is really one whether the military establishment should be relieved of this duty. whether the military establishment should be relieved of this duty. It appeared to me that the wise and natural thing would be to direct the Military Committee to make that inquiry. Ido not happen to remember who the gentlemen either of the Military Committee or of the Civil Service Committee are, and therefore I did not make my suggestions of amendment upon the ground that the gentlemen of one committee would look more favorably one way or the other than the gentlemen of another committee, but simply on the idea that if there is any value in having separate committees at all in this body, that was the simple and natural committee to consider whether the Army ought to be relieved of this quasi-military duty that they are now performing; that was all.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution goes over.

Mr. THURMAN. Before it goes over I wish to say one word.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I withdraw the objection, sir.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The objection is withdrawn.

Mr. THURMAN. The reasons why these meteorological observations are confided to the Signal Service branch of the Army are very tions are confided to the Signal Service branch of the Army are very apparent. The observations taken by what has been called the weather bureau are taken on land mainly. They are taken all over the United States. They are taken at every military post of the United States, besides at other places designated for that purpose, and to which a Signal Service sergeant is sent to make these observa-tions. Therefore, as they are taken on land and taken at all the mili-itary posts, it was thought right that this service should be performed by the Signal Service branch of the Army of the United States. I do not say whether the service might or might not be improved by employing naval officers to a certain extent; but of one thing I am very certain, that you cannot dispense with the use of the Army officers.

am very certain, that you cannot dispense with the use of the Army officers or Army soldiers in the discharge of this duty. If your service is to be worth anything, you must continue to make these observations and have these reports from all the military posts upon the continent, or at least within our jurisdiction; and now it is well known that owing to an arrangement between us and the Dominion government of Canada the reports are received from Canada and our reports are sent to Canada. Therefore, the proposition to take the bureau entirely from the Army and give it to the Navy seems to me to be not tenable. At the same time I do not deny but that naval officers as well as Army officers might be employed in the service.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Vermont withdraw his objection conditionally?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes, sir, I withdraw it conditionally, for the time

Mr. DAWES. The present duties of the Signal Service originated in this way: Pending an appropriation bill in the other branch of Congress in 1870 (I think that was the year) an appropriation of $15,000 was added to the bill to enable the Army officer having $15,000 was added to the bill to enable the Army officer having charge of the ordinary military signal service to try experiments in the matter of weather reports; out of that grew the present Signal Service, as it is understood in the country, it growing by additions from session to session of increased appropriations, by special enlargement of the duties, having the whole matter under the charge of the War Department, and the War Department prescribing the duties of the officers, until some $300,000 are expended in that way under the direction of the War Department, with very signal and beneficial results, I think, to the country. But last year the chief in charge of that service was made a brigadier-general of the Army, and it was recognized in the law as a distinct bureau. That is the history of it at the present time. It has grown to such dimensions that it would be very wise, I think, to have some revision of its standing in the department, and some regulation by law as to the department of the Government to which it shall be confided. I am indifferent myself what committee looks into it, but it does seem to me very wise that Congress should take up this, which has grown into so great and so useful a service, and regulate it by law, and give it a permanent standing somewhere, in some part of the executive departments of

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, I have no disposition to enter into a discussion of this matter. It is a subject of the very greatest importance, especially to the agricultural States. What has been said by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. THURMAN] in regard to this being a by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. THURMAN] in regard to this being a military establishment is to a very great extent true. When the signal stations known as those of the weather burean were first established, in 1870, in remote portions of the Territories, liable to attack from the Indians, it was necessary that the Army should be present in some force in order to protect them. In order to meet those exigencies sergeants were appointed, and provisions in analogy to the will tark service of the country service much by decrease until it has military service of the country sprang up by degrees, until it has come to be recognized as a portion of the military establishment of the country.

I repeat that there is no reason in favor and there are many reasons against this being made a portion of the military establishment of the United States. I assert again that it is peculiarly and professionally a matter of knowledge to the sailor and to the naval officer to make observations in regard to the weather. It is not a portion of the duty of any military man. There are two classes in this country particularly connected with the wind and with the weather, and those two classes are agriculturists and sailors. The Signal Corps is absolutely essential to commerce and to agriculture. The State that I have the honor in part to represent is peculiarly interested, because we have suffered of late, in the most distressing and terrible manner, from cyclones, which have destroyed a vast amount of property, and I am at this moment in receipt of intelligence from my State to the effect that another of these great natural calamities has come upon

A very few words more, Mr. President. There is another point in defense of my proposition that the committee should at least examine this subject with a view to the appointment of naval officers. The whole signal-service system of this country originated with the Navy, and not with the Army. The man who commenced it, in whose brain it first had existence, was a distinguished officer of the American Navy, Lieutenant M. F. Maury. In 1853 he instigated and brought about by his own individual exertion the assembling of a convention of scientists of the whole world at Brussels to take into consideration a signal-service system for the world at large. In 1857 I well recollect that Lieutenant Maury passed through the Western and Southern States delivering lectures at his own individual expense to the southern and western people, urging upon them that they urge their members of Congress to establish a signal-service observation system for the Southern and Western States. If that had been done, sir, millions of dollars would have been saved to the agricultural interests of this country. This same man by his signal-service system upon the ocean, by shortening the days of transit by means of his charts of the waves and of the winds, saved to the commerce of the world from forty to sixty million dollars annually; and he sought to put the same system into existence within the landed domain of the United States.

To-day agriculture is the largest interest in this country. A failure of one single crop affects this country more than all the tariffs, all the financial systems, all the legislation of this Government, and the Signal Service to-day is a most important branch of the civil service of the United States.

Now, sir, I propose to refer this resolution to the Committee to examine the several branches of the Civil Service, not especially to take the entire subject away from the Army, but to systematize and organize a system which will open to appointment within the Signal Corps the ranks of the Navy, and the ranks also of civil life. At any rate, I propose, if legislation can do it, so far as I am concerned, to say to the President of the United States that he is at liberty to go into the Navy for a chief officer and other officers of the Signal Corps; that he may also go into the ranks of civil life if he sees proper; but there is no reason—and I challenge criticism—why in his appoint-ments he should be confined to the Army alone. I ask the reference of the resolution to the Committee to examine the several branches of the regolution to the Committee to examine the several branches of the Civil Service.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think if Senators have heard my honorable friend from Missouri, they will see that, on the strength of his own argument, the Military Committee is the one to which properly this inquiry should go. The Civil Service Committee is instructed to inquire into all the branches of the civil service. If this is a branch of the civil service, that committee has the jurisdiction now, and the resolution is unnecessary, because it is to be presumed that committee will do its duty and inquire into all the branches of the civil service; but confessedly, this is now a branch of the military estables. service; but, confessedly, this is now a branch of the military establishment and the military service of the United States, although its chief benefit at this present time is to the civil establishment undoubtedly, to the farmer and to the merchant and to the ship-owner, and so on. Just so is the river and harbor improvement matter, which is a part of the war establishment; and the War Department always has control of the officers and disburses the Department always has control of the officers and disburses the money; and so with a great many other things that the military department has the charge of, although they really relate to civil affairs. Therefore it appeared to me to be plain that the Military Committee was the proper committee to consider this question; and I must assume that they are not at all averse to a consideration of it, and that they will do the subject justice. That is all my point. I am not saying that I disagree with the Senator as to the propriety of appointing naval gentlemen into the service; I do not know anything about that; I have not thought of it; but my simple proposition is, that the Senate, if it cares anything about the regular distribution of the service of the Senate, ought to direct the Military Committee to inquire into this, inasmuch as it is at present a part of the military service.

Mr. MAXEY. Mr. President, the Signal Corps has grown to be an establishment of very great importance not only to the military branch. establishment of very great importance not only to the military branch of the Government but to the civil branches and to the community generally. There is established a military telegraph line from Denison, Texas, running entirely around the frontier of that State, down to Brownsville, near the mouth of the Rio Grande. That military telegraph line is under the control of the Signal Corps, is of great service in Army operations, and a great convenience to the people. General Myer was appointed colonel of the Signal Corps on the 28th day of July, 1865, and since that time there have been appointed four second lieutenants of that corps. The Signal Corps has been borne on the Army, and is important to the Army, not only because of the military telegraph controlled by it, but its weather reports telegraphed over the lines; is important in sending out scouts, &c. That it is of the lines; is important in sending out scouts, &c. That it is of great importance in its weather information to the agricultural interests is manifest to all who have watched its operations. I have reason to believe and do believe that the duties in that regard would be very much enlarged and its benefits greatly extended if the views of the acting head of the Signal Corps, General Drum, the accomplished Adjutant-General of the Army, are carried out. In the cotton-growing States cotton is by far the most important agricultural interest that we have, and no crop ever is more affected by the weather than that crop. There is a movement on foot now (and the information is sought all through the South) to ascertain the best methods of securing the benefits of the Signal Service Bureau in aid of the cotton crop. Why interrupt the organization which has without question, so far as I know, been under the control of the War Department?

What reason there may be for transferring this great service, which is mainly upon the land, to the Navy, I am wholly unable to perceive. It has been under the War Department from its foundation. Everything connected with the Signal Bureau which has come to the Senate, since I have been here at least, has been referred to the Committee on Military Affairs. A portion of these lieutenants (and I am not sure but all of them) who have been promoted in the Signal Corps have been placed there since I came to the Senate in 1875, and every one of those nominations was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and now it is for the first time that we hear that the bureau ought to be moved from the Army somewhere else. The reason for it I am wholly unable to perceive, and the fact showing that it is regarded as a part of the Army and has been heretofore regarded properly as part of the Army is that all nominations in respect to it go to the Military Committee, and the nomination of General Myer from colonel to brigadier-general was referred without objection to the Committee on Military Affairs at, I believe, the last session.

At all the important points along that military telegraph line signals and the committee of the comm nal stations also are located. In view of this great service, which necessarily and properly comes under the Army, I am unable to see why that bureau should be taken from the Army and placed elsewhere. The very great interest which the State I have the honor in part to represent has in this question gave occasion for saying what I have said.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I will entirely withdraw the objection to the present consideration of the resolution. It has been so much discussed that it may as well be disposed of now.

Mr. THURMAN. I have an amendment to offer, which I understand the mover of the resolution is willing to accept. I ask my friend from Vermont to let it come in by withdrawing his amend-

Mr. EDMUNDS. Will the Senator state it?
Mr. THURMAN. I had not read this resolution when I submitted a few observations on it to the Senate. On reading it I find that it is much broader than I had supposed it to be. We know what the Signal Service is. It consists of two branches. One is a proper military signal service which has nothing in the world to do with the weather, but is what we all understand by a military signal service, giving notice of the movements of the enemy or of the movements of your notice of the movements of the enemy or of the movements of your own troops, and directing those movements. That has nothing to do with the weather, and existed long before the duties with respect to weather were devolved on that service.

Now, this resolution embraces the whole Signal Service, and contemplates that all officers in that Signal Service hereafter appointed shall be appointed from the Navy. That is manifestly wrong in regard to the purely military duties of the present service.

Mr. VEST. Appointments or promotions.

Mr. THURMAN. Promotions are from sergeants, thus excluding all educated officers. Some of the most meritorious men in the Army of the United States belong to the Signal Service, and have made it their especial study for years. Of course, that cannot be contemplated by the mover of the resolution, I think; and therefore, in order to exclude that idea and also to exclude the idea of depriving Army to exclude that idea and also to exclude the idea of depriving Army officers of any chance of promotion in this service, I move to insert after the word "the," in the last line but one, the words "Army or," so as to read, "or by the appointment to such vacancies of officers from the Army or Navy of the United States." It reads now, "or by the appointment to such vacancies of officers from the Army or Navy acancies of officers of the Navy," restricting it to the Navy alone. I want to have it read, "Army or Navy." I move that amendment, and I understand my friend from Missouri to be willing to execut it. be willing to accept it.

Mr. VEST. I accept the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment is accepted. The question now is on the references. The Senator from Missouri moves that the resolution be referred to the Committee to examine the several branches of the Civil Service. The Senator from Vermont moves that it be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs. Under the rules, the question is first on the motion proposed by the Senator from Mis-

Mr. HOAR. Is the motion to refer the resolution, or is it a motion to amend the order to the committee to inquire by instructing another committee to make the inquiry?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read, in order that it may be understood.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Special Committee to examine the several branches of the Civil Service be instructed to inquire into the propriety of such legislation by Congress as may require the filling of all vacancies in the Signal Corps above the rank of sergeants by promotion from said corps, or by the appointment to such vacancies of officers from the Army or Navy of the United States; and that said committee report by bill or otherwise.

Mr. EDMUNDS. My motion was to amend the resolution of the Mr. EDMUNDS. My motion was to amend the resolution of the Senator from Missouri by striking out the words "Special Committee to examine the several branches of the Civil Service" and inserting the words "Committee on Military Affairs."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator is correct. The Chair had not noticed the phraseology. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. EDMUNDS.]

Mr. HAMLIN. I wish to inquire of the Senator who introduced the resolution if this does not cover other matter than that resolution which has already passed the body and is now before the committee. There is a resolution before that committee directing them to make

There is a resolution before that committee directing them to make certain inquiries. Is this one of them?

Mr. VEST. There is no resolution before the committee on this subject at all.

subject at all.

Mr. HAMLIN. There is a resolution, and this is new matter.

Mr. ALLISON. I have no particular preference with regard to this resolution. The resolution itself, it strikes me, is not broad enough to cover what gentlemen desire. It merely relates to the promotions in the Signal Corps. Now, I know of but a single officer by law in the Signal Service; that is the brigadier-general provided for in the appropriation bill passed last year with reference to the Army. A provision in the Army appropriation bill last year authorizes the chief of the Signal Corps to be a brigadier-general instead of a colonel. That is legislation on an appropriation bill, as the Senator from Vermont very properly says in his seat, and that is the only legislation that we have ever had with reference to this Signal Corps. So far as I know the Committee on Military Affairs have never considered the question the Committee on Military Affairs have never considered the question the Committee on Military Affairs have never considered the question of the organization of the Signal Service Corps. If they have I am not aware of it. This whole service is a growth on appropriation bills, and it rests, if my memory serves me correctly—I have not looked at it since last session—on a single section of the Revised Statutes. Now what ought to be done, it seems to me, is to secure a thorough revision of the whole subject of the Signal Service. If there are to be lieutenants in the Signal Corps let us provide for the number, as well as their method of appointment; let us say whether there shall be four, ten, twenty, or one hundred. If there are to be private soldiers in the Signal Corps, let us provide for them also by distinct legislation. There is running along through the appropriation bills a provision that a certain number of privates in the Army may be assigned to the Signal Corps, not exceeding four hundred and fifty, and that has run through appropriation bills for the last six or seven years.

It seems to me the resolution itself is not broad enough for the proposed inquiry. It ought to extend to the whole question of the Signal Service and ought to be referred to some committee. The Military Committee is a very appropriate committee; and the committee presided over by the Senator from Missouri is also appropriate to con-sided over by the Senator from Missouri is also appropriate to consider this whole subject.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Iowa is certainly mistaken in one statement he has made; that is, in reference to the Signal Service never having been before the Military Committee. This service has been before the Military Committee often, and has been considered by it. The reason, however, why its greater growth has been from the Appropriations Committee has been that officers connected with the Signal Service could obtain from the Committee on Appropriations little paragraphs in their bills that they could not get from the Military Committee. In other words, the Committee on Appropriations concluded that they knew more about military affairs than the Military Committee. That is the fact about military affairs than the Military Committee. That is the fact about military affairs than the Military Committee. That is the fact about it; and they have been for a few years reorganizing the Army as in regard to certain things, West Point, and other matters. This I say for the benefit of the Senator, and he knows it to be true.

This Signal Service belongs to the Army; it is a part of the Army; it is a corps of the Army, and is governed by the rules and regulalations of the Army; its members are subject to trial by court-martial under the rules and articles of war as a part of the Army; and the proper place for this resolution is the Military Committee. So far as reorganizing this corps is concerned, that is a matter about which I do not wish to give any opinion now. I have no objection to an examination of the subject, and I think it ought to be examined. There is one thing, however, that I do object to in this resolution, and that is that it seems to exclude everybody from this service, except those who are in the Army and the Navy. This being a peculiar service, it is one for which the education of a man may properly qualify him who has not served either in the Army or the Navy; but this resolution would seem to entirely exclude such a person erly quality him who has not served either in the Army or the Navy; but this resolution would seem to entirely exclude such a person from the opportunity of being appointed in this service. That, I think, is wrong. I think persons in civil life, who qualify themselves for this service, ought to have an opportunity of appointment in it, though they may never have belonged to the Army or Navy.

Mr. THURMAN. Has not the President power now to neminate civiling for certain grades in the Army?

civilians for certain grades in the Army?

Mr. LOGAN. The Senator will remember that recently—and I will not say that grew out of the action of the Appropriations Committee; it is no matter where it came from, but it is a very strange provision—only sergeants can be appointed, two, I believe, every year, or some certain number, to the office of lieutenant; and they must be Mr. THURMAN. I am under the impression that we have confirmed civilian after civilian who has been nominated to be a lieutenant.

Mr. LOGAN. A civilian can be appointed where vacancies exist after you have exhausted the cadets at West Point.

Mr. THURMAN. I do not so understand the law. Mr. LOGAN. I do.

Mr. THURMAN. The Senator probably knows better than I, but I do not so understand it.

Mr. LOGAN. I may be mistaken about it, but that is my under-

Mr. LOGAN. I may be inistaken about 16, but that is standing of it.

Mr. HAMLIN. The Senator from Illinois is right.

Mr. LOGAN. I think I am. I do not wish to discuss it; in fact I am not physically able to discuss anything, but I simply wish to make one statement. I desire that this matter shall be examined fairly and properly, but it certainly belongs to the Military Committee unless the Senate has not confidence enough in that committee to authorize it to make an examination, or unless it belongs to the Appropriations Committee. Inasmuch as they have had charge of the propriations Committee. Inasmuch as they have had charge of the matter before for some time, it may possibly be better to refer it to that committee; but if it does not go there it ought to go to the Mil-that committee.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. This discussion proceeds now by unanimous consent, the morning hour having expired. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. Ep-MUNDS.

The amendment was agreed to.
Several SENATORS. Let the resolution be read as amended. The Chief Clerk read the resolution as amended, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs be instructed to inquire into the propriety of such legislation by Congress as may require the filling of all vacancies in the Signal Corps above the rank of sergeant by promotion from said corps or by the appointment to such vacancies of officers from the Army or Navy of the United States, and that said committee report by bill or otherwise. The resolution, as amended, was agreed to.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The unfinished business of the Senate is the bill (S. No. 351) to extend the time for filing claims for horses and equipments lost by officers and enlisted men in the service of the United States.

FITZ-JOHN PORTER.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. President, I gave notice on Thursday last that this morning I should call up the bill (S. No. 1139) for the relief of Fitz-John Porter, late major-general of the United States volunteers and colonel of the Army, and I submitted an amendment which I propose to offer this morning with an alteration that will be readily comprehended when read. I now ask that the bill be taken up, and I submit the amendment which I send to the Chair.

Mr. McDONALD. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry as to the status of the bill (S. No. 19) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to ascertain and certify the amount of land located with Interior to ascertain and certify the amount of land located with military warrants in the States described therein, and for other pur-poses, standing on the Calendar as order 95. There was a motion made to reconsider the vote by which the bill had been indefinitely postponed, and it was fixed for this day. I ask whether the postponement of that pending question until to-day, the second Monday in December, makes it a special order, or whether it simply stands on the Calendar to be considered to-day or after to-day?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It stands on the Calendar. If not disposed of to-day, it simply retains its place on the Calendar to be acted on when reached in order.

Mr. McDONALD. And is to be considered to-day or after to-day without prejudice?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. When reached in order.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I renew my motion.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Jersey moves to postpone the consideration of the unfinished business of the Senate for the purpose indicated by him.

The motion was agreed to.
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Will the Senate now proceed to the consideration of the bill named by the Senator from New Jersey?
Mr. LOGAN. Was the vote just had on taking up this bill from

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That is the pending question. The Senator from New Jersey moves that the Senate do now proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. No. 1139) for the relief of Fitz-John Porter, late major-general of the United States volunteers and colonel of the Army.

Mr. LOGAN. I ask for the yeas and nays on that question.

So the motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill. The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Jersey proposes to strike out the preamble and also all after the enacting clause of the bill, and to insert what will now be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

That Fitz-John Porter be, and he is hereby, relieved from the disability of disfranchisement and incapacity to hold office as imposed by sentence of court-martial of January 19, 1863, and the President is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to reinstate to the Army the said Fitz-John Porter, who was dismissed by said sentence: Provided, however, That such reinstatement shall give no higher rank than colonel on the retired list: And provided further, That said Porter shall receive no pay, compensation, or allowance for the time intervening between his dismissal and his restoration.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to know how long, through how many administrations, this power is to run. Suppose the present Executive on application should not think it fit to do this act, then executive on application should not think it not to do this act, then comes the Executive-elect; he takes the office, and he is applied to. Has the power been exhausted if the present Executive refused the same as it would be if he did the act? If the second Executive refuses, does not think it his duty to do it, will the third Executive—I have no doubt I have him in my eye—be authorized to try the experiment again? I think that ought to be provided for in some way, and I move to amend the amendment by inserting after the word "Precident" the provided in the provided of the control of "President" the words "within one year after the passage of this act and not afterward."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Vermont to the amendment of the Senator from

Mr. McDONALD. I think there is no objection to the amendment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not think there is myself, but we shall see when we get the yeas and nays.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. EATON, (when his name was called.) On the main question I am paired with the Senator from Rhode Island, [Mr. ANTHONY.] do not know how he would vote on this amendment, and therefore I

Mr. CARPENTER. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CARPENTER. Mr. President, apart from the merits of this case there are some constitutional questions apparent upon the face of this bill respecting which I would like to hear from the other side, and I doubt whether they can present an explanation that will induce me to vote for the bill. These questions I believe to be of importance. The bill provides that-

Fitz-John Porter be, and he is hereby, relieved from the disability of disfranchisement and incapacity to hold office imposed by sentence of court-martial of January 19, 1863.

What power is there in Congress to set aside the sentence of a court-martial? Whence does Congress get any more power over the sentence of a military court than over the sentence of a civil court? Can an act of Congress relieve a man of the incapacity imposed upon him by the sentence of a court, pronounced upon the verdict of a jury? Why not? Simply because such relief would be the exercise of a judicial power, or of the pardoning power, and, by the Constitution, judicial power is lodged in the courts and the pardoning power in the President, and not intrusted to Congress. The same objection lies to interfere by the legislative deportment with the independent lies to interference by the legislative department with the judgment of a military court.

The Army, under our present system, is governed judicially. Courts-martial exercise judicial power, hear proof, pass upon the question of guilt or innocence, and impose the penalty of the law upon its transgressor. This is the exercise of judicial power, not reposed in Congress, nor either branch of Congress.

But again: the bill, after relieving him from the sentence of the court, proceeds:

And the President is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to reinstate to the Army the said Fitz-John Porter, who was dismissed by said sentence.

This bill declares that Fitz-John Porter was dismissed from the Army. That is its positive declaration. If he was dismissed from the Army on the 19th day of January, 1863, he has not been in it since that date, and is not now, any more than the honorable Senator from Illinois [Mr. Davis] is upon the Supreme Bench. The word "reinstate" therefore means nothing.

The bill authorizes the President to appoint Fitz-John Porter to a certain office in the Army. Can Congress do any such thing? Could Congress to-day authorize the President to reinstate DAVID DAVIS on Congress to-day authorize the President to reinstate DAVID DAVIS on the bench of the Supreme Court, from which he resigned, provided that he should have no pay during the time he has been off the bench and been in the Senate? Will any lawyer maintain for a moment that Congress could pass such a bill? He was a member of that court, a much honored and esteemed member, but he is not to-day, nor has he been since his resignation. Now, I ask what authority has Conress to authorize the President to reinstate him on the bench?

It is to be borne in mind that this bill is dealing with a man out of the Army; is dealing with a man that the bill itself declares was dismissed from the Army. Now, how is any man out of the Army to get into it? How is any man not holding a civil office to be put into the civil office? He is to be nominated by the President, and by and with the advice and consent of the Senate he is to be appointed, and then he takes his office and commences his functions or his right to then he takes his office and commences his functions or his right to fulfill them from the date of his commission. That is as true of the officers in the Army as it is of the judges on the bench. I ask my friends on the other side, who propose to vote for this bill, how they get over that difficulty; whether the Constitution is to be trampled under foot in one of its plainest provisions for the sake of putting Fitz-John Porter into the Army?

It may be said that if Congress by both Houses passes such a bill, the Senate concurring in the passage of that bill, that is equivalent to the advice and consent of the Senate; but we all know that would not be so. It is essentially a different proceeding. By this bill Con-to the advice and consent of the Senate; but we all know that would not be so. It is essentially a different proceeding. By this bill Congress proposed to vest the power in the President alone and authorize him without the consent of the Senate to appoint, for reinstation means nothing else when it is conceded as the bill itself declares that he is out of the service. This bill does not even leave that question in doubt, but positively and affirmatively asserts that Porter was dismissed from the Army; and yet it says that the President may reinstate him; that is, he may reappoint him, for that is the only way he can reinstate him. I say that in both these particulars, first, in the provision that nullifies the sentence of a court established by law, which has finished its proceedings, pronounced its judgment, and which has finished its proceedings, pronounced its judgment, and ceased to exist, and again in taking from the Senate its participation in the power of appointment, and authorizing the President alone to appoint Fitz-John Porter, the Constitution is violated.

It may be said, in reply to this, that the Constitution authorizes Congress to delegate to the President and to the heads of Departments the power of appointment to inferior offices. What does that mean? Even conceding that Congress may by law provide that colonels in the Army shall be appointed by the President alone, and all officers below colonel, if you please; but Congress cannot pass a law providing that the President may appoint John Smith a colonel in the Army, when as to every other appointee for such office the Senate has to be consulted. They may change the power of appointment as to a grade of officers, but they cannot change the power as to an individual.

Now, I beg our democratic friends before they force us to vote on this bill to give us a little light that will relieve our consciences on this bill to give us a little light that will relieve our consciences on these two points; first, to tell us how it is that Congress has the power to relieve a man from the sentence of a court-martial. The President can do it. The President has the pardoning power. What is the power that relieves a man from the sentence of a court? Did anybody ever hear it called anything but the pardoning power? The action of a court in granting a new trial, and all that, is a part of the proceeding which results in the sentence. When that is finished and the court has performed its whole function as to the subject of its jurisdiction, the case is subject to the power of pardon. The President may to-morrow pardon Fitz-John Porter if he please, but Congress cannot pardon him, nor can it pardon him by calling the proceeding "relief" instead of "pardon." The Constitution deals with things, with the substance of things, not with names and fictions and forms. It has reposed in the President the sole power of pardon; it has not intrusted it in any case to Congress, and we can pardon; it has not intrusted it in any case to Congress, and we cannot exercise it in any form or under any pretext without usurping a power which the Constitution has denied us by conferring it upon the President.

Relieved of these serious constitutional questions, there would remain the merits of this case, which I do not propose to discuss, unless my democratic friends can help me over the Constitution.

Mr. McDONALD. Mr. President, the Senator from Wisconsin appeals to democratic Senators on certain constitutional questions. I do peals to democratic Senators on certain constitutional questions. I do not understand that this is a party measure in any sense or in any form; but he has asked certain questions affecting the power of the Senate to pass this bill in the form in which the substitute offered by the Senator from New Jersey will place it. In the first place, as to the sentence from which this bill is to relieve Fitz-John Porter, I apprehend it will be found very difficult to discover anywhere in the military jurisprudence of this country any authority in a military tribunal to pronounce a sentence of disfranchisement and disqualification from helding civil office.

Mr. CARPENTER. Will my friend allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. McDONALD. Certainly.

Mr. CARPENTER. This bill does not proceed upon that ground at all. The very bill proceeds upon the ground that that sentence is valid and needs to be set aside by legislative power. If your judgment is void, you need no relief. Is Congress to sit here and play with windmills and hold that void judgments are to be set aside by law? Your very bill proceeds on the ground that the sentence is a valid one and you want to relieve Porter from it.

Mr. McDONALD. Precisely so; but if I had drawn the bill and stated my views precisely, I should not have placed that clause in it. But it is not a new thing for the Congress of the United States to pass an act either in direct terms or in effect annulling the findings and judgments of courts-martial. It has been done on many occasions. Perhaps one of the most noted is that of the late Surgeon-General Hammond, an act passed in 1878.

and Judgments of contra-matrial. It has been done on many occasions. Perhaps one of the most noted is that of the late Surgeon-General Hammond, an act passed in 1878.

Mr. RANDOLPH. By a vote of 55 to 1 in this body.

Mr. McDONALD. But, Mr. President, on the other question presented in reference to the clause in this bill by which it is proposed to reinstate Fitz-John Porter to the Army, the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin says that that takes away the constitutional right of the Senate with respect to the subject of appointments, because it would be in effect an appointment not to be confirmed by the Senate. I do not understand that appointments in the regular Army or connected with the military service fall under that clause of the Constitution which vests in the President the power to nominate and in the Senate the power to confirm. If I understand the Constitution, that clause has relation entirely to civil offices and to nothing else, and in no manner affects the Army or its organization. On the contrary, the Army is a creature of Congress by express authority from the Constitution, for the Constitution vests in Congress the power to raise and support armies and to make rules and regulations for their government, and this power is plenary and aside from the civil administration of our affairs. tration of our affairs.

I apprehend the learned Senator will study the history of English jurisprudence in vain to find any authority that connected the civil administration of affairs under the common law with the administration of affairs under the common law with the administration of an army, or its government, or the appointment of its officers, or the regulation of its courts, if you see proper to so term them. Such a thing as military law in the sense in which it is now used in this country and in England was wholly unknown in that country until the reign of William and Mary, and was introduced there by enactment by what were called the mutiny acts, that were re-enacted from year to year. One of the accusations against King James II was that he undertook to govern the standing army through the civil courts of the country, and to make its members amenable in the civil and common law courts to punishment that belonged entirely to disand common law courts to punishment that belonged entirely to discipline. Having no authority to punish by discipline by any law passed or enacted for that purpose, he sought to attach it to the courts and to make the judges subservient to his will on that subject. The whole system of military law, known in our code as the articles of war, took its rise in what were termed the mutiny acts, passed from time to time to confer on the military authorities the powers that are found in our articles of war to hold courts-martial and try parties for what are termed military offenses. When the framers of our Constitution came to consider the question of armies, they considered it in the light of the institutions of that country from which they had come, and therefore they placed this question of organizing and equipping armies in the hands of the legislative power of the country, in the representative branch of the Government, and they placed it there without restriction. Every appointment that is made in the Army by the President or by any other authority is made under the rules and regulations that Congress possesses the sole power to prescribe, to alter, to change, or to abolish; and while it was not thought necessary to require that the articles of war should be re-enacted from year to year in this country as they are to-day in En-gland, it was regarded as necessary to hold the check and control over Congress in regard to armies so as to restrict their authority in that respect that they should not extend for a provided of that respect that they should not extend for a period of over two

But, Mr. President, I do not desire to enter into any general discussion over these questions; I have simply suggested the points that govern me in giving my support to this bill in its present form. I could support it in its original form; I can support it in the form in which it is now proposed by the chairman of that committee which has had charge of it; and I have no doubt, so far as I am concerned, of our possessing plenary power over this whole subject to do what we believe to be right and just, and to take the branding-iron off a man where it has been resting for eighteen years.

Mr. HEREFORD. Mr. President, I do not propose to participate at any length in this argument, but I must express my surprise that as fine a lawyer as the Senator from Wisconsin is, and is recognized and ought to be recognized to be, should have made the argument that he has made here to-day. If his argument be true, it strikes at the very foundation of our whole Government. Our theory of government, as I have always understood it, is based on the idea that the ment, as I have always understood it, is based on the idea that the military is subordinate to the civil authority. I do not think that the Senator, with all his research, with all his learning and ability, can find any authority to sustain him in saying that the sentence of a court-martial is equal to a judgment of a court, and that that provis-ion in our Constitution which gives the President the power to par-don applies to them so as to exclude congressional action. I say that it does not pertain to the findings of courts-martial. It has reference, and reference solely, to the judgments and sentences of the civil courts. I understand, under our form of Government, that if an Army tribu-nal to-day was to sentence any man to be shot, Congress, being in ses-sion, could annul and set that aside and command the officer in charge that he should not execute that order of a court-martial.

The Army of the United States is subordinate all the time to the Congress of the United States. The Congress of the United States under our form of government can direct the officer in command when under our form of government can direct the officer in command when to fight a battle, and how to fight it. I have heard it intimated on this floor that Congress had not that power, and that to exercise it would be to usurp the power of the President. Not so, sir. When the President by virtue of his office acts as Commander-in-Chief, and Congress passes any act relating to the Commander-in-Chief, that is not acting on the President of the United States but on the Commander-in-Chief; and if there was a war to day between this country and the English in Canada, or between this country and Mexico, and the officer in command was about to pass beyond the limits of our own country to fight a battle, Congress in the amplitude of its power could say to the Commander-in-Chief, "You shall not pass the borders of the United States; you shall not fight the battle that you propose." Why, sir, if the position that is assumed here by the Senator from Wisconsin be correct, you might have a traitor in command, and he might seek to surrender our armies and Congress would have no power to interfere. I think in a case of that kind the Congress of the United States could come in and relieve him, or order him to fight this or not fight that battle; and it could go further and him to fight this or not fight that battle; and it could go further and him to fight this or not fight that battle; and it could go further and tell him how to dispose of the army if it saw fit.

The line of the argument is that we have not the power here to put inside the Army a man that is out of it. Why not? Where is the law, where is the constitutional provision that forbids the Congress of the United States to-day, if it sees proper, saying that the honorable Senator who made this argument should be placed in the Army of the United States and giving the President the authority to appoint him? There is nothing against it, and Congress would have the power so to do. The President himself, the present President of the United States, in his message to us, has recommended to us that we shall pass a law by which a certain eminent gentleman shall be placed in the Army and by which General Grant shall be made captain-general of our armies.

placed in the Army and by which General Grant shall be made captain-general of our armies.

Mr. CARPENTER. Let me inquire of the Senator, does that message recommend that Congress shall pass a law declaring that General Grant shall be captain-general?

Mr. HEREFORD. If language is intended to convey the idea that is embodied in it, it does. What does it say?

Mr. CARPENTER. I shall vote against any such bill.

Mr. HEREFORD. Of course it does not say "U. S. Grant."

Mr. CARPENTER. That is all there is about it.

Mr. HEREFORD. Of course it does not say "U. S. Grant."
Mr. CARPENTER. That is all there is about it.
Mr. HEREFORD. I know it does not say "U. S. Grant" in terms.
Mr. CARPENTER. Will the Senator pardon me a moment while I try to get at the point between us? I do not question myself that Congress might pass a law saying that the President of the United States should have power to appoint all colonels and officers below them in the Army; but I say Congress cannot pass a law saying that the President may appoint John Smith a colonel in the Army.
Mr. HEREFORD. Why not?
Mr. CARPENTER. I will tell the Senator. That is exercising the power of appointment. The other is merely creating an office and authorizing the President to fill that office. That is not an appointment. But when the Congress shall say that John Smith shall be a colonel in the Army, that is the power of appointment, which the Constitution lodges in the President and Senate.

Mr. HEREFORD. Can we not pass a law authorizing the President of the United States to commission A or B to any of the courts of Europe and put his name in it? I see no reason why we cannot, and I do not think that the Senator from Wisconsin, with all his learning I do not think that the Senator from Wisconsin, with all his learning and ability, can give a good and sufficient reason why. He has simply stated to-day that it cannot be done; but why can it not be done? He says you may pass a law authorizing the President to appoint somebody captain-general of all our armies. Where is the vice of inserting in the same bill that the President is hereby authorized to appoint U. S. Grant captain-general of the armies of the United me, that one creates an office and the Constitution declares how it shall be filled, by an executive nomination and by the advice and consent of the Senate, and then by a commission from the President; and the other not only creates an office, but fills it; it makes the office and appoints the officer. Does the Senator see no difference?

Mr. CARPENTER. The difference is, if the Senator will pardon me, that one creates an office and the Constitution declares how it

Mr. HEREFORD. I cannot see, under our Constitution and under our laws, (though it makes no difference what the law may be, for this act itself would change the law if enacted,) I see no reason why Congress may not pass an act authorizing the President to appoint A or B to any office. He may do it or he may not, but we can give him authority to do it, and if the Senate gives its consent, all is well. But, as I say, the vice of the Senator's argument is that it strikes down authority to do it, and if the Senate gives its consent, all is well. But, as I say, the vice of the Senator's argument is that it strikes down our whole form of government; it takes away from Congress the power, the absolute, unlimited power to control our armies wherever they may be, and under any and all circumstances to set aside the report or the finding of a court-martial or not, just as we please. That power does not fall within the provision the Senator has referred to. The clause as to the pardoning power certainly refers to the action of civil courts alone, and not to the findings of courts-martial, which, as the great Webster once said, are always organized to convict.

the great Webster once said, are always organized to convict.

Mr. THURMAN. Mr. President, I will not detain the Senate more than a very few minutes upon this bill. I shall say nothing about the merits of the bill. I accept the finding of the board that last sat than a very few minutes upon this bill. I shall say nothing about the merits of the bill. I accept the finding of the board that last sat upon the case as presenting the truth. I have no doubt of that whatsoever. Three better officers could not have been selected than were selected to review the testimony in this case, and to hear the additional testimony that was obtained, and their finding is so clear, so emphatic, that I do not see how any man can read it without coming to the conclusion that relief ought to be afforded to General Porter. What I say will refer entirely to the points made by the Senator from Wisconsin, and I shall be-very brief.

In the first place, I utterly dissent from his idea that for Congress to relieve General Porter from the disability under which he supposes him to labor would be an exercise of the pardoning power. I quite deny that proposition. To say nothing upon the question whether that court-martial had the right to pronounce the sentence of unlimited disqualification upon General Porter so that he should never be able thereafter to hold any office at all; even admitting for the sake of the argument (which I do not admit, but which I am strongly inclined to deny) that that court-martial possessed the power of pronouncing upon him a sentence of disqualification for office, I assert that it is no exercise of the pardoning power for Congress to provide that that man shall be subject to military duty and shall be eligible to hold office in the Army of the United States. The power given to Congress to maintain an army and to provide rules and standard and it is perfectly and standard and it is perfectly and the subject to military duty and shall be eligible to hold office in the Army of the United States.

shall be eligible to hold office in the Army of the United States. The power given to Congress to maintain an army and to provide rules and regulations for it covers the whole ground; and it is perfectly competent for Congress to provide, under its power to raise and maintain armies and make rules and regulations for them, who shall and who shall not hold office in the Army.

That, then, gives me no trouble whatsoever; but another point made by the Senator from Wisconsin did stagger me for a moment, and that was that this bill does not propose to annul that portion of the sentence which dismissed General Porter from the Army; that sentence, therefore, stands up to this time, and then the Senator says he being now out of the Army can only be brought into it by a nomination by the President and a confirmation by the Senate. To that the Senator from Indiana replied that the provision in the Constitution for the nomination of officers by the President and their constitution for the nomination of officers by the President and their conthat the Senator from Indiana replied that the provision in the Constitution for the nomination of officers by the President and their confirmation by the Senate has no application to the Army or to the Navy. Whether that be so or not—

Mr. CARPENTER. Will not the Senator be kind enough to tell us what he thinks about that?

Mr. THURMAN. When I first heard the Senator from Indiana make that the senator is a superior of the latest that the senator from Indiana make that the senator is a superior of the latest that the senator is a superior of the latest that the senator is a superior of the latest that the senator is a superior of the senator from Indiana make that the senator is a superior of the senator from Indiana make that the senator is a superior of the senator from Indiana make that the senator is a superior of the senator from Indiana make that the senator is a superior of the senator from Indiana make the senator is a superior of the senator from Indiana make the senator from Indiana make the senator is a superior of the senator from Indiana make the senator fr make that proposition, I was rather inclined to shake my head; but the Senator from Wisconsin will recollect an old anecdote in the reone senator from Wisconsin will recollect an old anecdote in the reports: When Sir Bartholomew Shower shook his head at one of Holt's decisions, Holt immediately replied that the learned counselor might shake again, but the law was even so; and it is possible that if I had shaken my head at the Senator from Indiana he might have said to me, "the learned Senator may shake again, but the Constitution is even so."

given it up when he has said that it is competent for Congress to provide that the President may appoint the subordinate officers of the Army, and colonels he has especially mentioned among the rest, and how is it that the President can do so? Because this very provision of the Constitution on which he relies says among the powers of the President:

He shall nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall appoint ambassadors, other public ministers and consuls, judges of the Supreme Court, and all other officers of the United States whose appointments are not herein otherwise provided for, and which shall be established by law; but the Congress may by law vest the appointment of such inferior officers, as they think proper, in the President alone, in the courts of law, or in the heads of Departments.

The Senator admits that under that provision of the Constitution the President might be authorized to appoint all the colonels in the Army; but he undertakes to make a distinction; he says that while we may authorize the President to appoint all, we cannot authorize him to appoint one by name. That is a distinction, it seems to me, that the Senator cannot maintain. There is no provision in the Con-stitution that all laws for the appointment of officers shall be general laws. Nothing of that kind is to be found in the Constitution, and again and again Congress has authorized the President to appoint a commissioner here, a commissioner there, and the like, without providing for any confirmation by the Senate. Therefore the Senator makes a distinction that it seems to me has no foundation.

Mr, CARPENTER. I want to ask the Senator a question in all candor. In discussing a constitutional question I am always interested to know the opinion of the Senator from Ohio, not for the purpose of attacking it, but of knowing what it is. I want the Senator to give me his opinion upon this proposition: conceding, as I do, that Congress might vest in the President the power of appointing all post-masters of a certain grade, or all deputy postmasters throughout the United States under that provision of the Constitution, I ask him if Congress could pass a bill authorizing and empowering the President to appoint a postmaster in the city of New York ?

Mr. THURMAN. Why yes, I say, certainly. Why not ?
Mr. CARPENTER. Then of course it follows that Congress might authorize him to appoint John Smith or anybody else. authorize him to appoint John Smith or anybody else. What would become of the power under the Constitution to appoint any good man in New York? Conceding that your statute has any force whatever, it would bind the President, would it not?

Mr. THURMAN. The Senator cannot make out that this is any

Mr. THURMAN. The Senator cannot make out that this is any limitation whatever upon the President's power of appointment. The law provides for a postmaster in the city of New York, and the President might be authorized in his discretion, without any confirmation on the part of the Senate, to appoint John Smith postmaster of the city of New York. That would not limit his power to nominate to the Senate for confirmation John Jones or Peter Brown or anybody clear. It would he no interference whetever with his proposed in the proposed in the proposed in the proposed in the proposed whetever with his proposed in the prop the Senate for confirmation John Jones or Peter Brown or anybody else. It would be no interference whatsoever with his prerogative. In this case, here is a very singular state of the law. The Senator from Wisconsin has argued, I think very erroneously, that a sentence of a court-martial cannot be got rid of except by the exercise of the pardoning power, and that there is no tribunal that can get rid of it. The President, it is true, may set it aside for the time being, but no matter what new evidence is discovered showing the flagrant injustice of that sentence, there is no relief except to pardon the man as a criminal. I do not believe anything of that sort; but if that is so, or if it is anything like that, then there is so much the more reason for a provision that shall secure justice to that individual and vindicate his character. his character

Mr. CARPENTER. Suppose the same state of things in a case of impeachment, is there any relief?

Mr. THURMAN. There is no relief in a case of impeachment.

Mr. CARPENTER. Then the fact that a case may exist of great hardship for which there is no relief proves nothing.

Mr. THURMAN. But impeachment is of rare occurrence, it only happens now and again; but courts-martial are of daily occurrence.

Mr. LOGAN. Will the Senator allow me to ask him if his attention has not been called to several decisions of the Supreme Court. tion has not been called to several decisions of the Supreme Court, especially to one made very recently on this very subject, in which they decide that the judgment of a court-martial is final when approved by the President and cannot be reviewed?

Mr. THURMAN. I did not suppose there was a man in the Senate who pretended that the decision of a court-martial could be reviewed in one of our judicial courts. I did not suppose there ever was anybody who had such an idea as that.

Mr. LOGAN. But the Supreme Court go further and say it cannot

Mr. LOGAN. But the Supreme Court go further and say it cannot be reviewed by anybody.

Mr. THURMAN. I do not think they ever said it could not be set aside by Congress. I challenge the Senator to present any such opinion. Congress has been acting very unadvisedly if it is so.

Mr. LOGAN. I do not wish to go over it again, but I certainly demonstrated that fact here in the Senate to the satisfaction of a great many gentlemen, whether to the satisfaction of the Senator from Ohio or not, that the judgment of a court-martial cannot be reviewed either by Congress or by a court.

Mr. THURMAN. I have no doubt the Senator satisfied himself. He took sufficient time to satisfy himself and satisfy some others; but I must say, and I say it with entire respect for him, he did not satisfy me.

Mr. President, it is not necessary to discuss that question. The Senator from Wisconsin has given up the whole thing and properly listen to me. That was one trouble. He was in the Senate only a I did not expect to do so, for the Senator did not very short time and did not do me the honor to listen to me. very short time and did not do me the honor to listen to me. A very simple illustration I should like the Senator to answer without going to a court-martial. Suppose you take the court of a justice of the peace that has certain jurisdiction conferred upon it by statute law, and there is no provision for an appeal, for a retrial, a re-examination of the case, is not its judgment a final judgment which cannot be reviewed or set aside?

Mr. THURMAN. If the Senator had listened to what I said a few

Mr. THURMAN. If the Senator had listened to what I said a few moments ago, he would have understood what was my view on this subject. The Congress is expressly authorized by the Constitution to raise and maintain armies and to make rules and regulations for them, and that power is so plenary that Congress has a right to provide for the employment of any man, whether under disability or not under disability, and to authorize him to hold whatever office Congress in its indepent may see fit to clothe him with or say that he shall be disability, and to authorize him to hold whatever office Congress in its judgment may see fit to clothe him with or say that he shall be clothed with in the Army.

Mr. LOGAN. I am very feeble and not able to discuss this question, and do not propose to do so, but I should like to ask the Senator right there a question. I agree that Congress has power to make rules and regulations for the government of the Army under the Constitution, but after Congress has made those rules and regulations and the rules and regulations have been complied with, then how can Congress interfere with the compliance with the rules and regulations that they have made? Congress may repeal those rules and regulations, Congress may provide that there shall not be a court-martial, or it may change the mode of proceeding of a court-martial; but after it does that, and the court-martial has been held in pursuance of its rules, how can Congress step in and make new rules subsequently that will affect the rules made before by which the court-martial has been governed?

governed? Mr. THURMAN. Congress can do it, because Congress has plenary power over raising and maintaining armies, and I do not hesitate to say that it can set aside by act of Congress every sentence of a court-martial that ever was pronounced. I have not a doubt about it whatsoever. But it is not necessary to go to that; the question here between the Senator from Wisconsin and myself is simply this: he admits that Congress may vest in the President alone the appointment of all the colonels in the Army, but he says the greater does not include the less; that we cannot authorize him in a particular instance to do it.

not include the less; that we cannot authorize him in a particular instance to do it.

Mr. CARPENTER. Oh, no, Mr. President, that is not my point. My point is, that Congress in the one instance authorizes the President to fill a certain grade of office with whomever he sees fit; the other is the appointing power itself. When Congress says the head of the Post-Office Department may make all appointments of deputy postmasters that is not the appointing power; it is vesting the power of appointment, as the Constitution authorizes Congress to do, in the head of a Department. The appointing power is a different thing, and the appointment is a different thing. When we have vested that power in the Postmaster-General, then he, exercising that power, says John Smith shall be postmaster in the city of Washington. The Senator from Ohio does not mean to say that he sees no difference be says John Smith shall be postmaster in the city of Washington. The Senator from Ohio does not mean to say that he sees no difference between those two things as a question of power, between creating an office all over the United States, one hundred thousand of one class of officers, and designating the power of appointment, and the authority exercised by Congress itself, in which it is its discretion that names the office. For instance—

Mr. THURMAN. The Senator is simply repeating what he said before and I do not want to take up so much of the time of the Senate on this bill—on this bill-

on this bill—
Mr. CARPENTER. Very well.
Mr. THURMAN. Congress usurps no appointing power. Congress does not say that Fitz-John Porter shall be returned to the Army of the United States. It says nothing of the kind. It simply authorizes the President to say that. If the President does not see fit to say it, it never will be said. There is no trenching on any right of his whatever or any nominating power of his whatever. And further there is no to ne word in the Constitution that requires Congress to proceed by general law relating to all officers whose nomination it shall vest by general law relating to all officers whose nomination it shall vest in the head of any Department or in the President alone. There is not a word of any such thing as that. By provisions in some of the constitutions of the States it is declared that all laws of a certain kind creating corporations shall be general laws, and that there shall be no special law on the subject. We have no provision of the Constitution which says that every law in regard to vesting in the President the right to appoint a subordinate officer shall be a general law relating to all men of that rank; and there ought to be no such thing in the Constitution. It would prevent justice being done in just such a case as this.

And now what has been the action of Congress on this subject? I will not take up the case of Hammond that has been referred to; the bill was approved the 15th of March, 1878; and that is a very proper ease to consider. What was the provision in that case?

That in the event of the findings and sentence of the said court-martial being annulled and set aside, as provided for in the first section of this act—

The first section authorized the President to set them aside—the President be, and is hereby, further authorized to place the said William A. Hammond on the retired list of the Army as Surgeon-General.

He had been dismissed from the service; he was no longer Surgeon-General; but here it was provided the President might annul that sentence of dismissal and then that in the event of its being annulled the President might place him on the retired list of the Army as Surgeon-General. This related to a single man. It did not relate to every man who should be Surgeon-General. It related to a single man. Let us pass on—

Mr. MAXEY. It would be as well to state that the Hammond case passed the Senate by a vote of 55 to 1 after discussion.

Mr. CARPENTER. And it is as well to state that that does not touch this question at all, because it simply authorized a review by the proper reviewing power.

the proper reviewing power.

Mr. McDONALD. It provided for the reinstatement of a man by name.

Mr. CARPENTER. It provided that the appointing power, after the reviewing power had set aside the sentence, which of course restored him to the Army, might then retire him.

Mr. THURMAN. Who has the floor, I should like to know?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Ohio has the floor.

Mr. THURMAN. Then I must beg Senators to let me proceed. I have a later act here, the act of March 3, 1879, for the relief of Iosenh B. Colline.

Be it enacted, de., That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to reinstate Major Joseph B. Collins, late of the United States Army, and to retire him in that grade, as of the date he was previously mustered out.

There is an act confined to a single man.

Then on the 21st of June, 1876, this act was approved:

That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized to restore James B. Sinclair, first lieutenant, United States Army, retired, to the rank of captain of infantry, as held by him December 31, 1870; and that his name be placed upon the retired list of the Army as of the rank he held at that date.

Again, by an act approved February 19, 1879, it was provided:

That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the list of retired officers of the United States Army the name of Francis O. Wyse, as retired lieutenant-colonel of the Fourth Regiment of United States Artillery: Provided, however, That he shall receive no pay compensation or allowance of any kind under the provisions of this act for the time intervening between the 25th day of July, 1863, and the date of the approval of this act.

Here is another act, approved May 10, 1872:

That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to place the name of * * * Samuel Ross on the list of officers retired from active service, according to the proceedings and report of said retiring board, to take effect, &c.

March 3, 1879, this act was approved:

That Philip W. Stanhope, late captain of the Twelfth United States Infantry and brevet lieptenant-colonel of the United States Army, having been placed upon the list of supernumeraries, from which he was mustered, under the mistake of groundless charges as the superinducing cause thereof, the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized to restore him to his proper rank and promotion in the Army, with directions to the Secretary of War, on account of his disabilities incurred in the line of duty, to place him on the retired list, without regard to the limit as to numbers heretofore fixed by law—

With the usual provision that he should have no pay for the intervening time. Without going further into these cases—I have several more before me—let me call the attention of my friend from Wisconsin to a little bill which bears his signature. It is true he signed it as President pro tempore of the Senate and the President pro tempore sometimes signs bills which he does not like.

Mr. CAPPENTER—That is an arrangement I want to tall my friend.

Mr. CARPENTER. That is an argument I want to tell my friend

I can retort on him.

Mr. THURMAN. I do not take anything by that. I only referred to it to show that the Senator knew what was going on. This act was passed in May, 1874:

That Joseph Briggs, sergeant; Silas B. Harrington and Peter Redmond, corporals; and Peter Hanley, Alexander Valley, Michael Murphy, Owen Cabill, William McNech, George Wilson, Samuel O'Neal, Henry F. Errett, and John Dunne, privates, and all late members of Company K, Fifty-eighth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, be, and they are hereby, relieved from the proceedings, findings, and sentence of a court-martial approved by Brigadier-General K. Garrard, January 19, 1865, and wherein they were severally convicted of mutiny—

Congress set aside that court-martial sentence in the case of some Illinois soldiers and the said proceedings, findings, and sentence are hereby set aside and revoked, and the said persons restored in all respects to the same rights and privileges to which they would have been entitled if said proceedings, findings, and sentence had not been had or rendered.

Mr. President, with these acts before me, stretching over a great number of years, (and these are only a few out of a multitude, I am told by those who have looked further into the subject than I have,) it will not do for the Senator from Wisconsin to say that while the President might be clothed with power to appoint all colonels without nominating them to the Senate, he cannot do justice to Fitz-John Porter because he is named in the bill.

I shall not detain the Senate longer. I would ha ten minutes if it had not been for the interruptions. I would have been done in

Mr. LOGAN. I desire to call the Senator's attention to one thing. I suppose he remembers that the names he mentioned in the acts which he read, Collins and the other persons, except Surgeon-General Hammond, were sent to the Senate for confirmation.

Mr. THURMAN. I do not remember any such thing.

Mr. LOGAN. I presume by examining the records he will find that Mr. THURMAN. I do not dispute or question the Senator's statement, but I never heard of a case of the kind.

Mr. LOGAN. I only say that is my recollection, and I have asked a Senator here who introduced one of the bills, or made the report in one of the cases, and that is his recollection.

Mr. THURMAN. But the acts themselves contemplated no such

Mr. THURMAN. But the acts themselves contemplated no such thing:

Mr. LOGAN. It makes no difference. The only case you find is that of Hammond, which was passed, it is said, after debate, a case where he was not restored to the Army, but was appointed on the retired list, which it was agreed was not a restoration to the Army, but merely placing the man on the retired list. That, I know by examining the debate, was an argument made by one or two of the gentlemen who spoke. What effect it had I do not know; but certainly that was a case passed without due consideration by the Sentence and noother case of that character has ever been passed through ate, and no other case of that character has ever been passed through the Senate in that way from my examination. The Senator says there have been a great many bills passed for a great many persons. I say he is mistaken, in my judgment; he will not find that to be the case. Two, I think, may be found where this action was taken, and afterward, when examined, certainly those who examined them came to the conclusion that the action was erroneous. In the argument I made, concussion that the action was erroneous. In the argument I made, however little consideration the Senator gave to it or is disposed to give it, I stated that was a precedent by the Senate which the Senate ought to correct, and I showed precedent after precedent and decision after decision on the principal point just the contrary to what the Senator has maintained.

Mr. CARPENTER. Mr. President, it is important whether Fitz-John Porter shall be restored to the place he lost in consequence of the trial and sentence of a court-martial; but that is very trifling compared with the great, important question of whether the Constitution of the United States is to be frittered away as often as our sympathies are enlisted on behalf of an individual. Our friends here say that Fitz-John Porter has been wronged; they think his case needs redress; they feel a warm anxiety on his account. It is natural that this should influence, to a certain extent, their judgment about the Constitution. But it is remarkable, and it is distressing, that mere personal feeling and friendly sympathy should take a lawyer like the Senator from Ohio so completely out of his bearings on prestions that settled one way or the other are to affect our proceed. questions that, settled one way or the other, are to affect our proceedings here for all time. I have heard the most remarkable propositions laid down here as constitutional law, this morning, that I have ever heard.

In the first place, we are told by several Senators—I believe the Senator from Indiana asserts it and the Senator from Ohio indorses it—that officers of the Army are not officers of the United States; they are officers of the Army werely—

Mr. THURMAN. I have not said they are not officers of the United

Mr. CARPENTER. I understood the Senator from Indiana to say so, and I understood the Senator from Ohio to say that he was inclined to shake his head at first, but concluded, instead of shaking his head, to bow in acquiescence.

Mr. McDONALD. I said they were not officers of the United States in the sense of that clause of the Constitution which provided for the appointment of civil officers. They were embraced, however, under that power which vested in Congress authority to raise and equip armies and make rules and regulations for their government.

That is what I said.

Mr. CARPENTER. Let me ask the Senator a question for the purpose of getting at a distinct idea of what his point is. Does he maintain that Congress can dismiss General Sherman to-morrow?

Mr. McDONALD. Yes, sir; I maintain exactly that proposition.

Mr. CARPENTER. That is just exactly what I wanted to know, and I thank the Senator for his frank declaration.

Mr. McDONALD. And Congress may dismiss any other person in the Army except the President of the United States, whom the Constitution makes Commander-in-Chief.

Mr. CARPENTER. Let us examine this question a little, for it is a very important one. We are told that General Sherman is not an officer of the United States within the meaning of the provision of the Constitution which regards the appointment of the officers of the United States. If that be true I have misunderstood the Constitution from the time I first opened it to the present hour. Let us see how it reads:

He [the President] shall have power, * * * and he shall nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall appoint ambassadors, other public ministers and consuls, judges of the Supreme Court, and all other efficers of the United States, whose appointments are not herein otherwise provided for.

The Senator, therefore, when he denies that a military officer is within this provision of the Constitution is driven to say that he is not an officer of the United States-

Mr. McDGNALD. No, sir; I am not driven to that, but I am driven simply to this, that it is an office which is "otherwise provided for" in the Constitution by vesting in Congress plenary power over that subject.

Mr. CARPENTER. Let us see how that is. In the first place, if the Senator chooses to put that end of the argument foremost, let me address myself to that end of it. What is this power of Congress in regard to the Army? I think there has been much confusion on the subject for want of careful thought. There are two distinct powers granted to Congress in regard to the Army. They are granted in separate clauses of the Constitution; they are, in their very nature, distinct powers. The first power is "to raise and support armies." How is that to be done? Of course it is to be done by passing laws for the purpose. Now, what does the word "armies" mean in this Constitution? Those who framed the Constitution were Englishmen prior to the time of the Revolution. They were familiar with the will take got a blight ment of Great Reiting and of all the continents. military establishment of Great Britain and of all the continental mintary establishment of Great Britain and of all the continental nations. They were especially familiar with the organization and discipline of the British army. And when they provided here that Congress should have power by law to provide—for that is the meaning of the provision—for the raising of armies, of course they meant by "armies" what every Englishman meant by it then—a body of men set apart to protect the public peace and secure the general safety, and to consist of officers in chief, subordinates, and private soldiers, men subject to command. soldiers, men subject to command.

That such was the idea of the Constitution there can be no doubt. Therefore, the power of Congress to raise an army is a power to provide, for instance, that an army shall be raised to consist of a certain manufactor men, or one general and one lieutenant-general, six major-generals, so many brigadiers, so many colonels, so many captains, so many lieutenants, &c. That power is fully exercised and exhausted by the passage of such a bill. Here is the power to create courts:

The Congress shall have power * * * to constitute tribunals inferior to the Supreme Court. number of men, of one general and one lieutenant-general, six major-

The power to constitute these inferior tribunals, the circuit courts, the district courts, &c., is one thing; the power to appoint the judges of them is quite another thing. The power here to create subordinate tribunals to the Supreme Court and the power to raise an army are akin, so far as this question is concerned. Neither of them looks to the appointments which shall become necessary when the army is to the appointments which shall become necessary when the army is raised and when the court is established.

First, you have got the power to raise an army. How do you exercise this power? By passing laws for that purpose, which laws create the offices, and these are filled by an exercise of the constitutional appointing power. When the army is raised by enlistment and by filling these offices, that power is exhausted. You have raised an army; you have got the thing in existence by the exercise of that first power in the Constitution. Now, what else?

The Congress shall have power * * to make rules for the government and regulation of the land and naval forces.

These two powers are constantly commingled and confused whenever this subject is at all discussed. The power to raise the Army is one thing. The power, not to govern the Army, but to make rules and regulations for its government, is another thing. How are you to do this? How are you to do this? How are you do to govern a Territory by possing laws. Army? Precisely as you do to govern a Territory, by passing laws, which laws are to be carried out and executed by courts. That is the way in which you exercise the power conferred by that provision of the Constitution. In the first place, you raise your Army by providing that the Army shall consist of so many privates, so many generals, so many colonels, and so on, and having done that then you have a body in existence for the government of which you are authorized by the Constitution to mass rules and regulations.

Mr. McDONALD. I should like to ask the Senator from Wisconsin if, in the exercise of the power to make rules and regulations for the government of the Army, Congress should see proper to vest in the Chief-Justice of the United States the power to appoint officers in the Army, where would be the constitutional objection to that?

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Chief-Justice is not the court.

Mr. CARPENTER. The constitutional objection to that would be Senator was not willing that I should put the argument that end foremest, and required that I should go back to his starting point, and I did so. I maintain here that the power to raise an army is one thing, fully exhausted when your army is raised, and that the power then to make rules and regulations to govern the army is another and a distinct power, and to be applied to the body which you have raised by the exercise of the first power.

When you have raised the army, when you have provided that your army shall consist of a general, a lieutenant-general, so many brigadiers, majors, &c., the question is whether these officers are officers of the United States, and covered by the clause of the Constitution which provides for the appointment of all officers of the United States

Mr. McDONALD. That is the very point.
Mr. CARPENTER. Of course it is; but a man with a small mind like mine cannot discuss two distinct things at once. I have reversed the order of my argument simply to suit the Senator. Now, let me put it in my way. I know the Senator wants to be reasonable. He says that an officer of the Army is not an officer of the United States within the meaning of the Constitution, if I understand him.

Mr. McDONALD. No, sir; I have not said that at all. I say he is not an officer in the meaning of that section, except that he is an officer whose appointment is "otherwise provided for."

Mr. CARPENTER. How is his appointment otherwise provided

Mr. CARPENTER. That is to say, the power to regulate the Army, the power to pass a law for the government of the Army, carries with it the power to appoint the officers of the Army.

Mr. McDONALD. To provide for appointments in the Army.

Mr. CARPENTER. The Constitution has provided for that.

Mr. McDONALD. No, sir; it says except where "otherwise provided for;" and I say that it is otherwise provided for here in the Constitution

Mr. CARPENTER. Now let us see. Will the Senator maintain any such doctrine in regard to the circuit courts of the United States The Constitution makes no court but the Supreme Court, and it does not even define the number of judges there, whether the court shall consist of one judge or ten judges.

Mr. McDONALD. Certainly; but does it not provide for the appointment of the judges?

Mr. CARPENTER. The Senator knows what it is. It simply provides for the appointment of judges of the Supreme Court.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Constitution reads that the President shall the constitution and constitution reads that the President shall the constitution are sent of the Senator.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Constitution reads that the President shall "nominate, and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall appoint " " judges of the Supreme Court, and all other officers of the United States, whose appointments are not herein otherwise provided for, and which shall be established by law." When you come to a circuit judge, therefore, and an officer in the Army, they stand in the same category.

Mr. McDONALD. If the Senator will allow me I will read an extract from Judge Paschal's Annotated Constitution upon this question as embracing my proposition. After quoting the clause of the Constitution to which I have referred, he says:

"To raise and support" in practice, means to educate commission culist draft.

"To raise and support," in practice, means to educate, commission, enlist, draft, conscript, feed, clothe, transport and pay officers and men.

It embraces the whole of this.

Mr. CARPENTER. No doubt of it; but does that say that Congress may appoint an officer in the Army? You have got here a Government of three branches. If there is one thing that the framers of the Constitution tried to accomplish, it was a separation of the of the Constitution tried to accomplish, it was a separation of the three powers of Government into three departments, each to be exercised separately and distinctly. To the executive department was given the power of appointment of every officer of the United States, unless otherwise provided for, and the only other provision of the Constitution is that "Congress may by law vest the appointment of inferior officers in the President alone, in the courts of law, or in the heads of Departments." Now, you have power to raise an army. There is legislative power called for, to provide how large the army shall be, what officers it shall have, and how many.

Mr. McDONALD. And also who shall appoint?

Mr. CARPENTER. No, because the Constitution says who shall appoint.

appoint.

Mr. McDONALD. There is the conflict between us.

Mr. CARPENTER. Then the Senator is driven to say that a gen-

Mr. CARPENTER. Then the Senator is driven to say that a general is not an officer of the United States.

Mr. McDONALD. I have said again and again.

Mr. CARPENTER. Wait a moment.

Mr. McDONALD. That is not my proposition at all.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. FERRY in the chair.) Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. CARPENTER. I cannot refuse to yield to anybody who insists.

Mr. McDONALD. When the Senator from Wisconsin says I have taken this or that position, which I certainly have not, if I have understood myself, of course he will expect me either to assent to it or dissent, and I have dissented. I say I have not said that General Sherman or any other officer in the Army was not an officer whose appointment was provided for in the clause of the Constitution to which the Senator refers, by being vested in the President, by and appointment was provided for in the clause of the Constitution to which the Senator refers, by being vested in the President, by and with the consent of the Senate, but that he is of that clause of officers "otherwise provided for" in the Constitution, namely, in that clause which gives to Congress, and Congress alone, the power to raise an army and to make rules and regulations for its government. That is my proposition, and the Senator may state it in that form as often seen and whenever he can evertherwise the my satisfaction. as be pleases, and whenever he can overthrow it to my satisfaction I will go with him.

Mr. CARPENTER. I understand, then, the Senator's argument

Mr. CARPENIER. I understand, then, the Senators argument leads to this: I suppose he means—

Mr. McDONALD. No, it does not lead to anything except what I have stated myself. That is my objection to the mode in which the Senator from Wisconsin insists on discussing this question. He insists on giving a construction to what I said that it does not bear and undertakes to place me in a position that I have not assumed, and if I know myself I do not think I shall assume, even as much as

Mr. CARPENTER. If the Senator wants to do anything to please me, he certainly will not put himself in that position. But I want to know now if the Senator understands that Congress can appoint the General of the Army?

Mr. McDONALD. I have not said that Congress may appoint the General of the Army, but I have said that Congress was not compelled to provide for the appointment of these officers by the President or by the head of a Department, but might make its own regulations.

lations in reference to the appointment.

Mr. CARPENTER. Without saying what the Senator is in favor of, or believes in, for I cannot get any idea from what he says, let me I say no.

tell the Senator what I believe. I think I can do that. Now, I say here you have three powers of the Government conferred by the Constitution: legislative power, executive power, and judicial power. When Congress is authorized to do anything, for instance, the power conferred upon the General Government to secure republican institutions in a State, or to protect the State against insurrection, there is a provision which may call for the exercise of both legislative and executive powers, and both have been exercised in such instance and for such ends. Congress passes a law saying that in a certain event for such ends. Congress passes a law saying that in a certain event the President may call out the militia and enforce order and preserve the peace in a State. When a President exercises that power, it is the exercise of executive power, enforcing the laws enacted by the legislature. When Congress is authorized to raise an army, it does so by providing how the army shall be raised. Congress cannot go out and take enlistments on the corner of the street; it can only exercise its power by passing laws. It passes a law to raise an army. It cannot raise an army in any other way. When it has passed the law, it has exercised its power upon that subject. Then, when the army is raised, your power to make rules and regulations for its government begins. ernment begins.

The second provision is that Congress may make laws (that is what it means) to govern the Army, but the officers are appointed under the first delegation of power to raise an army. It is not governing an army to appoint the officers; that is a part of the raising of an army to be governed. It is a confusion of terms to say that the power to govern an existing entity is the power to create it. The Senator places the power to make the appointment under the wrong clause. If it exists in Congress at all it is because it belongs to the power to If it exists in Congress at all it is because it belongs to the power to raise an army. I say that when Congress exercises its power, when it provides that an army shall be raised in the mode pointed out, when it creates the offices that it shall contain and provides for enlistments, it has exhausted the power to raise an army. When it has made that provision and created the offices, then what? Then the Constitution of the United States presides over that statute as it does over all others; it presides over the appointment of officers in the Army, as it does over the appointment to all other offices created by law. It is impossible for language to be plainer. "The President shall nominate, and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senshall nominate, and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall appoint * * * all other officers of the United States, ate, shall appoint * * * all other officers of the United States, whose appointments are not herein otherwise provided for."

Now, what officers are, in the Constitution, otherwise provided for?

The Constitution says:

But the Congress may by law vest the appointment of such inferior officers, as they think proper, in the President alone, in the courts of law, or in the heads of Departments.

It is to be observed that it is only the appointment of "inferior offi-cers" that may be so vested. Undoubtedly Congress might, under this provision of the Constitution, vest in the Secretary of War. as I this provision of the Constitution, vest in the Secretary of War, as I believe it has already done, the appointment of non-commissioned officers of the Army. It might be difficult to draw the line which separates the inferior from superior officers of the Army, had it not already been determined by practice and custom of all nations. Congress cannot declare that the lieutenant-general is an inferior officer and therefore vest the power of his appointment in the head of the War Department. The officers whose appointment may be thus vested must be inferior officers in fact, and cannot be made so by congressional declaration. It would be simply to declare that Generals Sherman, Sheridan, and the major and brigadier generals of our Army are inferior officers of the United States, whose appointment might be vested in the Secretary of War. might be vested in the Secretary of War.

And yet, if the power to raise or govern the Army includes the appointment of officers of the Army, it applies equally to the Commander-in-Chief and the lowest non-commissioned officer. The only exception made to the appointment of officers of the United States by the President and Senate relates to inferior officers. I therefore maintain that all the military officers of the Army, except the inferior officers, must be made by the President and Senate, as has always been the case in practice.

Let me refer to some other provisions in the Constitution which I think make this still more plain.

Mr. EATON. I ask the Senator to allow me to read a clause of the Constitution on this very question.

Mr. CARPENTER. Very well.

Mr. EATON. Section 2 of article 2 of the Constitution provides that the President-

Shall have power, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to make treaties. * * * and he shall nominate, and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall appoint ambassadors, other public ministers and consals, judges of the Supreme Court. and all other officers of the United States, whose appointments are not herein otherwise provided for.

Those named are the only classes for which Congress may not pro-Those named are the only classes for which Congress may not provide some other mode of appointment. I agree that Congress cannot provide for any other mode of appointment of judges of the Supreme Court or of ministers. Now, then, I want to ask my friend from Wisconsin if Congress under this very section does not possess the power (I do not undertake to say it has done it) to vest the appointment of all military officers in the head of a Department, in the courts of law, or in any other person that the Constitution points

Mr. CARPENTER. To answer the question as a matter of opinion,

Mr. EATON. They do not give it to the President?
Mr. CARPENTER. I thought you had got through with the question.

Mr. EATON. I have. Mr. CARPENTER. I say no. What does the Constitution say?

But the Congress may by law vest the appointment of such inferior offi-

Mr. EATON. All others are inferior officers except those that are named. Those are the superior officers. In the appointment of all inferior officers I apprehend that Congress has the sole power to

Mr. CARPENTER. Then I understand the Senator to maintain that under the Constitution Congress may by law give the appointment of every officer except ambassadors, public ministers and consuls, and judges of the Supreme Court, to the President alone or to suls, and judges of the Supreme Court, to the President alone or to the head of a Department.

Mr. EATON. They may.

Mr. CARPENTER. That is a proposition I never heard made before, and I do not believe any logic can sustain it. It was not the intention to do any such thing, if the language could be tortured into that. "Inferior" there does not mean inferior to a minister, or inferior to a consul, or inferior to a judge of the Supreme Court; it means unimportant officers—every government must be filled with them—your deputy postmasters, your collectors of customs, all those officers who are subordinate, inferior in every proper sense of the word. There Congress may give the power of appointment to the head of a Department. head of a Department.

head of a Department.

Mr. EATON. If my friend will permit me I will simply state what I think is his great error. If he will read with his customary sagacity that section of the Constitution he will see that it refers simply to civil officers and nothing else; it does not refer to the Army and the Navy, and it cannot be made to refer to them by fair reading.

Mr. CARPENTER. Why not? That brings us right back to the question whether an officer of the Army is an officer of the United States.

Mr. EATON. Reading the whole together, taking the whole section, I agree with the Senator perfectly that it can only refer to these inferior officers that he speaks of—deputy postmasters, marshals, &c., and therefore, by parity of reasoning, the balance of it does not refer to military and naval officers, because they are very inferior officers in military and naval service.

Mr. CARPENTER. Certainly, and that is precisely the way I was going to construe this section. I was going to say, and would say in regard to the Army, it should have read "the inferior officers of the Army and Navy may be appointed by the Secretary of War." Even conceding that Congress may say that the captains, lieutenants, &c., shall be appointed by the Secretary of War, classing them as inferior officers, it cannot be maintained that this clause means officers inferior to ambassadors, judges, &c. Who can determine whether a judge of the Supreme Court is superior or inferior to General Sherman in command of the Army?

man in command of the Army?

Mr. EATON Because General Sherman does not come under him.
I apprehend it is not in the clause of the Constitution at all.

Mr. CARPENTER. I of course cannot make the Senator agree to my theory, and I cannot agree with him. I believe the Constitution means just what it says.

Mr. BLAIR. I should like to ask the Senator one question.

Mr. CARPENTER. Any one who will confine himself to one question will be entitled to interrupt.

Mr. BLAIR. I agree with the Senator, and ask him how another view of the subject occurs to him. I should like to inquire of him if he believes it possible for the act of confirmation by the Senate to precede that of appointment or nomination by the President?

Mr. CARPENTER. No; I do not.

Mr. BLAIR. Then what is to prevent the power of this Senate from taking that way of confirming every officer in the future by providing in a general law that the President may appoint this, that, or the other men to office as vacancies occur?

or the other man to office as vacancies occur?

Mr. CARPENTER. Precisely, I concur in that view of the case. Now let me call attention to some other provisions of the Constitution. Article 2, section 4, provides that-

The President, Vice-President, and all civil officers of the United States, shall be removed from office on impeachment for, and conviction of, treason, bribery, or other high crimes and misdemeanors.

Again, as to the provision that General Porter shall be relieved from the sentence, the Senator from Ohio said that was no part of it at all. He did not very clearly tell us why it was not. A man is arrested for a violation of the laws of Congress and is tried before the court which Congress has provided shall try him. They hear the proof, they declare him guilty, they affix a penalty which the laws authorize that court to impose. The court send on their proceedings to the revisory power, the President. He goes over the record, affirms the decision, and files the papers in the archives of the Government and the court dissolves. Now I ask what power except the pardoning power can relieve the man from that sentence? Is not the thing in substance and effect a pardon? No, says the Senator from Ohio, because if it was then it might happen that a man might really be innocent and it might turn out that he was, and there would be no relief for him. Those hard cases would occur under any construction of the Constitution.

I say the provision of the Constitution under which relief may be afforded in this case is the provision in regard to the pardoning power. But, says the Senator from Indiana, [Mr. McDonald,] suppose it is, our power to make laws for the government of the Army carries with it the power of pardoning offenses against those laws. Where does he get any support for that theory? Do we not pass all the laws in regard to crimes which are administered in the civil courts? Take the postal system, take perjury in our courts. We declare what shall be an offense. We have the absolute plenary power over the subject of crime. The Constitution gives us the power. A circuit court of the United States cannot try a man for any offense except treason and a few specified cases not declared by statute, and yet does that power to create and declare what shall be the crime of perjury or of arson or of any other offense whatever that Congress creates, (Congress having the power to create the court, having the power to deour power to make laws for the government of the Army carries with it the power of pardoning offenses against those laws. Where does gress having the power to create the court, having the power to de-clare what the crime shall be, what the punishment shall be,) carry with it the power in Congress to remit the sentence and relieve the man from the judgment?

The Constitution says the pardoning power shall be exercised by the President. Where is the occasion for all this refinement of definition as to the pardoning power? Does not every man know what "pardon" means? Does not every lawyer know what it means? Does not every Senator know what it means? Do we not all understand that as it is found in the Constitution it means the power which relieves a man from a sentence passed upon him by some tribunal which has tried him under the provisions of some law? I say it is unwant to such refine. unworthy of a subject of this importance to rest it upon such refinement—I will not call it refinement of definition, but refinement of ment—I will not call it remement or definition, but remement or perversion in the meaning of words. I say that is the power of pardon. You may call it what you please; that is what it is, and you know it. I say the power is not in Congress, but has been given by the Constitution to the Executive of this Government; and I say if you exercise the power you usurp it. Do you say that the power to raise an army or the power to make laws for its government carries with it the power to revise the decisions of the military courts? Apply it to your Tarritories and what would be the result? ply it to your Territories, and what would be the result? And who can stop its application to a Territory upon any logic if you can support it here?

Mr. VOORHEES. Mr. President—
Mr. CARPENTER. I beg pardon.
Mr. VOORHEES. I thought the Senator was through. He con-

Mr. VOORHEES. I thought the Senator was through. He concluded—
Mr. CARPENTER. The Senator was right in his supposition that I ought to have concluded; and I will adopt his theory.
Mr. VOORHEES. Mr. President, I listened at the last session to an elaborate and able effort made by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. CARPENTER] and by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LOGAN] to impress the country with the fact that Congress was asked to do something remarkable, extraordinary, and out of the way by passing the proposed legislation for the relief of General Porter. I did not intend to take any part in this debate, nor do I now intend to attempt to follow the Senator from Wisconsin in his discussion of abstract questions of constitutional law, but I am unwilling for this case to go to the country as if something novel and without precedent was being attempted on this floor.

The Senator from Wisconsin with force and ability at the last session, which he has repeated again here to-day, insisted that there is no relief against the finding of a court-martial except by the pardoning power. I do not think I mistake him. The Senator from Illinois elaborated the same proposition at greater length during the last session of Congress, that the findings of a court-martial were the session of Congress, that the findings of a court-martial were the judgments of a court and were final. It seems to me, without injudgments of a court and were final. It seems to me, without intending to say anything except of the kindliest character, that the law of this case as presented on this floor is an afterthought, as well as are some of the facts. And I propose to show very briefly that the Senator from Wisconsin has revised his law, and so has the Senator from Illinois, upon this question since a former period.

A case was alluded to on this floor by the senior Senator from Ohio

A case was and ded to on this noor by the sentor Senator from Onlo [Mr. Thurman] in regard to a mutiny occurring in an Illinois regiment. During the closing days of the last session I took some pains to look up that case, perhaps more fully than the Senator from Ohio has done. It was a case in which several persons were found guilty by a court-martial upon charges of mutiny, convicted, and sentenced to punishment. A bill was brought forward here and in the other branch of Congress for their relief. This was in the Forty-third Congress. branch of Congress for their felief. This was in the Forty-third Congress. The Senator from Illinois opposite me [Mr. Logan] was then chairman of the Military Committee of this body. That committee was composed of the Senator from Illinois, [Mr. Logan,] Simon Cameron, of Pennsylvania; George E. Spencer, of Alabama; Powell Clayton, of Arkansas; Bainbridge Wadleigh, of New Hampshire; James K. Kelly, of Oregon, and Matthew W. Ransom, of North Carlina being fire republican Senators and two demonstric. I hold in olina, being five republican Senators and two democratic. I hold in my hand the report made from that committee upon the motion of Mr. Spencer, instructed to do so by the committee, and I will briefly

The evidence shows that the persons named in the act were tried by court-martial upon charges of mutiny, convicted, and sentenced to imprisonment and disbonorable dismissal from the Army.

Then occurs a discussion of the facts, but nothing to change the nature of the charges and specifications as stated in that single sentence. The report winds up in favor of a bill granting them relief, which was passed, and that act was as follows:

which was passed, and that act was as follows:

That Joseph Briggs, sergeant; Silas B. Harrington and Peter Redmond, corporals; and Peter Hanley, Alexander Valley, Michael Murphy, Owen Cahill, William McNech, George Wilson, Samuel O'Neal, Henry F. Errett, and John Dunne, privates, and all late members of Company K, Fifty-eighth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, be, and they are hereby, relieved from the proceedings, findings, and sentence of a court-martial approved by Brigadier-General K. Garrard, January 19, 1865, and wherein they were severally convicted of mutiny; and the said proceedings, findings, and sentence are hereby set aside and revoked, and the said persons restored in all respects to the same rights and privileges to which they would have been entitled if said proceedings, findings, and sentence had not been had or rendered.

That act is signed by James G. Blaine, Speaker of the House of Representatives, and Matt H. Carpenter, President of the Senate pro tempore, then a Senator as now from Wisconsin, with a right of debate on this floor, with a right of participating in the proceedings of the Senate; and either he is in error here to-day in saying that men convicted by a court-martial cannot be relieved except by pardon, or he put his name to an unconstitutional law at that time.

Mr. CARPENTER. Will my friend allow an interruption?

Mr. VOORHEES. Certainly.

Mr. CARPENTER. On the question of personal inconsistency between signing a bill two or three years ago as President pro tempore of the Senate—

Mr. VOORHEES. I presume it is a matter of great indifference to

Mr. VOORHEES. I presume it is a matter of great indifference to

Mr. CARPENTER. And a personal opinion formed on my own judgment to-day, I have simply to say that if I had refused to sign that bill I should have been expelled from the Senate. I am not subject to expulsion for refusing to vote for this bill, and so I shall vote against it.

Mr. VOORHEES. That is about as narrow a fissure, as slim a crack, for a gentleman to escape from as I ever knew; because the Senator for a gentleman to escape from as I ever knew; because the Senator at that time was not merely President of the Senate, he was a Senator from Wisconsin, charged by the dignity and majesty of his State with a responsibility on this floor which he could not escape by the small refuge which he has presented here, that he had to sign the bill. So he had. I care nothing about that; I hold him to no responsibility for signing or not signing the bill; but the Senator from Wisconsin, being a lawyer, was then as now a Senator on this floor, and I cannot find in the Journals, nor can he, one single word of dissent to the passage of the act which relieved against the findings of a court-martial.

and I cannot find the Jointais, not can he, one single word of dissent to the passage of the act which relieved against the findings of a court-martial.

Mr. CARPENTER. Will my friend allow me once more?

Mr. VOORHEES. Certainly.

Mr. CARPENTER. This is a very remarkable argument to convict a man of inconsistency. Who knows—the Senator does not insist that he does and I certainly do not—whether I was in the Senate when that bill passed or not. I have no recollection of it; I do not remember ever to have heard of it. I signed it of course, in the routine, as it came to the desk from the House of Representatives, and I had to sign it. I did not even have an opportunity to read it and disapprove it, for I could not veto the bill. I merely signed it to attest the fact that it had passed the Senate, nothing more and nothing less. I do not remember that I did. No presiding officer reads a bill that he signs. What is the use of reading it? He cannot refuse to sign it if he does not like it. I do not know whether I voted for that bill or voted against it; I do not know that I was in the Senate when it passed. But I want to say one thing to the Senator and then I will try not to interrupt him again unless he attempts to rub me in some way. I want to say to him that the fact that half a dozen unconstitutional bills have passed through here in the hurry and flurry of legislation in the passed determined. The alignment addition had addition to the senator and the passed through here in the hurry and flurry of legislation. I want to say to him that the fact that half a dozen unconstitutional bills have passed through here in the hurry and flurry of legislation is no precedent whatever. The alien and sedition laws passed Congress in due form, and every democrat would jump clear out of his stockings at the idea that they were constitutional. Yet they passed and were signed by the President of the Senate I have no doubt, though I have never looked to see.

Mr. VOORHEES. Well, Mr. President—
Mr. LOGAN. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him one moment?

moment?
Mr. VOORHEES.

moment?

Mr. VOORHEES. Certainly.

Mr. LOGAN. What I desire to know is whether there will be any effort to reach a vote on this bill to-night? I wish to leave the Senate Chamber, but I want to be here when the vote is taken.

Mr. RANDOLPH. My purpose this morning was to detain the Senate, if possible, until a vote could be had, and I am ready myself to vote at any time. I have yielded the floor, having given expression to my views on a former occasion, and do not intend to debate the question at all.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I hope the Senator will waive insistence, because the bill certainly does involve, as anybody can see from the discussion, entirely irrespective of its merits, grave questions of constitutional procedure that ought to be fairly considered in whatever way we may vote upon them afterward.

Mr. VOORHEES. I shall not occupy ten minutes longer.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But other gentlemen may wish to submit some observations.

Mr. LOGAN. The reason why I made the suggestion is that I desire to leave the Senate now, but if a vote upon the bill is insisted on, of course I cannot go away.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Interrupting the Senator a moment, I will state that if a vote is taken to-day I shall be very glad to pair with him. Mr. LOGAN. I do not wish to pair, and that is the reason why I made the suggestion. I am not very well, but that is immaterial. I do not wish to pair on this question.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Then let an understanding be had that a vote shall be taken to-morrow.

Mr. LOGAN. I do not want to make any understanding about it. want to talk about ten minutes; I do not think any longer than hat time. I am not able to speak at greater length if I desired.

Mr. RANDOLPH. My impression is that we can reach a vote by that time.

Mr. TELLER. Not to-night.
Mr. ALLISON. Not this afternoon.
Mr. LOGAN. I can stay here if the Senator from New Jersey de-Mr. LOGAN. I can stay here if the Senator from New Jersey desires, but I do not think he will get a vote any sooner on that account.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I give notice, then, that I shall ask that the bill be taken up to-morrow morning immediately after the morning hour.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It will be the unfinished business.

Mr. RANDOLPH. It will be the unfinished business; and in case we do not reach a vote to-day, I shall ask that the vote be taken to-

Mr. VOORHEES. Mr. President, it was no part of my purpose, certainly with the kindest feelings, to convict the Senator from Wisconsin or anybody else of personal inconsistency. That is not an argument of very high character. It is far more important for me to have shown, as I have, that the legislation proposed here this afternoon is in harmony with the former action of both branches of Connoon is in harmony with the former action of both branches of Congress, and that, instead of its being a violent departure from the customs of Congress and from its exercise of power, it is nothing of the kind. That was the attempt made at the last session of Congress. The attempt is again made here now. I can assure the Senator from Wisconsin that the smallest part of the point which I make is that in which his consistency or inconsistency is involved, although I must say that a Senator serving his constituents on this floor is in no wise relieved from the responsibility of legislation because he happens, as your honor is doing now, [Mr. FERRY in the chair,] to preside temporarily in the Senate.

porarily in the Senate.

I might dwell for a moment upon the composition of the Military Committee of the House at that time, for the act relieving against the sentence of a court-martial passed not merely the Senate, but likewise through the House. Here was a committee of the most dis-tinguished men of the then dominant party concurring in this exer-cise of power which the Senator from Wisconsin now characterizes as unconstitutional.

cise of power which the Senator from Wisconsin now characterizes as unconstitutional.

It seems to me the Senator from Wisconsin must be pretty hard pressed when he finds an argument against the point which I make here this afternoon by asserting that many unconstitutional laws have heretofore been passed. The strange part of it that strikes my mind, however, is that the unconstitutionality of this kind of legislation has not been discovered until this particular case. One case after another has passed along without anything being discovered of an unconstitutional nature by a lynx-eyed lawyer of this or the other branch of Congress until this case is brought up, and then, in order to evade the force of unbroken precedent heretofore in Congress, the Senator from Wisconsin says that many unconstitutional acts have heretofore passed, and cites the alien and sedition laws.

Mr. President, I have here under my hand a singular piece of history upon questions of this kind, to which it may not be improper for me to call the attention of the Senator from Wisconsin, and I believe likewise to the Senator from Illinois, and whose praises have never died away on their lips. On the 11th day of March, 1869, I find General Order No. 102, emanating from the Navy Department, signed by A. E. Borie, Secretary of the Navy. Bear in mind, now, the finality, the sanctity, and the irreversibility of the finding of a court-martial as I read this order:

[General Orders, No. 102.]

NAVY DEPARTMENT, March 11, 1869.

The sentence of a naval general court-martial in the case of Lieutenant-Commander George M. Bache, of the United States Navy, who was sentenced "to be suspended from duty, on the retired pay of his grade, for the term of one year, and to be publicly reprimanded by the honorable Secretary of the Navy," is hereby revoked, on the ground that there is nothing in the record of the proceedings of the court-martial to justify the sentence.

Absolutely taking up the finding of a court-martial, so final, so absolute, as described by the Senators from Illinois and Wisconsin, and revoking it on the ground that in the judgment of the President, General Grant, who had then been in the office seven days, there was nothing in the record to justify the finding. He did not pardon the man, he did not tender him clemency, he said he revoked the judgment of the court and set it aside.

Mr. LOGAN. Had the sentence been approved by the President? Mr. VOORHEES. This order came from the President's Secretary of the Navy, A. E. Boric. It was not a pardon.

Mr. LOGAN. I ask, had the sentence of the court been approved? Mr. VOORHEES. I will read the remaining sentence of the order, and you will find that the person was in process of punishment.

Mr. LOGAN. My inquiry is, had the sentence been approved by the President?

the President?
Mr. VOORHEES. I will answer that in a moment. At the last session of Congress a great clamor was raised throughout the country that it was proposed to pay money to General Porter for a time during which he was rendering no service, and it was very hotly pressed in the public prints and elsewhere. Yet what was done in this case? It must be borne in mind that Commander Bache had been sentenced to be suspended from duty; and the last sentence in this cader reads as follows: this order reads as follows:

So much of Lieutenant-Commander Bache's pay as was stopped by the sentence will be restored to him.

A. E. BORIE,

It is an order on the Treasury to pay a man who was then under suspension. Of course he could not have been under suspension unless the decision of the court-martial and its findings had been approved by the President. He had been suspended for a time under his sentence, the proceedings approved, of course. But a new dynasty came in, and through the Secretary of the Navy it revoked this absolute, and final, and irreversible decision of a court; and it not only did that, but ordered the Secretary of the Treasury, not going through the condescending formality of saying "out of the money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated," to pay him for the time that he had been suspended. he had been suspended.

I do not know that this last paper that I have read is at this time of high and commanding authority; but it does seem to me that if the President and his administration at that time could afford to do that, his especial champions on this floor ought to deal charitably with this side when we propose not to imitate his lawless proceeding but to proceed by law.

Mr. LOGAN. I asked the Senator a moment ago if the decision of the court-martial in the case cited had been approved by the Presidents.

Mr. VOORHEES. I will answer that a little differently from what I did. What I know about that is from the nature of this order.
Mr. LOGAN. Well?

Mr. LOGAN. Well?
Mr. VOORHEES. That is all the answer I can give.
Mr. LOGAN. Very well.
Mr. VOORHEES. I have not the proceedings ratified or approved by the President here, but I take it that the officer would not have

by the President here, but I take it that the officer would not have been on his suspension and undergoing his punishment unless the findings of the court-martial had been approved by the President; and I do find by this order that he was undergoing his punishment.

Mr. LOGAN. That is immaterial. I will only suggest to the Senator that he had better examine that case before he commits himself as a lawyer by stating that that is a precedent for this case, or in any other. Although I know nothing about the case except merely from the reading of that order, I should take it that when the proceedings of the court-martial were referred to the President for his approval, instead of approving the record he dissented from it and ordered the man to be restored to duty. That is what I should take it to be. Nobody pretends to say that that is not a proper and lawful thing to do. If the Senator could find that the finding of a court-martial had been approved by a President, and then, while the sentence was being executed, another President revoked it, I should agree with him; but I am of the opinion that he will find that it is nothing more than the ordinary proceeding.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I hope that motion will not prevail.
Mr. WITHERS. I hope the Senator from Illinois will withdraw the motion at least long enough for me to ask the indefinite postponement of a bill on the Calendar.
Mr. EDMUNDS. I hope the Senator will wait until to-morrow.

There is some executive business that ought to be attended to.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. There is executive business of importance, and I understood the Senator from New Jersey did not intend to press this bill this afternoon.

Mr. RANDOLPH. The Senator from Illinois is mistaken.
Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I wish the Senator from Illinois to withdraw his motion for a moment until I give a notice.
Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I cannot. It is getting late and the Senator is a senator of the senator of the

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. EDMUNDS. May I appeal to the Senator? I know it is out Mr. EDMUNDS. May I appeal to the Senator? I know it is out of order, but I ask unanimous consent to appeal to the Senator from New Jersey not to undertake to press this bill to a final vote to-night. This is the first time the matter has been up at this session. I should like to examine it myself; I wish to do the right thing, as I have no doubt the Senate does, and I appeal to him not to undertake to press this to a decision to-night.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I have no wish to take the vote to-day if we can have some understanding that a vote will be reached at a certain time to-morrow, giving all the Senators an opportunity to be present. Under all the circumstances—we have been three weeks and more discussing this subject; it has been before the Senate for a year—I think the vote ought to be taken. If an agreement can be had that at some time during to morrow a vote shall be had, I have no objection to the present motion. Can that agreement be had?

Mr. EDMUNDS. If the Senator appeals to me, I certainly do not expect now to address the Senate for more than fifteen minutes, if at all, on the subject; but for the last four years I have resisted agreements by which, at the last moment, Senators who had something to say were cut off when a new aspect of the question presented arose; and therefore I cannot make any agreement, but I do not certainly intend to interpresent whethere

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Monday, December 13, 1880.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. P. HARRISON, D. D.

The Journal of Friday was read and approved.

CREDENTIALS OF EZRA B. TAYLOR.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio. I desire to present the credentials of Hon. Ezra B. Taylor, member-elect to this Congress from the nineteenth district of the State of Ohio, to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of Hon. James A. Garfield. Mr. Taylor is now present and ready to be sworn in.

The SPEAKER. The credentials will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The CIEFK read as 1010ws:

In the name and by the authority of the State of Ohio, Charles Foster, governor of said State, to all to whom these presents shall come, greeting:

By virtue of the powers conferred on me by law, I do hereby certify that at the special election held on the fifth Tuesday, being the 30th day of November, A. D. 1880. Exra B. Taylor was duly elected Representative in the Forty-sixth Congress of the United States for the nineteenth district of Ohio, to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of James A. Garfield.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto subscribed my name and fixed the great seal of the State of Ohio, at Columbus, this 8th day of December, 1880.

CHARLES FOSTER,

f December, 1880. CHARLES FOSTER,

MILTON BARNES, Secretary of State.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio will present himself at the desk to be sworn in.

Mr. HURD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to object to the immediate swearing in of Mr. Taylor, and move that the credentials which have been read to the House be referred to the Committee on Elections.

Mr. McKINLEY. May I ask on what ground the gentleman makes this motion

Mr. HURD. If it be in order, Mr. Speaker, I will proceed to state the grounds on which I make the objection and the motion I have made.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will proceed.
Mr. HURD. On the 5th day of May, 1878, a law was passed by the General Assembly of the State of Ohio creating the nineteenth congressional district of that Commonwealth, which was composed of the following counties: Ashtabula, Geauga, Lake, Mahoning, and Trumbull. On the 26th day.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I take it that the certificate of election as presented here by Judge Taylor is regular on its face.
Mr. HURD. I take it that it is not regular, and if the gentleman from Ohio will wait until I get through I think I can demonstrate it to his satisfaction.

to his satisfaction.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. If the gentleman will indulge me until I ask him a question, he will perhaps be able to answer it understandingly. I will wait until he gets through with his statement.

Mr. HURD. On the second Tuesday of October, 1878, James A. Garfield was elected a member to this House from the district composed of the counties already enumerated. On the 26th day of February, 1880, the law which had created that old nineteenth district was repealed. The repealing section is general and without any reservation:

At the regular election of the present year, held on the second Tnesday of October, Judge Taylor was elected to the Forty-seventh Congress from the new nineteenth district. At a pretended election, held a few days afterward in the old nineteenth district, Judge Taylor was elected as a member of Congress to the present House, to succeed General Garfield, and upon the credentials based upon that election he seeks admission into this House to-day. The ground upon which this claim rests is that the vacancy which had occurred by the resignation of James A. Garfield from the old nineteenth district might be filled by an election held within the territory which formerly com-resignation of James A. Garfield from the old nineteenth district might be filled by an election held within the territory which formerly composed that district. This claim, I submit, is without foundation.

There are three propositions which present themselves as to the method of filling this vacancy: either that it may be filled by an election held in the old nineteenth district; or, second, by an election held in the new nineteenth district; or, thirdly, in either the one or the other, by virtue of some special provision which may be made by the Legislature of the State of Ohio.

So far as the claim that the vacancy might be filled by an election held in the old nineteenth district, I have this to say: the law absolutely, as passed in 1880, repeals the law of 1878. There was therefore, on the 30th of November, 1880, no nineteenth district composed of the counties which elected General Garfield, and in which an election could be held. The result of this election, on which these creof the counties which elected General Garneld, and in which an election could be held. The result of this election, on which these credentials rest, must be held, therefore, as a mere voluntary expression of opinion on the part of the people who happened to live within that old territory, whose attempt to express this opinion is in no wise governed or restricted by the law of the State of Ohio, which establishes safeguards for the protection of elections and the maintenance of their parity.

It cannot be claimed under the precedents that an election to fill this vacancy could be held in the new nineteenth district; although this vacancy could be held in the new nineteenth district; although there was a case from New Hampshire in the Thirty-first Congress just like this in which it was held that a vacancy which had occurred in the old third district of that State by the resignation of a member might be filled by an election in the new. But this case was afterward overruled in a case which came from Louisiana, and the decision of which seems to have been based on the better reasons. A vacancy occasioned in an old district in that State by the resignation of a member had been filled by an election in a new district bearing the same number. The House decided that when the Legislature of a State had repealed the law creating the old district, and a vacancy afterward occurred, such vacancy could not be filled by an election in a new district of the same number made by the Legislature passing such repealing act. The ground of the decision was that as the ing such repealing act. The ground of the decision was that as the member who had occasioned the vacancy had never been elected by the new district, it could not elect his successor. Since, then, the vacancy could not be filled by the old district because it had ceased to exist, nor by the new because it had never elected to this Congress to exist, nor by the new because it had never elected to this Congress a member who could make a vacancy in its representation, it follows that the vacancy occasioned by the resignation of James A. Garfield must still exist unless the Legislature of Ohio has made some special provision upon the subject. This the Legislature has not done. The general statute of Ohio upon the subject of vacancies does not make provision for this case, and in the repealing act of 1880 no special provision is made for it. It seems inevitable, therefore, that this vacancy must continue until there has been further legislation by the Ohio General Assembly. This view is supported by the opinion of Judge McCrary, in his work on elections, page 129:

And if a State Legislature shall abolish such district after it has elected its Rep-

And if a State Legislature shall abolish such district after it has elected its Representative, and shall make no provision for filling a vacancy, it may, in the event of a vacancy, be obliged to go unrepresented for the time being.

The gentleman from Ohio on the other side [Mr. BUTTERWORTH] The gentleman from Ohio on the other side [Mr. Butterworth] has suggested to me that upon the certificate as presented here there is a prima facie case made which would entitle Judge Taylor to be sworn in. I think not. It appears on the face of this certificate that Judge Taylor has been elected from the nineteenth district of Ohio to fill a vacancy occasioned by the resignation of General Garfield. What is the nineteenth district of Ohio? The present laws of Ohio which are referred to in this certificate alone can determine it.

By turning to the statute of 1880 you find it is a district composed of the counties of Ashtabula, Geauga, Lake, Portage, and Trumbull.

General Garfield was not elected to the Forty-sixth Congress from General Garfield was not elected to the Forty-sixth Congress from that district. His resignation, therefore, could not occasion a vacancy in that district. And accordingly, upon the face of the certificate, it is patent that Judge Taylor has no right to a seat on this floor.

The whole trouble is in the omission of the Legislature of the State of Ohio in passing the gerrymanding law of last winter to make proper provision to fill vacancies; and it is not singular that they should have made this blunder in their partisan haste to enact a measure which, as the late elections have shown, has given three hundred and eighty thousand people of the State of Ohio in the next Congress fifteen Representatives, and three hundred and sixty thousand only five Representatives.

I desire that the Legislature of Ohio and the people of Ohio shall and only live Representatives.

I desire that the Legislature of Ohio and the people of Ohio shall stand upon the statutes that have been made under their organic law. It is for Ohio to say whether it will send Representatives to this House or not, and if it has a Legislature incapable of making proper laws, let the Legislature bear the blame and let not this House violate all the precedents and all principles applicable to this subject by seating a man who was elected from a district which had no existence at all.

Mr. McKINLEY. I submit that the objection raised by my colleague [Mr. HURD] certainly ought not to operate to prevent the swearing in of the member-elect on his prima facie case. If there be any force in the objection made by my colleague, such objection should go to the Committee on Elections, but the member-elect in the mean time should not be deprived of his seat on the floor of this House.

And permit me to say that on the face of this certificate, which is regular in form, signed by the highest executive authority of the State and accredited by the great seal of the State, there is nothing showing any such state of facts as those described by the gentleman who makes the objection here. It nowhere appears upon that certificate what counties in the State of Ohio elected Mr. Taylor for the unexpired term of the Forty-sixth Congress. So far as that certificate gives any light, we have just as much right to presume the election was held in the new nineteenth district as that it was held in the old nineteenth district; and there is nothing declared by the certificate was held in the new nineteenth district as that it was held in the old nineteenth district; and there is nothing declared by the certificate which makes inferable even any of the statements which have been given to this House by my colleague. Therefore, upon this certificate that comes here unquestioned, its integrity unassailed, no contestant here claiming the seat to which Mr. Taylor, the member-elect, is entitled, no memorial from any citizens in the district, nobody claiming the right to a seat in the place of General Garfield except Mr. Taylor, and no objection coming from the constituency from which Judge Taylor bears his certificate, it seems to me well established, under such circumstances, that, upon the prima facie case presented, Mr. Taylor must be at once sworn in as a member of this House.

Upon this point I read from page 151 of McCrary on the Law of Elections, as follows:

But, of course, a commission given by the governor, or other competent authority, does not oust the jurisdiction of the proper tribunal in a contested-election case. It is simply evidence of the right to hold the office; gives color to the acts of the incumbent and constitutes him an officer de facto. The election being set aside, or the person holding the commission being held not elected by a tribunal of competent jurisdiction, the commission falls to the ground. The person duly commissioned must exercise the functions of the office until upon an investigation upon the merits it is judicially determined otherwise.

And again upon page 157 we find the following:

And again upon page 157 we find the following:

The principal and almost the only case in which the lower House of Congress has ever denied to a person holding regular credentials the right to be sworn and to take his seat, pending the contest, is the celebrated New Jersey case, (I Bartlett, 19.) In that case one set of claimants held the regular certificate of election signed by the governor, and another set held the certificate of the secretary of state that they had received a majority of the votes cast in their respective districts. After a long and angry debate the House (being yet unorganized) refused to admit either set of claimants to their seats. Subsequently, and after a partial investigation, the holders of the secretary's certificate were admitted to seats pending the contest, and at the end of the contest these persons were confirmed in their seats. This precedent has never since been followed in a single instance. It is so clearly wrong, and as a precedent so exceedingly dangerous, that the House has not hesitated to disregard it entirely on every occasion when the question has arisen.

Now it seems to me that more the arising facie part of the case these

Now it seems to me that upon the prima facie part of the case these authorities ought to be decisive and conclusive; and whatever this House may hereafter conclude to do with this case, whatever the Committee on Elections may conclude to do with the case, if it should be referred to them, it seems well settled by precedent that Judge Taylor is entitled to be sworn in at once and to take his seat in this House pending any investigation.

But I do not think that the facts in this case, admitting them all as stated, and disclosing them fully to this House, can in any way prejudice the right of Mr. Taylor to a seat on this floor. On the contrary, I believe that an understanding of those facts will only confirm his right to the seat which he claims. I propose briefly to give to the House a statement of the facts.

to the House a statement of the facts.

After the last census, the one preceding the present, the Legislature of Ohio, in 1872, arranged the several counties in that State into ture of Ohio, in 1872, arranged the several counties in that State into congressional districts for Representative purposes. That law remained until 1878, when the Legislature of the State repealed the act of 1872 and rearranged the several counties of the State into new congressional districts. That was in February, 1878.

That law was still in force in October, 1878, and the several districts throughout the State created by that law, and, according to the territorial limits, fixed by that law, elected members to the present, the Forty-sixth Congress. General Garfield's district was one of the number. It was called the nineteenth district under the act of 1878, and is called the nineteenth district under the act of 1880.

Now, under that election and under that law General Garfield, with every one of his associates from Ohio, took his seat in the Forty-sixth every one of his associates from Ohio, took his seat in the Forty-sixth Congress. They came here with the credentials of the governor; they were sworn in and, with the exception of General Garfield, have since occupied their seats on this floor.

In May, 1880, the Legislature of Ohio repealed the act of 1878, and in terms restored the congressional districts as they were fixed by the act of 1872. In that law of 1880 no provision was made for a case like the present one, and nothing was said about any vacancy which might occur under existing law. The act of 1878 was repealed without condition or qualification, and the districts as constituted by the act of 1872 were restored.

In November of that year, after the passage of the act repealing the law of 1878, General Garfield resigned his seat in the Forty-sixth Congress. The governor of the State of Ohio, after receiving such resignation, issued his writ of election to the five counties composing the nineteenth congressional district as created by the law of 1878. The writ of election was issued to those five counties. No objection was urged against it at the time; no protest was made to it, and no election was attempted to be held anywhere else to fill General Gar-

The two political parties in the nineteenth district, as organized by the act of 1878, and in pursuance of the writ of the governor of the State, proceeded to hold an election upon the 30th day of November, this year, both parties having their candidates in the field. The result of that election was to give to Mr. Taylor, the member-elect, whose credentials are now before us, a very large majority as a Representative from that district for the remnant of the Forth-sixth Con-

Mr. WILSON. Both parties took part in the election?
Mr. McKINLEY. All parties acquiesced. No question was raised at the time; both parties put their candidates in the field, and both parties voted at that election. No question was raised by anybody, and Judge Taylor comes here with unquestioned credentials entitled to a seat on the floor of this House.

Now, it does not seem possible that this House can take the view of my colleague from Ohio [Mr. Hurd] and hold that there is no vacancy in the representation of that State; for if I understand his position, it is that there is no district in Ohio, neither the old nine-teenth district nor the new nineteenth, which can fill the vacancy occasioned by the resignation of General Garfield. If his view be the correct one, then the State of Ohio, which under the law of Congress passed in 1872 is entitled to twenty Representatives upon this floor, will be entitled to only nineteen Representatives. The act of Congress of 1872, which declares that this House shall consist of two hundred and ninety-two members, also declares that "the apportionment shall be as follows," and gives to the State of Ohio twenty Representatives. Now, if, as is claimed by my colleague, there is no vacancy, then Ohio must be content with nineteen Representatives, when, under the laws of the United States, she is entitled to twenty, and when the laws of the United States, she is entitled to twenty, and when the people of the State of Ohio, under the mandate of the governor of that State, the highest authority of the State, have undertaken to supply the vacant seat in this House and complete her legal repre-

The gentleman cites two cases, one from New Hampshire and the other from Louisiana. Now, if my friend will permit me to say it, both of those cases are against his view of the law, as he will find by a careful examination of them. Both of those cases held that there was a vacancy. In the New Hampshire case the governor of the State, unlike the governor of the State of Ohio, issued his writ to the new district, and not to the old. It was a case precisely like the present one, the only difference in the facts being the one which I have just stated, that the governor of New Hampshire issued his mandate for an election to the new district instead of to the old. When that case came before this House and was referred to the Committee on Elections, the majority of that committee, as well as Committee on Elections, the majority of that committee, as well as

Committee on Elections, the majority of that committee, as well as the minority, held that there was a vacancy.

In the Louisiana case both the minority and majority reports of the Committee on Elections held that, in a case like the present one, there was a vacancy, the two reports differing only as to the district which was entitled to fill that vacancy.

So that in any event the precedents which the gentleman himself quotes are wholly against his view of the case, for they find a vacancy and coloring the precedents when the process of the case, we have the coloring the process of the case, for they find a vacancy.

The only other question, Mr. Speaker, is what district shall fill the vacancy? Shall it be the new district, created by the act of 1880, or shall it be the old district created by the act of 1878, which old district had elected General Garfield to a seat in the Forty-sixth Congress, and which old district is to-day without a representative here? To say that the new district should elect is to say that one county in the State of Ohio, the county of Portage, shall have two Representatives in this body for the remainder of the Forty-sixth Congress; for Portage County is in the new district as created by the act of 1880, and is also in the district which I have the honor to represent in the present Congress, which district was created by the act of 1878. So that if you declare that the new district shall elect General Garfield's successor, then Portage County will have two members upon this floor, and the legal voters of Portage County will have participated in the election of two members to serve them at the same time and in the same Congress. Not only will this follow, Mr. Speaker, but it will same Congress. Not only will this follow, Mr. Speaker, but it will follow that Mahoning County, which belongs to the old district and does not belong to the new, will be without any representative in the national House of Representatives.

It is proper for me to state in this connection that the only difference between the new and the old districts, so far as General Garfield's district is concerned, is the omission of Mahoning County by the act of 1880 and the substitution of Portage. Otherwise the new and old nineteenth districts are the same. In the one case, if you say that the election must be held in the new district, you give a double representation to one county; if you say it shall be held in the old district, a constituency is unrepresented here, and will be so in that view all through this Congress. You say to them that they shall have no voice and no vote in this House. This I say is against the theory of our Government, the spirit of our political structure, and contrary to fair and just representation upon the part of the people; while the double representation which would arise in the former case It is proper for me to state in this connection that the only differ-is against positive statute. Section 23 of the United States Statutes provides that "no one district shall elect more than one Representative." And if no district can elect more than one Representative, no part of a district can participate in the election of more than one Representative.

Mr. Speaker, this question is not new, although it is somewhat in-Mr. Speaker, this question is not new, although it is somewhat interesting in some of its features. It was very fully discussed in the Thirty-first Congress by the leading men on both sides of the Chamber; and I want to read a single extract from the speech made at that time by Mr. Thomson, of Kentucky, upon the report of the Committee on Elections in the New Hampshire case. It covers this case exactly. It is found on page 185 of volume 23 of the Congressional Globe. Mr. Thompson said:

sional Globe. Mr. Thompson said:

The erroneous notions of the chairman of the committee [Mr. Strong] as to the purport of the word "vacancy" have led him into many devious, strange, and unsafe paths in regard to this question. He regards a vacancy as a mere diminution of the number of representatives to which a State is entitled; and he deduces from this assumption the doctrine that it matters not how the vacancy be filled so that the full complement of the State is restored. The chairman says in his report that "each Representative is the representative of the entire people of a State." * * * The terms "representative" and "constituent" are correlative. A member of this House is the representative of his constituents—of the men who voted and constituted him their Representative. What, then, is a vacancy? It is the fact that a portion of the people are unrepresented. When a member resigns his seat, that portion of the people whose representative he was have lost their power of being heard upon this floor, and are entitled by the Constitution to have it restored.

Indeed, the Constitution of the United States, in section 2, article 2, makes this declaration upon this subject:

When vacancies happen in the representation from any State, the executive authority thereof shall issue writs of election to fill such vacancies.

This is the clause to which Mr. Thompson refers.

This is the clause to which Mr. Thompson refers.

In order to ascertain who ought to participate in an election to fill a vacancy, it is only necessary to inquire what constituency the late member represented. There is in this case a vacancy in the representation of that portion of the people who chose General Wilson to serve them during the whole of this Congress; and when you have found that subdivision of the State which sent him here you have found where the people reside who are not heard in this House, and who, in the person of the contestant, demand their constitutional rights at your hands. If you refuse him admittance you refuse to allow the people to be represented. Nature abhors a vacuum in space, and republicanism abhors a vacuum in popular representation. Taxation without representation was an assumption the opposition to which led our fathers into a war that lasted eight years, and has been called glorious. They were careful to provide against the maxim they abhored in the Constitution of their adoption; and it is to be hoped that we shall not repudiate the sentiments which they defended at so much cost and cherished with so much affection.

Mr. Thompson further says:

It will not change the complexion of the House.

That is true in this case.

Neither party will suffer by it. It will manifest to the coverywhere that we do not like this rotten borough system. The classes, and towns, and parties cannot be silently allowed thus. It will manifest to the country and voters s rotten borough system. The representation of commend this language to my distinguished colleague.

Now, upon this same subject and in this same line, on the 12th of November, immediately after the governor of Ohio issued his mandate to the district constituted by the act of 1878, the Chicago Times speaks editorially upon this question and puts the case so well and so clearly that I beg to make the article a part of my remarks:

speaks eductorially upon this question and puts the case so well and so clearly that I beg to make the article a part of my remarks:

Governor Foster, of Ohio, has received from the President-elect his resignation of the seat he has occupied in the present House of Representatives, and has issued the executive mandate for a special election to fill the vacancy on the 30th instant. Since the election of Mr. Garfield two years ago the Ohio Legislature has rearranged the congressional districts. The present Ashtabula district has boundaries different to those of the Ashtabula district which elected Mr. Garfield in 1878. The governor's writ for a special election to fill Mr. Garfield's seat is not directed to the counties composing the present Ashtabula district, but to the counties composing the former Ashtabula district, which the Legislature has abolished. Mr. Garfield's immediate successor is therefore to be chosen by a constituency which (apparently) has no longer a legal existence, though it is the same constituency which chose Mr. Garfield for the period of two years. Governor Foster holds that the legislative abolition of a constituency which elected a Representative for a legally fixed term cannot divest that constituency of the lawful right to choose a Representative for the unexpired remainder of that term.

This view of the matter raises a novel question, though undoubtedly it is the correct view. It contemplates the congressional district in the character of a political corporation, chartered by the national authority as States and counties are, for the administration of that authority to a particular purpose. In establishing such districts the national authority (expressed in the act of Congress requiring Representatives to be chosen by single districts) is administered by the provincial Legislatures. When the Ohio Legislature had administered by the provincial Legislatures. When the Ohio Legislature had administered the national authority by erecting the Ashtabula district the electors of that distri

Now, Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that in the first instance Mr. Taylor is entitled to be sworn in; and if my colleague insists upon any investigation of this case hereafter, let him prepare his objections and send them to the Committee on Elections of this House. It seems to me further that upon a plain, common-sense statement and view of the case this House, if it should go into its merits, must, upon a vote, award the seat to the member-elect from the nineteenth congressional district. It cannot be said that the law of 1880 was intended to affect the congressional districts as they were created in 1878 in their relation to the Forty-sixth Congress. The law of 1880 had reference to future Congresses; it had to do with the Forty-seventh Congress, and under the act of 1880 the people of Ohio elected Representatives to the Forty-seventh Congress. I assert that the districting act of 1878, and upon which all the people of the State acted in the congressional elections of that year, must, for representative purposes, continue through two years; and so far as the Forty-sixth Congress was concerned, the law of 1878 had given to every district thus created a vested right of representation in that Congress during its whole existence, and no subsequent legislation can deprive that constituency istence, and no subsequent legislation can deprive that constituency of the vested right given them by that act, and none was intended by the Legislature. And if a vacancy occurs either by death or resignation that vacancy must be filled by the district as organized by the act of 1878. I insist, therefore, that the member-elect, Mr. Taylor, is entitled to qualify at once and be accorded his seat here.

Before yielding the floor to my colleague, [Mr. BUTTERWORTH,] I will append to my remarks the opinion of the attorney-general of the State of Ohio, given to Governor Foster in pursuance of his request before the writ of election was issued:

before the writ of election was issued:

STATE OF OHIO, ATTORNEY-GENERAL'S OFFICE, November 10, 1880.

DEAR SIR: Your favor of this date, in regard to the vacancy caused by the resignation of Hon. James A. Garfield, Representative in the Forty-sixth Congress of the United States from the nineteenth congressional district of Ohio, has been recited.

the United States from the nineteenth congressional district of Ohio, has been received.

That district, under the act of the General Assembly of Ohio, passed May 15, 1878, (O. S., vol. 75, page 582.) was composed of the counties of Geauga, Lake, Ashtabula, Trumbull, and Mahoning.

On the 26th of February, 1880, (O. S., vol. 77, page 11,) the State of Ohio was divided into new districts for the purpose of representation in Congress. Under that act the nineteenth congressional district is composed of the counties of Ashtabula, Trumbull, Portage, Geauga, and Lake.

The question now arises whether the vacancy caused by the resignation of General Garfield shall be filled by the counties composing the nineteenth congressional district, as constituted by the act of February 26, 1880.

In my opinion, the nineteenth congressional district, as created by the act of May 15, 1878, has become possessed of a vested right. That right is to have a Representative in the Forty-sixth Congress of the United States until March 4, 1881. Subsequent legislation upon the part of the General Assembly of the State of Ohio as constituted by the act of May 15, 1878, has the right to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of James A. Garfield as its Representative in Congress.

Very truly, yours,

GEORGE K. NASH,

Attorney, General.

GEORGE K. NASH, Attorney-General.

Hon. CHARLES FOSTER, Governor of Ohio.

I now yield to my colleague, [Mr. BUTTERWORTH.]
Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I will yield for a moment to my friend from Virginia [Mr. HARRIS] to say a word on this subject.
Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I think the question before the House is a very plain one, both as to the law and the precedents. During my experience here I do not remember an instance where, when the credentials were presented in due form, the member was not sworn in. There was one exception, perhaps, but it was not exactly an exception in point, where the member from Colorado came with a certificate in due form, and that certificate referred to the with a certificate in due form, and that certificate referred to the statute under which the election was held in Colorado and the member was elected, thereby making the statute a part of the certificate itself. It there became the duty of the House to look to that statute and see whether it had been complied with and the election held on the day provided in the statute for the election being held for a mem-ber to this House.

But that is not se in this case. It is known to the House and to But that is not so in this case. It is known to the House and to the country the representation from the nineteenth district of Ohio is vacant by reason of the resignation of James A. Garfield. This House, then, has no right to go back and look to the act of the General Assembly of Ohio in regard to its apportionment for the Forty-seventh Congress. We are not the Forty-seventh Congress, and we have no right to know what will be the number of the district of any member when he comes here to take his seat in the Forty-seventh

It seems by the act of the General Assembly of Ohio, which has been read by my friend from Ohio, that in the next Congress, the Forty-seventh Congress, four of the five counties now constituting the nineteenth district of Ohio will still be in the nineteenth district, the nineteenth district of Ohio will still be in the nineteenth district, and he asks this House to take judicial notice of that fact. I hold, sir, that on a prima facie case we cannot do it. I admit, if the certificate had certified the counties embracing the nineteenth district and the statute of his State had shown they were not within the nineteenth district, then, even on a prima facie case, the House would be justified in looking to the statute to see if it had been complied with. But the statute here makes no reference to the counties composing the district, but simply states that, in conformity to law, the nineteenth district of Ohio in the Forty-sixth Congress, not the Forty-seventh Congress, a vacancy existing, that vacancy has been filled by the election of Mr. Taylor, who now presents his credentials and asks that he be sworn in. asks that he be sworn in.

I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the Clerk again refer to the certificate, and if there be no objection I should like it again read in the hearing of the House, so there may be no misunderstanding at all on this point.

The Clerk read as follows:

In the name and by the authority of the State of Ohio, Charles Foster, governor of said State, to whom these presents shall come, greeting:

By virtue of the powers conferred upon me by law, I do hereby certify that at a special election held on the fifth Tuesday, being the 30th day of November, A. D. 1889, Ezra B. Taylor was duly elected a Representative in the Forty-sixth Congress of the United States for the nineteenth district of the State of Ohio, to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of James A. Garfield.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto subscribed my name and affixed the great seal of the State of Ohio, at Columbus, this 8th day of December, A. D., 1880.

[SEAL.] CHARLES FOSTER,

MILTON BARNES, Secretary of State.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. Now, Mr. Speaker, this case comes to this House on this state of facts: It is well known to this House there is a vacancy in the Forty-sixth Congress from the nineteenth district of Ohio. The Clerk has just read the certificate of the govdistrict of Onlo. The Clerk has just read the certaincate of the governor of the State of Ohio saying and certifying to the fact that the vacancy has been filled in conformity to the laws of Ohio. What more can this House ask on a prima facie case than that? It covers the whole ground. If any gentleman has an objection to urge, let it come in due form and let the Committee on Elections investigate it. If the member is not entitled to his seat, let the House take such action when the committee reports on it as may seem to it to be action when the committee reports on it as may seem to it to be best.

But look to the dangerous consequences and effects upon the House itself and upon the country if gentlemen who come here with certificates in due form should be rejected even for an hour, instead of being sworn in upon their credentials in due form, and whatever matter may be objected to referred in proper form to the Committee on Elections for investigation. To follow the course suggested in this case would be exceedingly dangerous. The whole complexion of the House might be changed where there was only one or two majority for either party, if on the simple allegation of any member the election has not been held in conformity to law the member presenting himself to be sworn in could be prevented from taking his seat.

We claim to be State-rights men, and we have here a certificate of the highest authority in the State that the election was held in accordance with the laws of the State of Ohio; that the laws have been complied with and the election was regularly held. I say, prima facie, every State-rights man must presume on this certificate of the governor the law has been complied with and the member presenting the credential is entitled to his seat. If it be alleged that the laws have not been complied with it is a question for investigation, not before us, but by the Committee on Elections, where, upon due proof made before that committee, the facts can be investigated much more satisfactorily than in the House. I hope, therefore, Mr. Speaker, there will be no objection, on this side of the House at least, to swearing in the member from Ohio.

Mr. STEPHENS. I wish merely to state, Mr. Speaker, that I agree to every word the gentleman from Virginia has uttered. It seems to me to be a case that is perfectly plain. I have been here many years, and I never knew but the single exception the gentleman has stated where a member was not sworn in on a prima facie case if there was no contest, and I agree with him in trusting the objection will b where a member was not sworn in on a prima facie case if there was no contest, and I agree with him in trusting the objection will be withdrawn and the member from Ohio sworn in.

Mr. CONGER. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that it is almost superfluons to add anything to the remarks of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. McKinley,] the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. Harris,] and the gentleman from Georgia, [Mr. Stephens.] But I call the attention of the Speaker and of the House to one remarkable fact which naturally follows the position taken by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Hurd] who objects to the swearing in of Mr. Taylor, and that is that if by the law redistricting the State of Ohio the nineteenth district, as then existing, and which was represented by General Garfield in this Congress, and that district in which there is a vacancy no longer exists as a district for the reason that the law as alleged changes the boundaries of that district, then the same law which destroys that district, by parity of reasoning, destroys every district destroys that district, by parity of reasoning, destroys every district situated alike in that State. Because, if the proposition be a correct one as stated, then every district in the State of Ohio represented in the Forty-sixth Congress where there has been a change of territory goes out of existence by the passage of the new redistricting law. As a matter of fact, as I understand it, that would vacate almost all of the districts in that State, and I am informed that it would even vacate the district of my friend who objects to Judge Taylor's being

I think if the proposition be a true one that the repeal of the law districting the State for this Congress vacates this district, so that a vacancy is not made and which if made cannot be filled by an election in the territory composing the new district, logically and properly it vacates every district in which there has been a change of territory and vacates the seat of every member whose district was changed or altered by the new redistricting law. Necessarily and logically my friend from Ohio must yield up his seat on this floor, and so also must friend from Ohio must yield up his seat on this floor, and so also must every other man whose district was changed or in which there has been a new county placed or from which a county was taken, or any change whatever made so that the mere territorial limits were changed. This is a logical and a plain sequence following from the argument of gentlemen who oppose the receipt of the certificate of election of Judge Taylor, and if the reasoning of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HURD] be correct these districts now represented in this Congress are no longer districts of the State of Ohio and they have no longer the right of representation upon this floor.

Now, I do not believe that doctrine will be maintained by any gentleman here present, and it seems to me to be so plain and palpable tleman here present, and it seems to me to be so plain and palpable upon the face of it that I do not think it is necessary to add anything further to the argument.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. Speaker, I shall detain the House only for a moment, for the reason that the remarks which I had intended to make have been largely anticipated by the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. HARRIS.] It seems to me that nothing is more clear than the prima facie right of this gentleman to his seat in this House. If it was the case of a question men its merits or if there was a non-original content. [Mr. Harris.] It seems to me that nothing is more clear than the prima facie right of this gentleman to his seat in this House. If it was the case of a question upon its merits, or if there was a memorial presented to the House representing facts which were to be called to the attention of the Committee on Elections, that, of course, would be a different matter; but here is a certificate on its face showing the prima facie right of this gentleman to represent the nineteenth district of Ohio, in which a vacancy has occurred by the resignation of General Garfield. If the facts which I have stated appear, if this be a proper certificate, and if the vacancy for which this election was held really existed, then there is nothing further for this House to do except to admit the gentleman to his seat; and I ask the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Hurd] who makes the objection in this case to recall the late action and precedent established by this House in the case of Mr. Hull, of Florida. There was a long debate, as will be remembered, and that certificate was opposed by a report from the supreme court of the State, going, as was claimed, to invalidate the certificate; and distinguished gentlemen on the other side, in the debate on that question, denied that this House had any power on the prima facie case to override the certificate of the State.

I find also upon an investigation of the vote upon that question, which was taken in the House by yeas and nays, that the gentleman from Ohio is recorded himself as having voted for that doctrine.

Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that in a case of this kind, where there is a question, the best way to settle it is in accordance with the precedents of this House during past years, which, I believe, with a single exception, to which attention has already been called, sustain the view I submit.

If, as I have stated, it were a question on the merits of the case, it would be an entirely different matter; but the only question raised

If, as I have stated, it were a question on the merits of the case, it would be an entirely different matter; but the only question raised here is as to the prima facie right, and, without wishing to delay or obstruct by any longer debate the right of the gentleman from Ohio to his seat on this floor, I shall not proceed at greater length to discount the gentleman from the case this greater.

cuss this question.

to his seat on this floor, I shall not proceed at greater length to discuss this question.

Mr. HURD. The only motion, Mr. Speaker, which I have submitted to the consideration of this House was the motion that these credentials be referred to the Committee on Elections; and I objected, as I have already said, to the immediate swearing in of Judge Taylor in order that I might present the facts which I have submitted to the consideration of the House. So far as the question is concerned of the prima facic case, as presented in the remarks of the gentleman from Virginia, the gentleman from Massachusetts, and the gentleman from Georgia, I have only this much to say: the certificate presented here states that Judge Taylor has been elected from the nineteenth district from the State of Ohio to fill the vacancy occasioned by the resignation of James A. Garfield. That very fact calls the attention of this House to the subject, and in order to enable it to know what the nineteenth district of Ohio is, from which this certificate purports to come, I have referred to the statutes of the State to show what counties constitute that district and what it was on the day this election was pretended to have been held.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. May I interrupt the gentleman with a question? I would like to ask him whether the nineteenth district to which he refers is under the law the nineteenth district for the Forty-sixth or the nineteenth district for the Forty-seventh Congress?

Mr. HURD. The law of the State of Ohio creating the present districts declares "this act shall take effect from and after its passage."

It was passed on the 16th day of February, 1880.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. Was it not with a view to reapportion that district for the Forty-seventh Congress?

Mr. HURD. It was a law which provided for an election in certain districts therein described. In the same law the second section provides that the act of May 15, 1878, which created the old district represented in this Congress by General Garfield shall be her repealed.

Mr. PHISTER. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. PHISTER. May I ask the gentleman a question?
Mr. HURD. Certainly.
Mr. PHISTER. I would like to ask the gentleman whether this House on a prima facie statement of the case can take cognizance that the law to which he refers is different in 1880 from what it was

Mr. HURD. I was about coming to the point to which the gentle-man from Kentucky refers, and if he will permit me without inter-ruption to proceed I will answer him.

This certificate declares that an election was held in the nineteenth

This certificate declares that an election was held in the nineteenth district of Ohio on a certain day in November to fill a vacancy occasioned by General Garfield's resignation. In order to ascertain what the nineteenth district of Ohio on that day was we must turn to the statutes of Ohio. There it is found that the nineteenth district is composed of Ashtabula, Geauga, Trumbull, Portage, and Lake; a district which General Garfield has not represented in this Congress and a district in which the resignation of General Garfield from the old district could not create a vacancy. Being, therefore, entirely a different district from the one in which General Garfield was elected, it is necessarily a district in which an election cannot be held to fill a vacancy occasioned by his resignation. The consequence is that upon the very face of the certificate itself we are shown that an election was held in a district in which General Garfield's resignation could was held in a district in which General Garfield's resignation could have occasioned no vacancy, and so far as the making of a prima facie case is concerned the certificate destroys itself by its own recitals.

I do not desire, however, to press this point so as to prevent Judge Taylor from being sworn in. I have no objection to his taking his seat, because the matter can soon be investigated by the Committee on Elections, and because it is open to dispute whether the certificate makes a prima facie case for the person presenting it. Besides, there is neither full time nor proper opportunity now for the House to hear the whole argument which may be made upon this question. But, before I conclude what I have to say, I desire to call attention to a remark of my colleague, [Mr. McKinley,] who says if we hold there is no vacancy either in the old or in the new district Ohio will only be entitled to nineteen Representatives, while under the apportionment act of the Congress of the United States it is entitled to twenty Representatives. The Legislature of the State of Ohio by making mistakes might reduce the representation of Ohio to ten. It is not a question for Congress to determine; it is a question for the is not a question for Congress to determine; it is a question for the Legislature, and as that authority has only made provision for nine-teen Representatives on the floor of this House, Ohio is only entitled

The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] states there is a va-cancy practically in all the districts of this State because, with the exception perhaps of two, all the districts have been changed by the law of 1880. It is true these districts were changed, but it is true that all the present members from Ohio were elected Representatives from that State by districts which had at the time of the election a legal existence and in which the election was held under the authorlegal existence and in which the election was held under the authority of statutory provisions; while here in this case the election has been held in a district which has not existed since February, 1880, which does not now exist, and where the meeting of the people to vote was a mere voluntary assemblage of those who had a fancy to vote for a Congressman on that day.

I now withdraw my objection to the swearing in of Judge Taylor, but move that the credentials be referred to the Committee on Elec-

Mr. CONGER. It has often been remarked that the title of a bill merely stating the number of the section to be amended without stating the subject-matter to which it related gave no information to the ing the subject-matter to which it related gave no information to the

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that the title which has been read does give information as to the subject-matter of the bill.

Mr. CONGER. Only as regards the latter part.

Mr. PAGE. I will state to the gentleman from Michigan that the subject of the bill is fully expressed in the title.

A MEMBER. Let the bill be read.

INTEROCEANIC CANAL.

Mr. CRAPO introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 345) declaring the policy of the United States in reference to an interoceanic canal; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. CRAPO. I ask that the resolution be read at length.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives, &c., That the construction of an interoceanic canal connecting the waters of the Atlantic and Pacific by means of foreign capital under the auspices of and through a charter from any European government is hostile to the established policy of the United States, is in violation of the spirit and declarations of the Monroe doctrine, and cannot be sanctioned or assented to by this Government; that the United States will assert and maintain such control and supervision over any interoceanic canal as may be necessary to protect its national interests as a means of defense, unity, and safety, and to advance the prosperity and augment the commerce of the Atlantic and Pacific States of the Union.

The SPEAKER. The reference indicated by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CRAPO] on the back of this resolution is to the Committee on Foreign Affairs. The Chair thinks it should go to the special Committee on the Interoceanic Canal.

Mr. CRAPO. This is a matter of international as well as national importance, and, in my judgment, should go to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

The SPEAKER—There has been a good description of the committee on the committee on the speaker.

The SPEAKER. There has been a special committee raised on this subject in each House, as the Chair believes. The Chair has no wish in the matter, but simply directs the attention of the House to the fact. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. PAGE. It properly belongs to the Committee on the Interoceanic Canal, a committee specially created for the consideration of Mr. KING. That committee already has charge of this matter.

Mr. CRAPO. The Committee on Foreign Affairs is considering questions and has reported a resolution now on the Calendar touching the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, which in some degree involves questions which are involved in this resolution.

Mr. KING. I would inform the gentleman from Massachusetts that the special committee appointed to take charge of this subject has already under consideration the treaties bearing on it; and I think the jurisdiction of that committee covers this subject. I move, therefore, that the resolution be referred to the Committee on the Interoceanic

Mr. PAGE. The Committee on the Interoceanic Canal not only has had this subject under consideration but has instructed the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. KING] to report a resolution similar to the reso-Intion just read.

Mr. COX. I move to amend by referring the resolution to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

The SPEAKER. That is the original suggestion of the gentleman introducing the resolution. The motion before the House is that made by the gentleman from Louisiana, [Mr. KING,] to refer the resolution to the Committee on the Interoceanic Canal. It is not necessary therefore, for the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] to make sary, therefore, for the gentleman from New York [Mr. Cox] to make

mr. COX. Mr. COX. I desire to say a few words on this subject. As my friend from Louisiana, [Mr. King,] a member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, is aware, that committee has already reported a resolution to carry out the very object contemplated by the resolution now presented. The American Republic is to-day disgraced because Congress does not act on the resolution which we have reported, and which is now on the Calendar. Let us act on that. Let the House fix some time and consider these questions before it be too late. I do not care particularly whether this resolution goes to the special committee of which my distinguished friend from Louisiana is chairman, mittee of which my distinguished friend from Louisiana is chairman, or to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, who have made a very elaborate report on the subject; but if it goes to any committee it should go to that one which has a special interest in our foreign affairs, and all questions arising under treaties. To this committee all such matters have been referred except those that are merely commercial. Let the House fix some time for the consideration of this subject and we will notify Mr. De Lesseps that the American people are still alive.

Mr. PAGE. I call for the reading of the resolution under which the special Committee on the Interoceanic Canal was appointed.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That a select committee of eleven members be appointed, whose duty it shall be to examine into the subject of the selection of a suitable route for the construction of an interoceanic ship-canal across the American Isthmus; that all petitions, memorials, resolutions, bills, and reports on such canal or other mode of facilitating communication between the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans be referred to that committee; and that they have authority to report to the House at any time such legislation as may be best adapted to secure such communication between said oceans.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, what is the question now pending?

The SPEAKER. The original proposition of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CRAPO] who introduced this joint resolution was to refer it to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. KING] has moved, as an amendment, to refer the resolutions to the Committee on the Interoceanic Canal. Now the solution of the question as between these two committees can be reached by a principal section to the committee.

mittees can be reached by a single vote on the amendment.

Mr. CONGER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say that a year ago and more the authorities of the United States and the members of this House were very sensitive about the Monroe doctrine. The special committee on the Interceanic Canal took hold of the Monroe doctrine. trine with remarkable avidity, and thought they had entire possession of that valuable article. Since then the Committee on Foreign Affairs has been quarreling for the possession of it continually; and between the two, neither of them has ever presented to this House any proposition, or, if presented, has ever pressed any action of the House upon it.

Mr. COX. The gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. COX. The gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. CONGER. There has been occasionally a little spasmodic effort here on the part of one or two men, when the subject was brought and the part of one or two men, when the subject was brought up, to keep possession of that valuable antiquity, the Monroe doctrine.

Mr. COX. The gentleman from Michigan is mistaken. The Committee on Foreign Affairs made a very decorous and carefully prepared report, which is now upon the Calendar. We have tried to call it up again and again. And the peculiar business as to our treaty was given to us without quarrel, without any trouble. We reported on it, and the gentleman is entirely wrong.

Mr. CONGER. The gentleman is making his speech in my time, as he usually does, if I ever happen to get the floor. [Laughter.]

Mr. COX. It is more valuable to the House, likely. [Laughter.]

Mr. CONGER. This House committed that subject to a special committee. That committee met and labored until they were exhausted. I happened to be a member of that committee myself, and "know whereof I speak." Every time there has been an effort to report from that committee my friend from New York, who thinks the Monroe doctrine belongs to him by inheritance, devise, or purchase, I know not which, interrupts the progress of our committee and tries to distract the attention of the House and the country in regard to the Monroe doctrine.

Sir, we have possession of the Monroe doctrine as submitted to us by the President of the United States and referred, by the action of this House, to the Interoceanic Canal Committee in the distribution this House, to the Interoceanic Canal Committee in the distribution of the subject-matters of that message. Why should the gentleman want to take that from us? It is the only thing that committee has to rely upon for honor and fame in the report it presents to the people of the United States. My friend from Louisiana, unless he can have the possession of that particular subject-matter committed to him—the Monroe doctrine—would wander about this House a lost man. [Laughter.] I am anxious he should still have possession of it, and that we, his followers on that committee, shall gather around him as we have hundreds of times before, and sustain him in the same effort which we have authorized him to make to have the resolution which we have passed and ordered to be reported to the House brought which we have passed and ordered to be reported to the House brought before the House for action.

Sir, we shall succeed. We have asked that report be made to this House for the last year. Every member of that committee is hopeful, if we stand by our chairman, it will be reported yet to the House, in obedience to our instruction. I for one am unwilling it should be taken away from him.

Mr. HILL. I desire to call the attention of the Chair and the House, Mr. Speaker, to the fact that this resolution does not relate to the construction of a canal, nor does it relate to the selection of a locality for it. It relates exclusively to the foreign policy of the Government. The committee of which my friend from Louisiana is chairman, therefore, has no business with this resolution. The committee was not constructed for the purpose of considering any such resolution as this. It belongs, on the contrary, to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. COX. I desire to say, Mr. Speaker, I am informed by the journal clerk of the House that these matters were referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, under the distribution of the President's message. These matters are entirely dehors the record.

message. These matters are entirely dehors the record.

Mr. KING. I wish to state to the gentleman from New York he is somewhat in error. In the first place, Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Interoceanic Canal has had ready, for nearly a year, a resolution unanimously adopted by that committee, and which has been again and again pressed on the attention of this House, and yet, to the shame of the American people, has never been adopted, and indeed no action taken upon it whatever. This country once was redolent with the expression of opinion on that important international question, but this House could not be brought to give any yets upon it

My friend from New York is mistaken when he says all questions relating to that interest have been referred to the Foreign Affairs Committee. Up to this time but one resolution has passed from the jurisdiction of the Committee on Interoceanic Canal to the Canal to jurisdiction of the Committee on Interoceanic Canal to the Committee on Foreign Affairs. The Committee on Interoceanic Canal was appointed especially to cover this subject, and I think this resolution should now be referred to that committee. If the House is now ready, I hold in my hand the resolutions offered by the Committee on Interoceanic Canal covering this question, and will submit them for the action of the House, upon which I will demand the previous question.

Mr. COX. No such resolution as that can be offered now.

The SPEAKER. It is not in order, and this prolonged debate is not in order. The question first recurs on the motion of the gentleman from Louisiana to refer to the Committee on Interoceanic Canal man from Louisiana to refer to the Committee on Interoceanic Canal.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 59, noes 69.

Mr. KING. No quorum has voted.

The SPEAKER. No quorum has voted, and the Chair will order

Mr. Crapo and Mr. King were appointed tellers. The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 64, noes

So the House refused to refer the joint resolution to the Committee on Interoceanic Canal.

The joint resolution was then referred to the Committee on For-eign Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

WIDOW OF GEORGE P. M'CARTHY.

Mr. MORTON introduced a bill (H. R. No. 6579) for the relief of the widow of George P. McCarthy; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. MORTON. This is a bill for the relief of the widow of a deceased soldier who was killed while in the service of the custom-house in New York, and I do not know what committee it should properly go to.

The SPEAKER. Does it relate to the pay of a soldier?
Mr. MORTON. It is in reference to the payment to the widow of a deceased soldier, who was killed while in the service of the United States in the custom-house in New York. It proposes to appropriate the sum of $5,000 to his widow in view of the facts.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of the opinion that it should properly be referred to the Committee on Pensions. If it should hereafter be found that the reference is improper the committee can report it back and it can be otherwise referred.

The bill was then referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

The bill was then referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

JOHN B. TRAINER.

No. 6597) granting a pension to Phillip New Decker, late a private in Company C, One hundred and twenty-second Regiment Ohio Volunteers; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be privated. sions, and ordered to be printed.

A. M. COCHRAN.

Mr. WELLBORN introduced a bill (H. R. No. 6598) for the relief of A. M. Cochran; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

UNITED STATES COURTS AT DANVILLE, VIRGINIA.

Mr. CABELL introduced a bill (H. R. No. 6599) to change the time for holding circuit and district courts of the United States for the western district of Virginia, held at Danville, Virginia; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

GEORGE W. NEUMAN.

Mr. BOUCK introduced a bill (H. R. No. 6600) for the relief of George W. Neuman; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

HENRY FINK.

Mr. DEUSTER introduced a bill (H. R. No. 6601) to reimburse Henry Fink, United States marshal of the eastern district of Wis-consin, for money paid in satisfaction of judgments rendered against him; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

TREATIES WITH GERMAN STATES.

Mr. DEUSTER also introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 348) terminating the existing treaties between the United States and the North German Confederation and several German States now composing the German Empire in regard to citizenship, and providing for the negotiation of a new treaty; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

A. G. SHAW.

Mr. BENNETT introduced a bill (H. R. No. 6602) for the relief of A. G. Shaw; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

SETTLEMENT OF ARID LANDS.

Mr. BENNETT also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 6603) to encourage settlement upon the arid public lands in the Territory of Dakota, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Public Lands, and ordered to be

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The call of States and Territories having been concluded, the Chair will now recognize gentlemen who were not in their seats when their States were called, for the introduction of bills, &c., for reference and printing.

PRAIRIE COUNTY, ARKANSAS.

Mr. DUNN introduced a bill (H. R. No. 6604) to indemnify Prairie County, Arkansas, for the destruction of public buildings, during the war, by the United States Army; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be SOLOMON SPITZER.

Mr. BLISS introduced a bill (H. R. No. 6605) for the relief of Solomon Spitzer; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

MRS. AMIRA KING.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 6606) granting a pension to Mrs. Amira King; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

ENLARGING GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE.

Mr. WILSON, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That the Committee on Printing be directed to ascertain and report to this House whether there is any necessity for enlarging the buildings of the Government Printing Office, and, if so, that they report the extent and probable cost of such additional buildings as may be necessary.

SYMPATHY WITH IRELAND.

Mr. CALKINS, by unanimous consent, submitted the following; which was read, considered, and unanimously adopted:

Be it resolved by the House of Representatives, That the sympathy of this House be, and it is hereby, extended to the unhappy laboring classes of Ireland in their efforts to effect a reform in the present oppressive tenant system prevailing in that country.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. ALDRICH, of Illinois, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills,

Mr. ALDRICH, of Illinois, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (S. No. 533) for the relief of Charles W. Abbot, a paydirector, and W. W. Barry, a passed assistant paymaster, in the United States Navy;

An act (H. R. No. 3921) to amend section 2238 of the Revised Statutes, in relation to fees for final certificates in donation cases; and An act (H. R. No. 5918) granting a pension to Thomas Pettijohn.

DOCUMENTS FROM FRANCE.

Mr. COX. I ask unanimous consent to report from the Committee on Foreign Affairs for consideration at this time a resolution as to the establishing of a change of documents between the Chamber of Deputies of the French Republic and the House of Representatives. The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas there has been presented to the House of Representatives, through Hon. Samuel J. Randall, its Speaker, a letter from the Sceretary of State, transmitting a communication from M. Léon Gambetta, the President of the Chamber of Deputies of the French Republic, in relation to an exchange of documents between that body and our own, and the package of documents having been presented and received: Therefore,

Be it resolved. That the honorable Speaker of the House of Representatives be authorized to establish a system of analogous exchanges of documents between the French and American Republics as a token of good-will between the representative bodies of the two Governments, and in presenting such documents as the Speaker of this House may select and forward to the French Chamber he shall also communicate to its distinguished president the high consideration with which such tenders are reciprocated.

And inasmuch as certain volumes have also been presented to the American Congress illustrating the life of the distinguished historian, orator, and statesman, M. Thiers, whose services to liberty and civilization are especially known to this Republic, and as these volumes are sent to us by the widow of the great French statesman, and as her death has occurred since this donation: Therefore,

Be it further resolved. That the honorable Speaker of this House present, through the Department of State, the sympathy and condolence of the American people upon this great bereavement to the people of France.

Mr. COX. I submit herewith the following letter:

Mr. COX. I submit herewith the following letter:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, December 7, 1880.

Sig: Referring to my letter to you of the 24th of April last, transmitting the first seven volumes of the speeches of M. Theirs, presented by Madam Theirs, the widow of that eminent French statesman, to the Library of the House of Representatives, I now have the honor to forward herewith, at the request of that lady, two additional volumes (VIII and IX) of the work in question for the same purpose.

I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant,

W. M. EVARTS.

Hon. Samuel J. Randall., Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Accompaniments Discours Parlementaires de M. Theirs, volumes VIII and IX.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would suggest that as the resolutions just read relate to different parties, perhaps it would be better to treat them separately.

Mr. COX. If there is any objection to the latter portion I will withdraw it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not make any objection.

Mr. COX. I will make it two resolutions.

Mr. CONGER. I think the first part of the resolution authorizes the Speaker, as I understand it, to establish an international exchange of documents between this country and the Chamber of Deputies.

Mr. COX. Between this House and the Chamber of Deputies.

Mr. COX. Between this House and the Chamber of Deputies.
Mr. CONGER. It seems to me that it should be confined to exchanges between this House and the Chamber of Deputies of France.
Mr. COX. I will say to my friend from Michigan that some of these documents came from Madam Thiers.
Mr. CONGER. I amount proclaims of that control the first part

Mr. CONGER. I am not speaking of that; only of the first part of the resolution.

Mr. COX. No, between the Houses of Representatives of the two countries.

Mr. CONGER. Then I misunderstood the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The question will be first taken upon the proposition relating to the exchange of documents with the French Chamber of Deputies.

That portion of the resolution was unanimously agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is now upon the second resolution, relating to the documents received from Madam Thiers.

The resolution was unanimously adopted.

Mr. COX moved to reconsider the votes just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

RESTRICTIONS UPON ELECTIVE FRANCHISE.

Mr. LOWE. I ask unanimous consent to offer and put upon their passage the resolutions which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas the laws of several of the States of this Union regulate within their respective jurisdictions the exercise of the elective franchise by prescribing certain conditions, taxes, or requirements which are claimed by citizens of those States and by a report of a committee of the United States Senate, in this Congress, to be in violation of the Constitution of the United States and of the rights of citizens thereunder; and

Whereas such regulations of the elective franchise in such States, especially in the States of Rhode Island, Massachusetts, Pennsylvania, Delaware, Virginia, and Georgia, are claimed to be restrictions upon the elective franchise whereby certain citizens are excluded from participation in the right to vote; and

Whereas it is made the duty of Congress to secure to each State a republican form of government, and once in ten years to apportion among the States their shares of representation in Congress pursuant to the Constitution: Therefore, Be it resolved, That a committee of this House, consisting of five members, be appointed by the Speaker to examine into the matters relating to the exercise of the elective franchise in the several States so far as the same may be in violation of the Constitution of the United States or affected thereby; and to report to this House whether such regulations or restrictions of suffrage should diminish the representation of such State or States in Congress pursuant to the fourteenth article of the Constitution, and to what extent such representation should be diminished under the apportionment to be made pursuant to the census of 1880.

And be it further resolved. That said committee shall have power to set dor persons and papers, administer caths, and to employ a stenographer, clerk, and two messengers; and that the sum of $3,000 be, and hereby is, appropriated for the expenses of said committee from the House contingent fund, to be paid on drafts of the chairman of said committee.

The SPEAKER. To what committee?
Mr. LOWE. To the Committee on the Judiciary.
The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the resolutions will be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

GEORGE H. MURDOCK.

Mr. BURROWS, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 6607) for the relief of George H. Murdock; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

REMISSION OF DUTY.

Mr. ROBINSON, by unanimous consent, introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 349) authorizing the remission or refunding of duty on a painted-glass window from London, England, for All Souls church in Washington, District of Columbia; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

ADDITIONAL PAGE IN THE HOUSE.

Mr. BLACKBURN, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Accounts:

Resolved, That the Doorkeeper of the House be authorized to employ an additional House page on the floor, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House for this session.

JOHN NEWS.

Mr. HARMER, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 6608) granting a pension to John News; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour now begins at seventeen minutes before three o'clock; and committees will be called for reports, to go upon the respective calendars.

HOMESTEADERS AND PRE-EMPTORS.

Mr. CONVERSE, from the Committee on the Public Lands, reported back, without amendment and with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 2666) for the benefit of homesteaders and pre-emptors of public lands; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

VETERAN UNION ASSOCIATION, LEADVILLE, COLORADO.

Mr. CONVERSE also, from the same committee, reported back, with amendments, the bill (H. R. No. 6062) donating certain lands in Lake County, State of Colorado, to the Veteran Union Association of Lead-ville, for hospital and burial purposes; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and the ac-companying report ordered to be printed.

R. No. 35) authorizing the name of the schooner Isle of Pines to be changed to George S. Sleight; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

The call of committees for reports was concluded.

ELECTORAL COUNT.

Mr. BICKNELL. I desire now to call up the Senate resolution in reference to the electoral count. I believe it has precedence.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I rise to a privileged question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. Seeing no probability of any very speedy determination of this resolution which appears to block up the way of all other business, I am compelled to move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of taking up the funding bill.

Mr. BICKNELL. I will state to the gentleman from New York and to the House that the debate upon the electoral count is very nearly concluded. I expect to call the previous question at the close of the debate to-day.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. Then I understand the gentleman to state that at the conclusion of to-day's session general debate upon this resolution will cease, and that he will then propose to have a vote taken upon it. Is that his position?

Mr. BICKNELL. My position is that at the close of the debate to-day I shall move the previous question and seek to have a vote upon it.

Mr. CONGER. I do not know by what authority the gentleman states that the debate upon the electoral count is nearly through.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana states that he means to call the previous question.

The SPEARER. The gentleman from Indiana states that he means to call the previous question.

Mr. CONGER. Our tacit assent to his proposition that the debate is nearly through might be thought to bind those gentlemen who wish to talk further on the subject.

Mr. BICKNELL. I made some inquiry and could find only one gentleman on that side who desired to speak further.

Mr. CONGER. It is possible that gentlemen on this side of the House may not have talked as freely with the gentlemen on that side as they would among themselves.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. Well, Mr. Speaker, I give notice that after to-day I shall insist on the question being taken on the motion I have indicated. I yield now with the understanding that the gentleman from Indiana is to demand the previous question at the close of the debate to-day.

Mr. CONGER. I ask why the gentleman from New York [Mr. FERNANDO WOOD] will not press his motion now? We are prepared to aid him to the extent of our ability.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. As a matter of courtesy, I am willing to allow gentlemen on that side of the House to make another speech on a bill which has already been discussed to the exhaustion of the House.

Mr. CONGER. I hope the gentleman's courtesy will not extend to the defeat of an important measure. Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I am not to learn my sense of duty from that gentleman. Mr. CONGER.

Mr. CONGER. The gentleman has told me that before.
Mr. REAGAN. I regret the necessity of having to antagonize the motion of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. Fernando Wood.] but there is a bill of great moment which has precedence in point of order. It has been made a special order; and I now give notice that when the question in relation to the electoral count is disposed of, I shall move to take up the bill (II. R. No. 4748) to regulate interstate

The SPEAKER. The House can determine as to the business with which it will proceed. The gentleman from Texas now gives notice that, when the electoral count has been disposed of, he will call up for consideration the bill to which he has referred.

Mr. BICKNELL. I now call up the unfinished business relating to the electoral count, and ask that the debate shall proceed without further interruption.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Speaker, I am perfectly willing to give way for the funding bill or I will take great pleasure in giving way to my friend from Texas in order that he may move to go into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to take up and consider the interstate-commerce bill.

Mr. BICKNELL. If the gentleman does not desire to speak I can

Mr. BICKNELL. If the gentleman does not desire to speak I can call the previous question now on the electoral count resolution.
Mr. WHITE. I merely said, and my friend will bear with me, that I was willing to give way to the gentleman from New York, the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, for the very proper motion he indicated to go into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering the funding bill. Or, if that is not desired, I am willing to give way to the gentleman from Texas to go into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to take up for consideration the interstate-commerce bill.

A MEMBER. Or appropriation bills.

Mr. WHITE. Yes, or any of the appropriation bills or any other practical legislation now in proper condition to be brought before

Mr. WEAVER. Would not the gentleman give precedence to the interstate-commerce bill?

Mr. WHITE. I have just said so.
Mr. WEAVER. That is, precedence over the funding bill?

Mr. WHITE. I will yield to any gentleman who has charge of any practical legislation.

Mr. BICKNELL. You have not the right to yield. If the gentle-man is not ready to go on with the debate I shall now demand the previous question.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Speaker, I do not desire to trifle with the House while I speak in my own right; yet I recognize some courtesy from my friend from Indiana [Mr. BICKNELL] who has this matter in charge. I have received several acts of kindness from that gentleman, which I am always glad to acknowledge. I have made the observation I did because I am not specially anxious to speak on this question, as I have had the privilege of doing so before; but in the absence of anybody else taking the floor, and there being no other practical question before the House, I shall proceed with some observaions of a general character on the pending proposition.

Mr. Speaker, "speech is silvern, silence is golden." I was impressed with the philosophy of this proverb the other day when the effort was made to press with indecorous haste to speedy passage the pending measure. Temporary silence on this side has secured that freeand measure. Temporary stence on this side has sectred that freedom of debate which I see is rapidly changing the minds of the controlling majority in the House. I trust that the light of a superior wisdom and intelligence will soon shine upon this majority with such effect that they will be perfectly willing to withdraw this measure and substitute another which can receive the cordial support of all fair men here

I said I had no desire to prolong this debate. I had the privilege in common with many of my colleagues here to discuss it somewhat at length just before the close of the last session. The pending proposition and the very intelligent debate had on the subject may be found in the forty-fourth volume of the Congressional Record, page I had the honor of submitting a few observations at that time, and subsequent reflection has not changed my convictions. But pending the advent of that grateful moment when all sides will agree this measure is to be withdrawn and a more practical proposition sub-mitted, I will express a thought or two on the general character of this

WHERE ARE WE?

The tempest-tossed mariner in a period of calm sets his compass, takes his bearing, and ascertains just where he is. Where are we, Mr. Speaker? A presidential election has been held, regularly held accord-Speaker? A presidential election has been held, regularly held according to the forms of law everywhere in the country. The reasonable men in different sections accepted the result, and it was supposed this question was practically settled. But now, on the very threshold of the formal and legal declaration of the result, we find pressed on the attention of the House the pending measure, and the most stubborn and persistent effort made to pass it, so as to place it in the power of and persistent effort made to pass it, so as to place it in the power of the majority now in Congress to change or nullify that result.

It is quite true, sir, this proposition was introduced in the Senate and passed there at the last session and sent, just before the adjournment, to this House for consideration. It was, you observe, carefully made a concurrent resolution, rather than a bill or joint resolution, which would require the approval of the President. This circumstance naturally excited the alarm of the country. This conduct bore on its face the appearance that something extraordinary was intended. It was thought by many the election would be close, and, if so, it was the intention of the majority in Congress to have the result declared according to their wishes and desires. The result of the last election, however, was so decisive that it was thought this proposition would be abandoned and the declaration of the result made in the usual way. The renewal of the proposition now, however, has revived the apprehension of the country.

PRESSING IT NOW SUSPICIOUS.

PRESSING IT NOW SUSPICIOUS.

Why this effort to press this resolution upon this House at this time? Why this effort to press this resolution upon this House at this time? General Garfield is clearly the President-elect for the four years to come. Is not that true? I pause for a denial of this statement from any quarter of the House. All men of all parties in the country away from this Capitol, I apprehend, recognize this result. Why, then, press upon the House and the country the pending question? The House seems to be politically divided on its merits. Why dally with it longer in its present form?

WHAT IS THE MEASURE?

Let us see what it is and inquire the reasons for objection. It is Let us see what it is and inquire the reasons for objection. It is entitled "resolution in relation to joint rule for counting the votes of electors of President and Vice-President." It is proposed to "resolve by the Senate, the House of Representatives concurring, that a certain joint rule be adopted for counting the votes of electors of President and Vice-President." A joint rule, indeed; not a law, requiring executive approval, to regulate in detail the powers of the two Houses in Congress about the constitutional duty to count the votes of the electors in the different States for President and Vice-President. There are certain details merely formal and following only the line of safe precedent which are unobjectionable, such as fixing the time for the meeting of the two Houses and the appointment of two tellers for each House.

But mark you, sir, where begins the vice of the pending proposi-tion. It is provided the certified lists of votes of electors shall be opened by the President of the Senate in the presence of the Senate and House, beginning with the States in alphabetical order, and when so opened shall be handed to the tellers, by whom they shall be read in the presence and hearing of the two Houses. When such cer-tified list has been so read and before another package or list of votes is opened, the President of the Senate shall call for objections to receiving such list and counting the votes therein. If no objection is made, the votes shall be counted. If objection is made, it shall be in writing and signed by not less than two Senators and three members of the House of Representatives in duplicate, one of which duplicates of the House of Representatives in duplicate, one of which duplicates shall be handed to the President of the Senate and the other to the Speaker of the House. The President shall then state the objections in the hearing of the two Houses. He shall then proceed to open any other package from the same State, purporting to contain a list of votes from such State. The same proceedings shall then be had as were had toward the other paper. When all the papers purporting to contain a certified list of votes of electors from a State have been opened, read, and disposed of as recited, the Senate shall withdraw to its Chamber and proceed to consider the objections, and the House of Representatives shall do likewise.

The manner of proceeding in the respective Houses is regulated in detail. When both Houses shall have decided upon the objections they shall again assemble in the Hall of the House and the President of the Senate shall state the decision of each House upon the question so submitted to them. If but one list of votes of electors from any State has been submitted to each House for its decision, such list shall be counted unless both Houses have concurred in rejecting it; but if both Houses have concurred in rejecting, it shall not be counted. If more than one list of votes of electors from any State or paper purporting to be such list has been submitted to each House for its decision and the Houses have not concurred in receiving either of the papers purporting to be authentic lists, the votes on neither of them shall be counted, and the votes from such States shall be rejected, and the announcement of the votes thus counted shall be deemed a sufficient declaration of the persons elected President and Vice-President, and such resultshall be entered upon the Journals of the respective Houses.

A MAJORITY OF EACH HOUSE CAN CONTROL RESULT.

Thus, sir, you observe, by the passage of this resolution, for it is a mere resolution of the two Houses, you place it in the power of the majority in the Senate and House, and this majority is adverse to the President-elect, to prevent the peaceful and orderly declaration of a true and honest result of the election. You will observe that there is nothing in the terms of the resolution indicating the kind of certified lists of electors which may be received and considered by the Houses. The existing law provides the manner of properly certifying the lists of the votes of electors. Under this resolution a paper prepared and certified by the chairman of the State committee of any party from any State may be received, considered, and counted, if so determined by a majority vote of the two Houses. The will of the people legally expressed at the polls in the different States or in any State may be overthrown by a majority vote in Congress. This is a most dangerous power, certainly not in harmony with the theory of our system of choosing our Presidents. Why is this measure of such doubtful constitutionality and dangerous tendencies pressed at this time upon the country? Is it possible that a sinister or ulterior purpose is designed? We cannot be entirely ignorant of current rumor. Many of the opposition papers of the country have declared that General Garfield was not fairly elected, that the vote of some States should be excluded. Are these suggestions seriously entertained by the majority of this House? party from any State may be received, considered, and counted, if so

DEMOCRATIC PARTY NEVER WISE.

I confess I have never known any wise things that the democratic party has done, and seldom known any prudent things they have done; yet, in my most extravagant dreams of their folly, I have never done; yet, in my most extravagant dreams of their folly, I have hever thought the sagacious leaders of this erring party really designed to overturn the clearly expressed will of the people by refusing to count in General Garfield as the incoming President of the United States.

Why, sir, suppose the chairmen of the democratic committees of the States of New York and Pennsylvania were to prepare, with the and regular, and forward them to the Vice-President; under this resolution, as a rule of procedure, the majority in Congress can have them counted as the true returns. Is such an enormity intended?

DOES IT MEAN REVOLUTION?

Let us understand, however, whether the intention in pressing this measure so persistently is to use it adversely to the recent decision of the people at the polls. By its terms we have seen it could be so used. Adopt this rule, and, as I have said, the majority in the Senate used. Adopt this rule, and, as I have said, the majority in the Senate and House can count only those votes they shall determine, and bring that confusion and contention all over the country so much to be deprecated. If this is not designed, postpone the consideration of this proposition and relieve public apprehension. Other measures press upon us. Much practical legislation confronts us. In addition to the appropriation bills for the ordinary expenses of the Government, provision is to be made for our maturing indebtedness. Bills regulating commerce between the States so as to prevent the unjust discriminations in railroad freights, together with a variety of bills for the more satisfactory adjustment and payment of pensions, as well as many other measures affecting the practical affairs of the Government, are upon the Public Calendar. Let us postpone this measure and press to the consideration of the bills indicated. The people have condemned the democracy. The people at the recent election have expressed confidence in the republican party and driven from power the democration of the democratic party and driven from power racy. This agitation only continues partisan excitement and post-pones that composure in affairs so necessary to the happiness of communities and business prosperity.

THE SOUTH COMPLAINS OF AGITATION.

The southern portion of the country for years has been complaining of sectional agitations and partisan contentions as inimical to the return of their wonted prosperity. It is in the power of the Representatives from that section of the country to stop this useless contention immediately. The gentlemen from the South who clamor for practical legislation can step to the front and stop this discussion instantly.

Mr. GIBSON. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania allow me to interrupt him with a single remark?

Mr. WHITE. Yes, sir.

Mr. GIBSON. I desire to state that I offered a bill the other day for the improvement of the Mississippi River—for the improvement of the great highway of this nation—and that objection even to its consideration came from the republican side of the House.

Mr. WHITE. I cannot help that, Mr. Speaker. That was but a cursory act of legislation, a mere incident in our daily career; whereas this, as a question of privilege, is pressed from day to day upon the consideration of the House. No other business can be brought up in preference to it. The point made by my friend from Louisiana, with whom I agree in his efforts to secure legislation for the improvement of this highway, goes for nothing in this connection. Southern gentlemen say they want peace. I listened with interest a few days since to the remarks of the honorable gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. Herberr,] who, in speaking to this question and alluding to a remark BERT,] who, in speaking to this question and alluding to a remark of the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAPHAM] about Mr. Lincoln,

The gentleman from New York says, we have no right to quote Abraham Lincoln here because the democrats have reviled him as an ignorant rail-splitter. Sir, I affirm no man this country has produced has more of the unqualified respect of the democrats of this country, North and South, than Abraham Lincoln; and I hurl back the insinuation that we on this side do not regard his authority as entitled to any great weight on any question. We look upon it (especially we of the South) as one of the greatest misfortunes that ever befel us that Abraham Lincoln fell at the hands of an assassin.

GLAD THE SOUTH BEGINS TO APPRECIATE LINCOLN.

Sir, I am glad the gentlemen from the South are beginning to ap-Sir, I am glad the gentlemen from the South are beginning to appreciate the greatness, indeed grandeur of Mr. Lincoln's character. There never was an hour during the terrible conflict with rebellion that he would not have gathered you under the protecting wings of the Constitution as the F n gathers her brood, but you would not. Now, as time is mellowing the asperities of the past you begin to appreciate his name and fame. "No pent-up Utica contracts" his great character and fame; the boundless continent owns it. We of the North will share this fame with you gentlemen of the South if it will secure public composure. You are of our country and we invite you to share with us the fame of our patriots. The war is indeed over.

Under the sod and the dew,
Waiting the judgment day;
Under the one the blue,
Under the other the gray.
These in the robings of glory,
Those in the gloom of defeat;
All, with the battle-blood gory,
In the dusk of eternity meet.

We may forget everything about the rebellion except that for which we fought, and the great results achieved. I would that the genial, wholesome influence of such a patriotic life as Abraham Lincoln could enter every household of the South as well as their educational and social institutions, so that in their daily life and thought the southern people may be brought in full accord and sympathy with the integrity of the Union and those broad and generous principles of that truer civilization for which our soldiers fought and Mr. Lincoln died.

Such graves as his are pilgrim-shrines, Shrines to no code or creed confined,— The Delphian vales, the Palestines, The Meccas of the mind.

Sir, there never was, possibly, a more auspicious time to break up that "solid South" which is so threatening to future contentment and national harmony. The North entertains no bitter animosities to the South. We have naturally been apprehensive of prejudicial legislation should they get control of the Government. Now, the majority of the people have spoken at the polls and the general policy of a republican administration of affairs has been clearly indorsed. Why should it not be?

HAYES ADMINISTRATION.

The administration just closing has been distinguished for its liberal policy and integrity in all the departments. The revenues of the Government have been honestly collected and as honestly expended. Honest effort has been made to secure the rights of the individual citizen everywhere. The dignity of the nation and the recognized rights of the States have been fully regarded and respected. The atmosphere of the capital city of the nation was never more free from political scandal and the Government of the country never had the greater confidence of the citizen. The impartial voice of future history will record the administration of President Hayes as honest in all its departments and fair to all sections of the country.

DOES THE SOUTH WANT GENEROUS LEGISLATION?

Do gentlemen of the South want generous government for their people? They have had it in the past four years, and as I anticipate the advent of the coming administration of General Garfield I see a government liberal and just to all interests and to all sections. The career in this Chamber of the broad-minded statesman who has been called to the head of affairs should give assurance to all men that justice and equity, good sense and intelligent statesmanship, will prevail in all the departments of Government under the new administration. Let all men welcome its coming and bid it God speed in the anticipated effort to give wise and good government to fifty millions of people.

Why parley, then, over this doubtful measure and excite the fears and apprehensions of the people, who are quietly settling down to accept accomplished results and doing their best to promote the confidence and business contentment of all men in the country?

GENTLEMEN OF THE SOUTH STEP TO THE FRONT.

Let me appeal, then, in a spirit of patriotic duty, to gentlemen of the South to step to the front and stop this senseless discussion which has been worn threadbare in its details. Let it be postponed; let the declaration of the presidential election be made in the regular formal way, that public confidence may be assured and the apprehensions this discussion has excited be allayed.

The Constitution and the law enacted in 1792 in pursuance thereof, together with the unbroken line of precedents in this behalf, indicate the method of precedure. If it is true that there is no intention to interfere with the regular declaration of the result of the election as nnmistakably pronounced by the majority of the electoral votes in the different States and by a majority of the popular vote, then let us postpone without further delay the consideration of this question which is now vexing the public ear.

THIS IS A DELICATE QUESTION-SUGGESTS CHANGES IN ELECTING PRESIDENTS.

This is a delicate question—suggests changes in electing presidents.

No frank man will deny that there are questions of the gravest imports in the pending matter. The broad-minded liberal lawyer in looking at this question may imagine it to be a narrow and technical one. But I grant you that it involves an important constitutional question which can only be met and properly provided for by most deliberate legislation. Our whole system of choosing a President and Vice-President is becoming more and more one of the practical questions of the hour. It engaged the earnest attention of some statesmen now passed from the stage of active affairs. The late Senator Morton, of Indiana, made it the subject of earnest thought and eloquent expression, as will be found in the debates of the Forty-fourth Congress. It is, possibly, wise to abandon an electoral system and vote direct for the candidates. This may come, but not, I trust, until a free election and fair count shall be had in spirit and form in all States of the Union. But I shall never support the direct vote system as long as one party may employ the "Mississippi plan" to give its 90,000 majority in Alabama, its 80,000 in Mississippi, its 100,000 in Texas, and such one sided results. When calmer counsels prevail we will approach that question.

The pending difficulty, however, should be met and settled like some other questions incident to the election of a President of the United States. It naturally grows out of our system of electing a President.

States. It naturally grows out of our system of electing a President. It is one of the natural incidents of our electoral system. This comes to us as one of the delicate questions attaching to a government of the States. Great changes have taken place in public sentiment and in public necessities since the adoption of the Constitution. But the unbroken line of precedents relieves us of any embarrassment when there is no real controversy about the important question to be passed upon in declaring the result of the electoral votes.

PRECEDENTS ABUNDANT.

I shall not vex the ear of this House or encumber the records of our debates with repeating in unnecessary detail the unbroken line of precedents from the establishment of the Government down to of precedents from the establishment of the Government down to 1877. From the time that John Langdon was selected by the first Congress "for the sole purpose of opening and counting the votes cast in the different States by electors" until the passage of the electoral commission bill in 1877 there never has been an interruption of the opening and counting of the certified lists of electors from the different States by the President of the Senate.

Before the famous electoral commission of 1877 there had been appropriate two presidential elections declared. In all without except twenty-two presidential elections declared. In all, without exception, the President of the Senate did, in the presence of the Senate and House of Representatives, open all the certificates and count all the votes. In a few instances, I shall notice, the proceedings were temporarily interrupted, but ultimately the recognized formula was adopted.

After the eighth election in 1816, the count was made in March, 1817, by the President of the Senate. When the vote of Indiana was reached Mr. Taylor, of New York, rose and objected in the joint convention to counting the vote because the electors from that State had been appointed before the State was admitted to the Union. The Senate withdrew, but on information that the House "had not seen it presents to come to supersolution or take any order on the subit necessary to come to any resolution or take any order on the subject," the Senate returned and the votes were counted in the usual manner. Then, after the ninth election, in 1821, while the count was going on by the President of the Senate, objection was made by Mr. Livermore to counting the vote of Missouri. The Senate then withdrew. The House laid the subject on the table, and then requested the Senate to return. The Senate did return, and the count was completed, the President declaring an objection made while he was announcing the result to be out of order. The tenth election, in 1824, was somewhat historical. This being the second instance of a failure to elect by the people there was an election by the House. The result was declared by the President of the Senate, and the resolution of notification adopted by the Senate was

That the President of the Senate pro tempore did in the presence of the Senate and House of Representatives open all the certificates and count all the votes.

The counts for the eleventh and twelfth terms, being in 1829 and 1833, Andrew Jackson's time, were regular, being made by the President of the Senate without any incident.

In the count of the thirteenth election, in 1837, a question arose about counting the vote of Michigan, similar to the objections to Indiana and Missouri. Mr. Clay was then in the Senate, and influenced the disposition of this case as in the instance of Missouri, and the count was made by the President of the Senate. Some question having arisen as to the eligibility of certain electors, it was wisely suggested "that whether the respective electoral colleges or Congress should decide this question ought to be settled by permanent provision.

In the counts of Presidents Harrison, Polk, Taylor, and Pierce no incident out of the usual course occurred.

An instructive incident transpired at the count of the eighteenth election, in 1857. The electors of Wisconsin had been prevented by a snow-storm from reaching the State capitol on the day fixed by law for casting the electoral vote, but voted on the succeeding day. When the vote of this State was reached the effort was made to exclude the vote, but the President of the Senate, Mr. Mason, of Virginia, decided the motions out of order and declared the result. The debates in either House afterward failed to reverse the regularity of this decision.

Then came the first election of Mr. Lincoln, in 1860, and the count in February, 1861, was without any unusual incident. In 1865, after Mr. Lincoln's second election, the usual form of resolution for the House to meet in joint convention was adopted. Prior to the day of counting a joint resolution had been passed and sent to the President, declaring certain States therein named were in rebellion, and excluding them from the electoral college. Prior to this count also there had been passed what is known as the twenty-second joint rule. This rule has been rescinded long since. It has been agreed on all hands that this was a most dangerous one. Its extraordinary character was only tolerated by the abnormal condition of the Government while wrestling with a gigantic rebellion. After the elections of 1868 and 1872, respectively, the counts were made in a condition of affairs sui generis; while the proceedings indicated by the rescinded twenty-second joint rule were conducted, yet the count from the States allowed representation in the electoral college was made by the President the Seates. dent of the Senate. I shall not speak of the count of President Hayes. That was exceptional, and is fresh in public recollection.

THESE PRECEDENTS INDICATE PROPER COURSE.

Thus, sir, it is seen the history of the Government is resonant with examples of the method of procedure—no occasion for persistence in pressing the pending measure.

It must be confessed that the change of our population from four millions, when the first presidential election was held, to fifty millions now suggests the propriety of meeting all contingencies of conflict in our political system, so that the machinery of government may be administered without friction.

PARTISAN MAJORITY UNSAFE WITH THIS MEASURE.

Much must be trusted to the people; but I would trust more to law than to the ipse dixit of partisan majorities. While I agree with the distinguished gentleman who has charge of this measure, and with many gentlemen who have participated in this debate, that some provision is necessary, I submit that it is unwise and dangerous to allow a partisan majority to declare, by a mere resolution, the manner and method of passing upon controverted questions re-lating to the electoral count, to try, in short, contested presidential elections.

the manner the Legislature of each State shall direct, it is to be taken as granted that the State Legislatures will perform their duties and make such direction as only qualified men shall be returned as electors.

I grant you this is a practical question, and it has been but re-echoed in the debate in this Forty-sixth Congress. I admit it is a difficult question to answer. And I should vote for a judicious law to provide for a method of determining this and kindred questions relating to our elections for President and Vice-President. This question, indeed, attaches to it the whole theory of the election for President and Vice-President.

JUDICIAL POWER SOMEWHERE.

I care not to refine about the propriety of allowing the presiding officer of the joint convention to exercise judicial power, either alone or in conjunction with the joint convention. I agree that a judicial power, a discretion upon some questions must be exercised by some tribunal at some stage of the electoral count. The Constitution seems to provide no method, except that "the President of the Senate shall, in the presence of the Senate and House of Representatives, one all the certificates and the votes shall then be counted." The open all the certificates and the votes shall then be counted." act of 1792, which is the only law we have upon the subject, defines the manner of certifying the lists and times for meeting, and this was an act almost contemporaneous with the adoption of the Constitution itself; and the unmistakable indications of the clauses of the tution itself; and the unmistakable indications of the clauses of the Constitution and the statutes seem to be that, in the absence of any other provision, the presiding officer himself shall exercise this judicial discretion and pass upon the regularity of the certified lists. But I will gladly vote for a law; and I have taken the trouble to draw up, in detail, not an original measure, but a proposition which in part at least has received the assent of the House. This question was before the United States Senetic the Local Control of the House. tion was before the United States Senate in the last Congress; and a bill which had been framed by the hand of the honorable Senator of Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] was then passed by the Senate. That bill was introduced into the Senate at the last session and referred bill was introduced into the Senate at the last session and referred to the Committee on the Electoral Count. While that is not in all respects the kind of measure I should desire, yet it is a proposition which contemplates the assent of both branches of Congress and of the Executive; and then its constitutionality may possibly be passed upon in collateral proceedings, which every lawyer can imagine may arise upon questions relating to the regularity of the count had under its provisions. If gentlemen on the other side having charge of this proposition will agree to accept as a substitute for the pending concurrent resolution this proposed law, I will give it my cheerful and most earnest support; and if it should receive the assent of ful and most earnest support; and if it should receive the assent of a majority of this chamber I doubt not it will be concurred in by a majority of the other, and can become a law prior to the formal declaration of the result upon the second Wednesday of February, the day provided by the act of 1792.

PASS A LAW.

Let us have a law regulating the count. Many gentlemen question our right to pass a law upon the subject. I realize that there is a want here. There seems to be a casus omissus. But gentlemen in the discharge of their duty here will properly take note of the clauses of the Constitution and try to construe them together. I find among the powers of Congress the power to make all laws necessary to execute the powers vested by the Constitution in any department or officer of the Government. Now, unquestionably, the power to open the returns is vested by the Constitution itself in the President of the Senate. If there is doubt as to the manner in which the vote should be counted and the result declared, the power of Congress to make all laws necessary to carry into effect any powers conferred under the Constitution is ample to justify a legal enactment. I find abundant warrant for this position in the early history of the Government. I hold in my hand what many gentlemen probably have in their desks or in their private libraries—the valuable compilation of proceedings in reference to electoral counts from 1787 to 1876, made by a committee of this House. I find that four several efforts were made by the Congresses immediately succeeding the first count for President to enact a law to regulate the counting of electoral votes. The very first time the matter was seriously questioned was in 1800; and there was then passed a law, which I have here, providing for trying contested elec-tions of President of the United States.

I grant you that Mr. Pinckney, in the debate which was had upon this subject in 1804, raised a peculiar question. And, singular to say, there is remarkable sympathy between his utterances on that occasion and some discussions I have heard here. Mr. Pinckney, of South Carolina, who had been a member of the constitutional convention, was then a member of the Senate, when it was sought to enact a law to regulate the matter of contested elections of President of the United States, the question being the power of Congress to do so. He declared thus:

But it is said is Congress bound to receive every vote of an elector, whether it is constitutionally given or not? Suppose votes are sent for a person not a citizen or not fourteen years a resident of the United States, or not thirty-five years of the electors, or that double returns are made. Who are then to decide? Or has not Congress under these circumstances the power to determine which of the votes of the electors, or that double returns are made. Who are then to decide? Or has not Congress under these circumstances the power to determine which of the votes shall be received or which rejected?

And proceeding he says:

These being the avowed reasons for introducing this bill, I answer them by observing that the Constitution having directed that electors shall be appointed in edent which, I am bound to observe, requires me to vote for a judicious law which may be proposed here to settle this difficult question.

I repeat, I will oppose to the bitter end the passage of the proposed concurrent resolution. I think it vicious in its details. I think it a dangerous exercise of power, I care not how honest individual members of the respective bodies of Congress may be. If we are to have any provision now on this subject, let us have a law—a judicious enactment which will receive the assent of Congress and the Executive—two departments of the Government at least; and then the charge cannot be made that one department is trying to arrogate to itself powers belonging to the others. The power indeed of counting in or counting out a President of the United States overshadows all other powers relating to the different departments of the Government.

I will offer as a substitute for the pending proposition the bill which I hold in my hand; and shall vote for it. If it is defeated, I shall vote to the bitter end against the adoption of the proposition which I hold in my hand; and shall vote for it. If it is detected, I shall vote to the bitter end against the adoption of the proposition lying on our tables, and which my good friend from Indiana is so persistently pressing upon the attention of the House.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Speaker, I shall trespass for only a brief time upon the patience of the House. I am very well aware that the House has become tired of this grave constitutional argument. I have not investigated this question to any great extent. I assure gentlemen on the other side that I shall not attempt to take part in the constitutional argument, because if I did I might subject myself to the same tutional argument, occase if I did I might subject myself to the same criticism that I heard made a short time since upon a gentleman who did speak upon this question. It was said of him that he had made a "great constitutional argument," when a gentleman remarked, "Yes, he is a great constitutional lawyer among sailors, and a great sailor among constitutional lawyers." I do not wish to lay myself open to a similar criticism.

I am at a loss, Mr. Speaker, to understand or to find the motive him that the statement of the same criticism.

which actuates our republican friends in their hostility to this measure. ure. If General Hancock had been elected President of the United states, or if the question were an open one, a doubtful one, I might understand why gentlemen should take the position they do. But there is no one disputing that General Garfield is elected President of the United States. There is no dispute about that. But gentlemen pretend to believe they think the democratic members of this House will question Mr. Garfield's election. Now, I will say to those centlemen that I have yet to hear the first man say anything to the gentlemen that I have yet to hear the first man say anything to the contrary of Mr. Garfield's election, or that he was not to be duly inaugurated. I have no doubt in the world if there were not a republican member in this House, or a republican Senator—if, on the contrary, every member of this House and every member of the Senate trary, every member of this House and every member of the Senate were democrats—that on the 4th of March next Mr. Garfield would be inaugurated President of the United States.

I cannot, therefore, understand, Mr. Speaker, why it is that the republican party in this House has combined to defeat the passage of this resolution. It can only be on one ground. They may wish to make the President four years to come; they may wish to establish a precedent that will aid the republican party four years hence.

I am not very particular about the passage of this concurrent resolution. I think its adoption will not make a precedent that will bind a future Congress. I am not therefore strenuous in my support of a future Congress. I am not, therefore, strenuous in my support of the measure

What I have to say now I wish to say to my democratic colleagues on the floor of this House rather than to the House at large. I want to say to my democratic colleagues on the floor of this House that, if I am not misinformed—and I think I am not—the republican members of this House, in a joint cancus with the Senators, unanimously agreed to use every parliamentary means in their power to defeat the passage of this resolution. That means that they will fillbuster and not vote and break a quorum so as to prevent the passage of the resolution. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BICKNELL] has announced at the close of this debate he will call for the previous question. That will open the ball. The minority on that side of the House will commence their fillbustering tactics to prevent the passage of the resolution. We have got to meet that or back down; one or the other. What have we to gain and what have they to lose? Mr. Garfield is not our President until he is inaugurated. He is their candidate, and it is their candidate who is to be inaugurated, not ours. They proit is their candidate who is to be inaugurated, not ours. They propose, to the exclusion of all important business upon the Speaker's table, to the exclusion of business benefiting the whole country, to table, to the exclusion of business benefiting the whole country, to which we should give our attention, they have resolved to fritter away the time of this House in opposition to this resolution, for what purpose God only knows, but they have resolved to do it. Now, we have to meet them with our eyes open.

On a number of occasions the democratic party, being in the majority, have taken positions on political questions, and they have been met by the opposition with filibustering. The opposition have filibustered, and we have adhered to our resolution for a short time, but we have invariably in the end abandoned our position and backed we have invariably in the end abandoned our position and backed down. We have made a laughing-stock of the democratic party. [Laughter and applause on the republican side of the House.]

I am going to speak plainly. I say to gentlemen on that side of the House that it was not because our cause was not just, but it was because of lack of backbone on this side of the House to stand up to what was right. This warfare is again about to begin. I am not particular about the passage of this resolution. I do not think it will effect much, but I am ready to go hand-in-glove with the gentleman from Indiana in charge of it. If we begin this fight, I am ready to sit here until Gabriel blows his trumpet, or until the 4th of March, and to agree not another bit of business shall be done until we have action for or against the pending resolution. I say to my friends back down before you begin or stay until the end, and if by taking that position our republican friends fail to get their candidate inaugurated, it will be through no fault of ours.

Let us look the matter fairly in the face. Let us not begin this to the exclusion of important business, unless we intend to stay to the end. That is all I have to say, and I address myself particularly to my colleagues on this side of the House. I, for one, have got tired of entering upon political questions which I believe to be right and then backing down in the end. It goes against the grain with me. I am willing to drop this measure so far as I am concerned. I think it makes but little difference. As I said before, Mr. Speaker, I do not believe the passage of this resolution can or will have any effect upon the next Congress. Neither do I believe the action of this Congress in counting the electoral vote after the passage of this resolution will make a precedent that will go for one fig in 1884. If gentletion will make a precedent that will go for one fig in 1884. If gentletion will make a precedent that will go for one ng in 1884. If gentlemen think differently, if they are resolved we shall pass or attempt to pass this measure on our side, then let us resolve that we shall stay here as long as gentlemen on the other side of the House, and that is all I desire to say on this subject.

Mr. DAVIS, of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I do not propose to enter into a discussion of the resolution which is the pending subject of debate. I desire, however, to say a few things in vindication of the truth of history, rendered necessary in my judgment by a remark made on Thursday last by the gentleman from Maine, [Mr. REED,] who, I regret, is not now in his seat.

I regret, is not now in his seat.

A MEMBER. Yes; he is coming into the Hall.

Mr. DAVIS, of North Carolina. I am glad to know he is present, because what I have to say relates to a remark made by him last week. As I said just now, I do not propose to discuss the resolution. I may, however, suggest that the anxiety which seems to be manifested in regard to it on the other side of the House may result from the inward consciousness that, inasmuch as a bad thing was done in 1876, by which the President of the United States was counted in by fraud and forgery, this side of the House may possibly commit a similar crime.

I can assure gentlemen on the other side that there is no such danger. This side of the House does not follow such wicked exam-danger. This side of the House does not ronow such a well ples. It will not follow such a wicked example as that set for us by the other side in 1876.

Now, sir, on Thursday last I put a question to the gentleman from New York [Mr. Lapham] to this effect: in 1876 there were two names to one of the certificates from the State of Louisiana that were forged. The Constitution makes it the duty of the Senate and House of Representatives to be present at least as witnesses, if nothing more, to the count of the presidential vote. Now, I asked the gentleman from New York this question: If some gentleman cognizant of the fact had announced that two of the names read by the Clerk to that certificate were forgeries would we be obliged to remain here and witness the count? The gentleman from New York was not aware that such a thing had ever occurred, but the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] denied very fully that any vote was counted which was a forgery. On the contrary, he said an examination of the case demonstrated to the committee of which Mr. Potter was the head that the forged certificates were not the ones that were counted. He said the certificates which contained the undoubted and unchallenged signatures were the ones that were counted by the electoral commission and afterward by the two House

Now, Mr. Speaker, there were three certificates from the State of Louisiana submitted to the electoral commission, the first of which was the original certificate containing the electoral vote, the gennine certificate as to the names and signatures, but a defective certificate in form; the second was the certificate of the democratic tilicate in form; the second was the certificate of the democratic electors; the other was the third in the order in which they were submitted to the commission, and that centained the forged names of Levissee and Joffrion, two of the republican electors. This certificate was under the broad seal of Governor Kellogg.

The gentleman from Maine says that that was not counted. I propose to show before I get through that that was considered by the committee, was reported to the House, and was the vote actually counted. First, then, sir, in regard to that I will read from the report of the Potter committee, which the gentleman from Maine has said settles the fact that it was not counted. I will ask the Clerk to read what the fact that it was not counted. I will ask the Clerk to read what I have indicated from the report of the Potter committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Accordingly, before the electoral commission, Mr. Morton moved that the votes in certificate No. 1 (the objections to which, it will be observed, stated nothing as against the form of that certificate, and were doubtless drawn to apply to No. 3 and not to it) be counted, and limited his motion to certificate No. 1. And when, later, the record of the proceedings in Congress, and before the electoral commission came to be made up, this formally correct but forged certificate was in fact wholly suppressed, while a second copy of a genuine but defective certificate was inserted in its place; that is, the record declares that there was before the Congress, and by it referred to the commission, and there considered, the democratic certificate and the genuine but defective certificate of the republican electors, and no others, the latter in duplicate, once by the name of No. 1, and later in the name of No. 3, whereas it is altogether certain that this was not the fact, and altogether probable that the prints which were before the electoral commission were a print of the democratic certificate and two prints of the forged republican certificate, and of those alone; and that nothing whatever was considered or acted upon by the commission or Congress but these; and that instead of it being the fact, as these records state, that Congress and the commission had before them two prints of the genuine but defective, and no other republican certificate, there was before them, and really considered by them, only two prints of the regular but forged—and of no other—republican certificate; and that neither Congress nor the commission ever had an epportunity to or did consider the defects of the genuine certificate at all.

Whether the genuine electoral certificate from Louisians was so fatally defective that its vote could not have been received or not, the parties in interest were entitled to the judgment of the commission upon this, and that judgment they never had. Instead the certificate which was passed upon of the votes for Hayes and Wheeler from Louisians was a certificate made after the law day when the electors were functi officia, and therefore of no validity. But were this otherwise it was still a forged certificate, whether of two or more electors is immaterial. As to two electors at least there never was before the commission for consideration any vote from Louisians at all; so that, absolutely, Mr. Hayes was counted into office at most upon 163 votes; and the declaration of his election is the result of this imposition upon the commission and Congress, or at least upon those members who were not informed upon the subject of the two forged votes attached to a list perfect in form. a tist perfect in form.

THE FORGERY KEPT SECRET.

So entirely secret was not only the forgery but the poet execution of the second set of electronal certificates kept, that except to certain republicans nothing was known of it until more than a year after the election. By accident the forgery of Levissee's name became known, and in the inquiry which followed we have only been able to learn what could be obtained from persons connected in some way with the forged certificates and open to suspicion of participation in or knowledge of that fraud. Of these persons Krilogo became Senator of the United States, Burch remained senator of Louisiana, Brewster surveyor-general, and Joseph captain of police. Conquest Clarke became first-class clerk in the Treasury Department; fill, storekeeper; and Anderson collector; and after this inquiry was begun and the forgery became known of the remaining persons naturally suspected of some connection with it Marks was made collector of internal revenue, Levissee special Treasury agent, and Sheldon counsel for Mr. Sherman. It is also significant that Howard, McKenney's deputy, was appointed to a place in the Post-Office Department on Senator Morton's recommendation. So long as kelly kept silence no provision was made for him; but so soon as it was known that his dissatisfaction with Mr. Hayes's action had made him speak he was conveyed to Washington by a Senate employé and cared for by friends unknown to the committee until he could testify that the forgeries were committed by a man who was dead.

Mr. CONGER. What is that which the gentleman has had read?

Mr. CONGER. What is that which the gentleman has had read? Whose opinion is it, or what authority is it, that he has cited? Mr. DAVIS, of North Carolina. It is the report of the Potter committee, which the gentleman from Maine has stated would show that the forged certificate was not counted.

Mr. REED. I never said the report would or would not show it. What I said was what the evidence showed or did not show; an entirely different matter.

tirely different matter.

Mr. DAVIS, of North Carolina. I propose, before I get through—
Mr. CONGER. I have asked the gentleman from North Carolina what document it is he has read?

Mr. DAVIS, of North Carolina. It is the report of the Potter committee. I have stated that I propose to show, before I get through, that the names were forged. Then I propose to show from the report reported from the eight—the immortal eight—that they based their report upon both certificates, and that one of said certificates contained the forged names. Now, sir, perhaps the gentleman from Maine may take issue with me as to what forgery is. It may be that he and I do not see through the same spectacles. He was one of the Potter committee, and in the minority report signed by him, from which I now quote, in giving a narration of the facts, he says:

It appears that two of the electors were absent, and their names were signed by

It appears that two of the electors were absent, and their names were signed by some other person.

Now, the gentleman from Maine may not regard that as a forgery; but in view of the fact that when these names were signed the persons whose names were signed were away and not present, and the persons who signed them signed them without authority, we would call that down in my country "forgery." The gentleman from Maine calls it "spurious." That is a mild way of putting it. I know it is said sometimes that when a man is guilty of stealing thousands or tens of thousands he is a gentleman, and not a thief or a rogue. It is a breach of trust only; it is a matter of "irregularity" in his accounts. If he be a public officer as Belknap was, and is guilty of bribery and corruption in office, why he goes unpunished. But the little thief who steals a pig to satisfy the hunger of himself and his family is called a thief and a rogue and is sent to the penitentiary. It may be that if the scoundrel had forged these names to an order on a grocery store for a pound of meat he would have been called a forger and sent to the penitentiary; but when he commits a forgery forger and sent to the penitentiary; but when he commits a forgery that affects and determines the rights of forty or fifty millions of American people, it is only called "spurious;" in the elegant language of the report of the minority, it is only "spurious."

But, sir, the report of the majority says there was forgery. I am going to show that the forged votes were counted; but I cannot forego the opportunity to quote what Mr. Butler, who was one of the minority, said. He said this:

The counting in of Mr. Hayes was obtained by a series of gross and unjustifiable irregularities.

That is what he calls it, too, but he adds:

And frauds which cannot be too strongly condemned and reprobated.

In this the whole country ought to agree with him. Mr. CONGER. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him one question?

Mr. DAVIS, of North Carolina. Certainly. Mr. CONGER. The gentleman speaks of forgery as attached to the certificates. Partly that I may understand exactly what he means I desire to ask him if the only charge of forged or spurious names or whatever they may be did not apply to the signatures of the outside of the envelope certifying to the correctness of the return within?

Mr. DAVIS, of North Carolina. Oh, no. I say that the names of Levissee and Joffrion, two of the electors, were forged and that Kellogg, the governor who certified their election, knew, as is shown by the proof, that they were forged; that wherever they occur in certificate No. 3 they were forged.

Mr. CONGER. Does the gentleman say the names were forged in the body of the certificate or on the outside envelope?

Mr. DAVIS, of North Carolina. Wherever they were put—in the inside, on the outside, and wherever they occurred, eighteen times in all, on certificate No. 3—they were forged. [Applause on the democratic side.]

cratic side.]

Mr. CONGER. The gentlemen on the other side applaud because I have an answer to my question. I join in the applause; I have an

Mr. DAVIS, of North Carolina. I am glad the gentleman does join. Perhaps if he had known they were forgeries he would have raised a point of order and had them ruled out, for the gentleman is good on points of order.

Mr. CONGER. Thank you.

Mr. DAVIS, of North Carolina. What I proposed to show when I started out was this: Certificate No. I was genuine in its signature, but defective in its substance and in its form. That certificate was sent up here to Mr. FERRY, as the proof shows, and it was rejected and sent back; and another was gotten up on the 29th of December, but dated 6th December, and to that the names of Levissee and Joffrion, two of the electors, were forged; and that is regular in form but forged in fact.

Now what I say is this: the proofs show that both the certificates 1 and 3 were considered together by the commission, and were accepted and acted upon by the immortal eight. How do I show this? In the first place

Mr. Commissioner HOAR submitted the following order: "Ordered, That the evidence offered be not received."

That is, the evidence to go behind the returns; not because these were forgeries, for I am to show that these forgeries were known only to Kellogg and certain other republicans. The democrats did not know of them. Then—

Mr. Commissioner Abbott offered the following as a substitute for the proposed order:

"Resolved, That evidence will be received to show that so much of the act of Louisiana establishing a returning board for that State is unconstitutional, and the acts of said returning board are void."

That was voted down, the persons voting for it being Messrs. Abbott, Bayard, Clifford, Field, Hunton, Payne, Thurman; while those who voted in the negative were Messrs. Bradley, Edmunds, Frelinghuysen, Garfield, HOAR, Miller, Morton, and Strong-the immortal eight again. Then-

Mr. Commissioner Abbott offered the following as a substitute:
"Resolved, That evidence will be received to show that the returning board of Louisians at the time of canvassing and compiling the vote of that State at the last election in that State was not legally constituted under the law establishing it, in this, that it was composed of four persons all of one political party, instead of five persons of different political parties, as required by the law establishing said board."

That was voted down, the immortal eight again voting "no" while those who voted in the affirmative were Messrs. Abbott, Bayard, Clifford, Field, Hunton, Payne, and Thurman. Then—

Mr. Commissioner Abbott offered the following as a substitute: "Resolved, That the commission will receive testimony on the subject of the frauds alleged in the specifications of the counsel for the objectors to certificates Nos. 1 and 3."

That was voted down, the immortal eight again voting "no."

Mr. Commissioner Abbott offered the following as a substitute:
"Resolved, That testimony tending to show that the so-called returning board of Louisiana had no jurisdiction to canvass the votes for electors of President and Vice-President is admissible."

And that was voted down by the same vote. Again:

And that was voted down by the same vote. Again:

Mr. Commissioner Abbott offered the following as a substitute:

"Resolved. That evidence is admissible that the statements and affidavits purporting to have been made and forwarded to said returning board in pursuance of the provisions of section 26 of the election law of 1872, alleging riot, tunult, intimidation and violence, at or near certain polls and in certain parishes, were falsely fabricated and forged by certain disreputable persons under the direction and with the knowledge of said returning board, and that said returning board. Knowing said statements and affidavits to be false and forged, and that none of the said statements or affidavits were made in the manner or form or within the time required by law, did knowingly, willfully, and fraudulently fail and refuse to canvass or compile more than ten thousand votes lawfully cast, as is shown by the statements of votes of the commissioners of election."

That was voted down by the eight. Then-

Mr. Commissioner Hunton offered the following as a substitute:

"Resolved, That evidence be received to prove that the votes cast and given at said election on the 7th of November last, for the election of electors as shown by the returns made by the commissioners of election from the several poils or voting places in said State, have never been compiled or canvassed, and that the said returning board never even pretended to compile or canvass the returns made by said commissioners of election, but that the said returning board only pretended to canvass the returns made by said supervisors."

And that was voted down by the eight. Again-

Mr. Commissioner Bayard offered the following as a substitute:
"Recoved, That no person holding an office of trust or profit under the United States is eligible to be appointed an elector, and that this commission will receive evidence tending to prove such ineligibility as offered by connsel for objectors to certificates 1 and 3."

That is, the certificate No. 1, which was genuine in point of signatures but defective in point of form, and the forged certificate No. 3. That was voted down, the same gentlemen voting "no" and the

Mr. Commissioner Field offered the following as a substitute:
"Resolved, That in the opinion of the commission evidence is admissible upon the several matters which counsel for the objectors to certificates Nos. 1 and 3 effered to prove."

And that was voted down by the same vote. Thus all attempt to And that was voted down by the same vote. Thus all attempt to get at the truth, all attempt to expose fraud and forgery were evaded and then the question came (Mr. Morton's resolution) as to the count, and there is where the gentleman from Maine gets his authority for saying that only the genuine names were counted. It must be remembered that the names in No. 1 and No. 3 were the same and it will be seen hereafter that both certificates, No. 1 and No. 3, were submitted by the cight to Congress. No democrat knew of the forgeries in No. 2

Mr. Commissioner Morton offered the following:
"Resolved, That the persons named as electors in certificate No. 1 were the lawful electors of the State of Louisiana, and that their votes are the votes provided by the Constitution of the United States, and should be counted for President and Vice-President."

That was the motion of Mr. Morton. Now, there was no discussion as to the forgery of the names of Levissee and Joffrion, because no democrat knew it. No one on our side knew it. That persons on the other side knew it the proof is very conclusive, overwhelming indeed. It was known to all of the six who did sign, or the five, because it is alleged as to one of the six that he too had his name forged. It was known to them that Levissee and Joffrion were not present and did not sign the certificates.

But I am now going to close this branch of the discussion and to clinch the nail by referring to the report made to both Houses of Congress by the immortal eight, signed by

Sam. F. Miller, W. Strong, Joseph P. Bradley, Geo. F. Edmunds, O. P. Morton, Fred'k T. Frelinghuysen, James A. Garfield, George F. Hoar.

This reports sets forth-

That the votes of William P. Kellogg, J. Henri Burch, Peter Joseph, Lionel A. Sheldon, Morris Marks, Aaron B. Levissee—

One of the men whose names were forged-

Orlando H. Brewster, and Oscar Joffrion-

Another man whose name was forgednamed in the certificate of William P. Kellogg, governor of said State, which votes are certified by said persons, as appears by the certificates submitted to the commission as aforesaid, and marked Nos. 1 and 3 by said commission, and herewith returned, are the votes provided for by the Constitution of the United States, and that the same are lawfully to be counted as therein certified, namely, eight (8) votes for Rutherford B. Hayes, of the State of Ohio, for President, and eight (8) votes for William A. Wheeler, of New York, for Vice-President.

for Rutherford B. Hayes, of the State of Ohio, for President, and eight (8) votes for William A. Wheeler, of New York, for Vice-President.

There is the report, Mr. Speaker, of the immortal eight, showing that when they reported to the two Houses they based their report upon certificates Nos. 1 and 3, No. 3 containing the forgeries.

It may be that No. 3 was not forged; but the gentleman from Maine says that two of the names were signed by persons not authorized to sign them; or rather were signed by other persons, and the proof shows that they were signed by persons not authorized, because the persons whose names were signed were not present. Now it will be conceded that two of these names were forged. I was surprised to hear that anybody doubted that. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. Reed] cannot doubt it, because he is one of the minority of the Potter Committee reporting that fact.

Now, there is some confusion with regard to the publication of the history made up. The minority report says that the only error that occurred was that by mistake the report contained duplicates of the second or spurious set of certificates instead of copies of both sets. But the report of Messrs. Morton, Miller, Strong, Bradley, Edmunds, Garfield, Hoar, and Frelinghuysen shows conclusively that they did consider both the certificates. Why, sir, some republican gentlemen can mix up falsehood and forgery and fraud together so elegantly that they cannot separate them when the printer comes to make up the history of the facts.

Mr. REED. I am pained to hear this matter opened again: but I tory of the facts.

Mr. REED. I am pained to hear this matter opened again; but I suppose the democratic party has got into a condition upon the subject which may be regarded as chronic. Time seems not to be able to assuage their grief; on the contrary, time but seems to make it grow.

The attitude which they have assumed for the last four years reminds me very much of a dog that I once owned. After going out into the street and getting a complete and thorough thrashing from a bigger and worthier dog he used to come into the house and lay down upon the hearth, and then with one paw rub one damaged ear and growl, and with the other paw rub the other ear and growl, and then he would rub his scarred and unhappy nose and growl, and feel bad generally. [Laughter.] Now, I am in hopes that time, after a sufficient lapse of it, may cure them as it has cured him.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF, of Ohio. The dog is cured now?

Mr. REED. He is dead. [Great laughter.] Now, in what I have to say I pass by the infinite courage of a set of men fresh from the recent election, the closing scenes of which were dignified by a thing which was not only a forgery, but spurious as well, coming in here and bringing up a four-year-old difficulty, one which they themselves have never dead to fee since in any onen field.

and bringing up a four-year-old difficulty, one which they themselves have never dared to face since in any open field.

If the democratic party in its inmost heart ever believed in the charge of fraud in connection with the election of 1876, they ought to have been zealous upon the side that you were on, Mr. Speaker, and ought to have presented to the people for vindication Samuel J. Tilden, the ablest and the keenest man that belongs to their party; and I say that after having had some experience thereof. [Laughter.]

There never was a baser thing in the history of this or any other country than the fraud lamentation, which has been revived so elequently and so melodiously by the gentleman from North Carolina, [Mr. DAVIS.] It was born in sin and conceived in iniquity. The very class of men who spread the charges abroad before the country have [Mr. Davis.] It was born in sin and conceived in iniquity. The very class of men who spread the charges abroad before the country have been proved in the face and eyes of the world to have been themselves men who were attempting to bribe the citizens whom they afterward and contemporaneously slandered.

And the people of this country, after deliberately listening to the testimony which was brought up before the committee which was created for the purpose of proving a fraud, have become entirely satisfied that the only fraud and the only scoundrelism were to be found in the cipher despatches and their attendent history. And it is as useless for the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. Davis] as it is for any other man to endeavor to revive that issue before the American people.

It is astonishing that men who have themselves declined in the face of the world to assume the responsibility of nominating the man who they say was deprived of the Presidency should continue to bring before the people of this country that old and false accusation. These men started out with the declaration that the votes of three States of this Union were counted for R. B. Hayes fraudulently and improperly. So far as South Carolina was concerned they have abandoned their accusation officially, by one of their own committees. So far as Florida is concerned, I have just a few words to say. When the returning-board of that State met—and it was a returning-board which one of their own witnesses, General Barlow, declared to be pure in purpose, in action, and in intention—when that board got together it proceeded to act under the law as laid down by the democratic attorney-general of Florida, who was a member of the board. Under that law they declared that the Hayes electors had 900 majority. When the supreme court of that State passed upon the gubernatorial question, an entirely separate one, they laid down principles of law contradictory of those which the democratic attorney-general had sanctioned. The board again met together and canvassed the votes upon that basis, and the result was 200 majority for the Hayes electors. of this Union were counted for R. B. Hayes fraudulently and impropors

After the new year came in, the democrats, for the purpose of crethere he we year came in, the democratic, for the purpose of creating a wrong impression, constituted a partisan board to go over that again; and that partisan board, out of a vote of forty thousand, found a majority of twenty-seven for the democratic party. And yet these gentlemen talk about fraud there.

I have seen hoperable gentlemen on the other side whose distinguishing the content of th

I have seen honorable gentlemen on the other side, whose distinguished character I bow down to every day, vote to thrust out of this House a republican member who had received four thousand majority. And I never dreamed that any of them were bribed or bought. I thought that party feeling might account for that.

Then, when you come to Louisiana, these gentlemen have always said that the votes in the ballot-boxes were those which ought to be counted. Now, you cannot always tell a house from a brick; but you can always tell something of the material of which the house is built by inspecting a portion of it. I had occasion to investigate one parish; and I want to call the attention of the House to certain facts. I want gentlemen to draw their own inferences. I will not draw one, nor will I state a fact that either side can deny or dispute. In the parish of East Feliciana, in the State of Louisiana, in the year between 1874 and 1876, there were fourteen persons murdered; and that fact no man doubts. No man can dispute it. The democrats say that it was on account of cotton-seed stealing and personal diffisay that it was on account of cotton-seed stealing and personal diffi-culties; the republicans say that these murders were political. On those two points men differ; but here are the other facts, equally undis-puted: first, every man who was killed was a republican; second, cotton-seed stealing and murder simultaneously ceased on election day; third, in 1874 that parish cast 1,600 republican votes against 800 democratic—two to one; and in 1876, after these murders had taken place, there were 1,700 registered democratic votes, 400 unregistered, and one for Rutherford B. Hayes.

Mr. DAVIS, of North Carolina. Will the gentleman allow me to

Mr. DAVIS, of North Carolina. Will the gentleman allow me to ask just here a question which is entirely germane?

Mr. REED. I will in a moment; the gentleman will excuse me

Now, if any man lives who says that that vote ought to be counted, with those facts undisputed, he must have a different idea of American institutions from any which I have.

Mr. WARNER. Ought it to have been counted for Nicholls?

Mr. REED. I say further that the returning-board of Louisiana had a right, under the law of that State, to throw out that parish; and they did throw it out. I leave gentlemen to draw the inference as I now come to the immediate subject which has provoked this dis-

Mr. FINLEY. Will the gentleman allow me one question?
Mr. REED. I will listen to the gentleman.
Mr. FINLEY. I do not wish to interrupt the gentleman.
Mr. REED. Well, it does very much interrupt me. If I be allowed

Mr. REED. Well, it does very much interrupt me. If I be allowed to finish, I will be happy then to answer any question.

Mr. FINLEY. I would like the gentleman to explain one thing. He speaks about occurrences between 1874 and 1876 in Louisiana. Is it not a fact that a committee of this House made a report, in which Mr. Foster and Mr. Phelps, both republicans, joined, that in 1874 the election in Louisiana was free and fair; that there had been no intimidation? And did they not in that report say substantially. that all the fraud that had been committed was committed on the republican side?

Mr. REED. I answer very distinctly, that was the very year when the republican vote in that parish was two to one as compared with the democratic vote. I think it very possible that that may have been a fair election. Now, having embalmed that fly in the liquid amber of my discourse, I wish to proceed. [Laughter.]

I heard the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DAVIS] several days ago announce to this House (or I thought I heard him) that certain forged votes were counted, which rendered the election of Mr. Hayes invalid; but the debate swept on before I had an opportunity to verify my impression. Afterward, however, I heard him repeat the statement; and thereupon, having some knowledge of the facts. I ventured to state what was the truth—a truth which he has facts, I ventured to state what was the truth—a truth which he has not disturbed in the slightest degree. Now, let me state to this House what were the facts with regard to those certificates. There was one set of certificates from Louisiana having separate lists of the votes for Vice-President on one page, and there was another set which had separate lists upon separate pages. The democratic party contended that certificate No. 1, as I will call it, was incomplete, and therefore should not be counted. As to certificate No. 2, we found (and I think the testimony proves it) that two of the names on that certificate, made subsequently, were forged. I do not use the term in a technical sense; and I suppose the reason why the minority of the committee used the term "spurious," which seems rather gentle to democratic ears, was because they were thinking of the technical meaning of terms. meaning of terms.

Now, when this question came up, Senator Morton, who was a member of the electoral commission, moved that certificate No. I should be the one reported by the electoral commission to the two Houses. Thereupon "the immortal eight"—to whom my friend from North Carolina renders such deserved tribute—"the immortal eight" voted that this certificate should be reported to the two Houses. Accordingly it was reported and was counted.

Certificate No. 1 contained the true vote of Louisiana and contained the true signatures of all its electors. In fact and in law there was not the slightest occasion for the second certificate. first certificate was perfectly good under the Constitution and under the laws, and was so decided by the vote of the electoral commis-

How has the mistake arisen on the part of the gentleman from North Carolina? Simply in this way. In the report of the electoral commission's action, which is bound up in a separate volume, the clerk who had charge of the preparation of it went to the present clerk of the Supreme Court, then or lately clerk of the commission appointed by its president, Judge Clifford, and asked him to give him copies of the various certificates which were printed for the use of the commission. When the commission got through, these certificates were placed in packets separately, as the clerk of the commission supposed, but instead of that some two of the packets contained the same, and the result was the first and second certificates are printed identically and are the same in the book which gives a record of this thing and which was published under the auspices of Congress. So thing and which was published under the auspices of Congress. So that one of the certificates does not appear at all. There can be no question about the honesty or integrity or fair-mindedness of the clerk of the commission. It was simply one of those mistakes which are sometimes made in compiling books.

I repeat what I have said, Mr. Speaker, that the votes which were actually counted under the motion of Senator Morton were the true votes of the State of Louisiana and were the certificates of votes which were signed by the electors themselves.

I shall now be happy to answer the question of the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. DAVIS, of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I do not desire to enter into a debate upon the general iniquity that attended the elections in Louisiana and Florida. In that I am sure the gentleman from Maine would have a decided advantage of me, as he certainly has in point of melodious voice. [Laughter.] In those two respects I am sure I should never attempt to compete with him.

But the point at issue between the gentleman and myself is this:
whether two names were forged to one of the Louisiana certificates, and whether they were reported to the House and sent to the Commission and acted on and reported back by the commission. I have had the record read, and the record shows that Nos. 1 and 3 (No. 3 being the one which contained the forged names) were before the commission, were considered, and acted on.

The gentleman has had a great deal to say about Louisiana. There is one curious fact, that in Louisiana and Florida the same votes cast could make a democratic governor and a republican President. [Laughter and applause.] Sir, there is something about this, I confess, which ought not to be stirred because a stench comes up from it which should nauseate every honest man in the land. But I propose, Mr. Speaker, to call attention now to one other fact.

I said in my former remarks that some gentlemen were cognizant of these forgeries. I propose to read from the report of the Potter committee, and it is verified by the testimony of Kellogg.

By the way, Mr. Speaker, let me observe just here, there were about seventy or seventy-five men connected in various ways with the vil-lainies that attended the electoral count of Louisiana, and nearly every one of them has been rewarded with a good fat office, higher or lower. Every one of them, I believe, with one exception. Every one of them occupies some official position. Some of them were known to have been engaged in these forgeries and frauds. They have been rewarded, and this fact of forgery never would have come out but for the further fact that one Kelley, who was doorkeeper and knew these things, seeing that all the other men (four of them called "villains" by Mr. CARPENTER) were rewarded, thought he was entitled to reward to and because they would not sightly a sellection. ward too, and because they would not give him an office he exposed the forgery eighteen menths after it had occurred. But for the refusal to give Kelley a good fat office there never would have been any knowledge of the fact at all outside of certain republican leaders. There never would have been any knowledge that there had been a forgery, except among republicans.

But what does Kellogg say. I will read from the report of his testimony as given by the Potter committee. I read from their report:

Beyond this it is to be observed that while Kellogg knew of the forgery, and took great care to prevent the fact getting out, he yet let the republican managers know that there was something wrong about the second set of certificates, and as there was nothing wrong on their face, that wrong must have been in their execution. He says he told Morton that the second set was made after the law day, and must not be depended upon, and that the first set was all right, and to stand on that. But the "leading friends in Washington," who had declared on the 25th of December that the certificates first made on the law day were defective, and that separate ones must be prepared, knew as soon as they saw the second set that they were antedated. Kellogg's statement could not, therefore, have been meant to give Morton that information. But in whatever form given, whether by a word, a shrug, a look, or an inflection of the voice, even if Kellogg went no further, it would have served to give that astate manager to understand that while the new certificates were important for the commission to consider, it would never do let them stand in the record, nor leave it to be thereafter discovered that the presidential election depended upon them.

Now Mr. Speaker, I represe law the action of the other side all

Now, Mr. Speaker, I repeat, by the action of the other side all attempts to expose these frauds were evaded. The eight—the immortal eight—refused to allow it to be proved before the commission that fraud, corruption, and bribery existed in obtaining the certifi-cates from Louisiana. They refused to permit it to be shown that under the laws of the United States and the Constitution of the United States there were electors there who were not eligible and who had no right to vote. These facts stand out, and the gentleman from Maine can never meet them. The men who committed these forgeries are indorsed by his party.

I have nothing to say in defense or palliation of fraud. If there has been any on the democratic side, the difference between the gentleman from Maine and myself is this, that I always denounced Certainly the democratic party is not skilled in it-it has never profited by it.

Men guilty of fraud anywhere ought to be punished, and no defense or quasi-defense for these iniquities can stand when the truth is brought to bear upon them. The public ought to visit the political knave with the same condemnation and scorn that it would inflict upon any other knave. No code of political morals ought to be recognized or tolerated by the public, if it be in conflict with virtue, and truth, and justice. Some men in a great political party which has had control of the country for many years seem to have acted upon a different view.

Mr. SPRINGER rose.

Mr. BAYNE. I move that the House do now adjourn.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The Chair takes the liberty of presenting, by consent, certain executive documents which he thinks should be referred to the appropriate committees at this time.

SAWYER'S CANISTER-SHOT.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, relative to the value of Sawyer's canister-shot.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. Speaker, I think that should go to the Commit-

Mr. Morist. Mr. Speaker, I think that should go to the Committee on Appropriations.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it properly goes to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. BLOUNT. I object to its being committed to the Committee on Appropriations, as it refers to nothing which that committee has cognizance of.

Mr. MORSE. I think differently from the Chair. I think it ought

The SPEAKER. The communication will be read.

The communication was read at length.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it is evident on the face of it that this looks to legislation. The Committee on Appropriations are specially prohibited by Rule XXI, third clause, from making appropriations except in obedience to law. This proposition looks to legislation or the passage of a bill granting payment for what seems to be a claim. The Chair therefore thought properly that it should go to the Committee on Military Affairs or else to the Committee on Claims; but certainly it should not go to the Committee on Appropriations, for that committee is debarred by the absolute language of the rule from making an appropriation except in obedience to law. This provides for the making of a law to meet a certain case, and therefore cannot belong to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. SMITH, of Pennsylvania. I think it should go to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. MORSE. If it does not belong to the Committee on Appropriations, as it is in reference to a patent, it seems to me that it priations, as it is in reference to a patent, it seems to me that it should properly go to the Committee on Patents.

Mr. BLOUNT. There is no trouble about the patent. That has been already granted. The party is not satisfied with the amount of pay, and wants an additional sum of money.

Mr. SMITH, of Pennsylvania. I move that it be referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. SPARKS. I think that is where it should go.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly the letter was referred to the Committee on Claims.

IMPROVEMENT OF SCITUATE HARBOR.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, relative to the improvement of Scituate Harbor; which was referred to the Committee on Com-

CLAIMS UNDER ACT OF JULY 4, 1864.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting estimates for fees for settling claims under the act of July 4, 1864; which was referred to the Committee on War Claims.

ACCOUNTS OF DISBURSING OFFICERS, UNITED STATES ARMY.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting report of investigation of accounts of disbursing officers, to accompany the annual report of the Inspector-General for the year 1880; which was referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the War Department, and ordered to be printed.

PRIVATE LAND CLAIMS, NEW MEXICO.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting reports of the surveyor-general on private land claims in the Territory of New Mexico; which was referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

ICE-HARBOR, SAINT LOUIS, MISSOURI.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, relative to a proposed ice-harbor at Saint Louis, Missouri; which was referred to the Committee on

REPORT TO ACCOMPANY FORTIFICATION BILL.

Mr. BAKER, by unanimous consent, submitted a report from the Committee on Appropriations, to accompany the fortification appropriation bill; which was ordered to be printed, and recommitted to the committee.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Leave of absence was granted, by unanimous consent-To Mr. LAPHAM, of New York, for two weeks from this day, on account of important business; and To Mr. Davis, of Missouri, indefinitely, on account of sickness.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SPARKS. I demand the regular order. The SPEAKER. The regular order is the motion to adjourn. The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at four o'clock and fifty-two minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following memorials, petitions, and other papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows, viz:

TUESDAY, December 14, 1880.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. J. BULLOCK, D. D. JAMES T. FARLEY, a Senator from the State of California, appeared in his seat to-day

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

JOINT COMMITTEE ON PRINTING.

The VICE-PRESIDENT appointed, pursuant to the provisions of the Revised Statutes of the United States, Mr. Whyte, Mr. Ransom, and Mr. Anthony as members on the part of the Senate of the Joint Committee on Public Printing.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in compliance with the requirements of the river and harbor act of March 3, 1879, a communication from the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, relative to examinations and surveys made under his direction; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter from the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, submitting a project of Captain O. H. Ernst, Corps of Engineers, for the application of the appropriation of $50,000 for an ice-harbor at Saint Louis, Missouri, made by act of June 14, 1880; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a report from the Quartermaster-General of the Army, respecting claims pending in his office on account of the act of July 4, 1864, and acts amendatory thereof; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. COCKRELL presented the petition of J. H. Fillmore and others, midshipmen United States Navy, praying to have a defined rank in the service; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. HARRIS presented the petitions of John Keithley, John Brickley, and M. Frederick, citizens of the District of Columbia, praying for compensation on account of damages caused by changes of the grade of streets; which were referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. HOAR presented the petition of the Atlantic Cotton Mills, of Lawrence, Massachusetts, and the Indian Orchard Mills, of Springfield, Massachusetts, manufacturers of worsted and woolen textiles, praying for the early enactment of a national bankrupt law; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. RANDOLPH, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 460) granting the right of way to the county of Warren, in the State of Mississippi, and to the Memphis and Vicksburgh Railroad Company through the United States Cometery tract of land near Vicksburgh, Mississippi, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon, which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. BAYARD, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 196) authorizing the removal of tobacco in process of manufacture, reported adversely thereon; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am requested, and cheerfully comply with the request, to ask leave to introduce a bill, the title of which may not be altogether unfamiliar to the Senate, for reviving and continuing the court of commissioners of Alabama claims, &c., which I ask may be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By unanimous consent, leave was granted to introduce a bill (S. No. 1903) for reviving and continuing the court of commissioners of Alabama claims, and authorizing the adjudication and payment of certain other claims upon the fund created by section 15 of chapter 459 of the laws of the Forty-third Congress; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. ROLLINS asked, and by manimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (8. No. 1904) for the relief of Captain Egbert Thompson, United States Navy; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. PLATT asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (8. No. 1905) changing the name of the First National Bank of West Meriden, in the county of New Haven and State of Connecticut; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. BECK asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to in-

Mr. McPHERSON asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1907) in regard to a monumental column to commemorate the battle of Monmouth; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. WILLIAMS I desire to introduce a bill and in view of the

Mr. WILLIAMS. I desire to introduce a bill, and in view of the importance of the subject embraced in the bill I ask the Senate to allow it to be printed and lie upon the table with a view of my calling it up at some early day and submitting some remarks upon it to the Senate.

By unanimous consent, leave was granted to introduce a bill (S. No. 1908) to prevent the introduction and dissemination of epizootics or communicable diseases of domestic animals in the United States;

ommunicable diseases of domestic animals in the United States; which was read twice by its title.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will lie on the table subject to the call of the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. LOGAN asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1909) to amend the act of March 3, 1877, granting a pension to Esther P. Fox; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. INGALLS asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1910) for the relief of John A. Hart; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Miliwas read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

FITZ-JOHN PORTER.

Mr. LOGAN submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved. That the Secretary of War be directed to furnish at once the correspondence between General J. M. Schofield and Major A. B. Gardner in regard to the board of officers inquiring into the case of Fitz-John Porter.

TELEGRAPH SERVICE.

Mr. MORRILL submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved. That the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads be instructed to inquire whether or not the existing telegraphic lines largely interfere with the business of the Post-Office Department, and whether telegraph service should not be placed exclusively in the hands of the General Government.

CONDEMNED SENATE FURNITURE.

Mr. BRUCE. I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Sergeant-at Arms be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to deliver to the National Association for the Relief of Colored Women and Children for its use such articles of furniture as may be condemned as no longer fit for the use of the Senate.

I presume there will be no objection to this resolution, and I ask for its immediate consideration. Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I do not know that there is any bjection to it, but being a member of a committee that probably has something to say about such matters and that ought to look after them, and that committee having a meeting to-morrow morning. I think the resolution had better lie over. I shall be glad to converse with the Senator on the subject.

Mr. BRUCE. I have no objection to that, of course.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will lie over.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I say to the Senator that I shall be glad to see him and talk to him on the subject.

WILLIAM SELDEN.

Mr. WITHERS. I move that the bill (S. No. 1476) for the relief of the heirs of William Selden, late United States marshal for the Dis-trict of Columbia, be indefinitely postponed. It stands on the Calendar inadvertently. It was reported from the Committee on Claims, and the claim was subsequently provided for in the sundry civil appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

HENRY M. RECTOR.

If it be in order I should like to move to re-Mr. McDONALD. commit to the Committee on Public Lands the bill (S. No. 1064) for the relief of Henry M. Rector.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If that relates to the Hot Springs business, the subject has been committed now for about a year to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

Mr. McDONALD. Not this bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. No, not this particular bill, but if it relates to the matter of Rector's claim to the Arkansas Hot Springs tract, or some part of it, that matter has been referred to our committee, and we have part of it, that matter has been referred to our committee, and we have heard arguments upon the subject, and have them now under consideration in the Committee on Private Land Claims. I am perfectly willing myself to have the Committee on Private Land Claims discharged and let the Committee on Public Lands take the whole affair.

Mr. McDONALD. This bill came from the Committee on Public Lands, and is now on the Calendar. On account of some changes that have taken place since it was reported it has become necessary that it should be reconsidered by the Committee on Public Lands. For that reason I have moved to recommit the bill to the Committee on Public Lands. on Public Lands.

on Public Lands.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What I am trying to get at is, whether the substance of the bill embraces the claim of Rector and his assignees to the Hot Springs tract in Arkansas.

Mr. GARLAND. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. EDMUNDS. With pleasure.

Mr. GARLAND. I will state, for the information of the Senator from Vermont, that this is a different proceeding altogether. The bill to which the Senator from Indiana refers relates entirely to the relief of Rector as to entries that he has made under the commission organized under the act of March 3, 1877. The bill to which the Senator from Vermont refers as being before the Committee on Private Land Claims is in reference to the entire claim of Rector under the New Madrid grant, which has been virtually ruled out by the finding of the commissioners. Rector has proceeded to make entries under the finding of the commission, and this bill is for his relief as to them.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It does not touch the Hot Springs question?
Mr. GARLAND. It does not touch the Hot Springs question at all.
Mr. EDMUNDS. Then there is no double work about it?

Mr. GARLAND. No, sir.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I hope my friend from Indiana does not understand that I am opposed to the Committee on Public Lands considering that subject. I only thought it was not necessary for two committees to be struggling to do the entire work at the same time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Indiana, that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on Public Lands? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

GEOLOGICAL SURVEY.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I desire to give notice that after the disposal of the regular order, the Fitz-John Porter case, I shall ask the Senate to take up House joint resolution No. 116, relating to the Geological Survey, which I hope to get up to-morrow morning directly after the regular morning business.

SENATOR FROM LOUISIANA.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I desire to give notice that on Thursday next, or at some early day thereafter, I shall ask the Senate to take up and consider the resolution reported from the Committee on Privileges and Elections relating to the election of Senator from the State of Louisiana.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Delaware to the fact that that resolution has been rendered totally inoperative by the death of Mr. Spofford, and that the Senate has referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections the credentials of a person claiming to have been appointed as his successor under the claim on the part of the governor of Louisiana that a vacancy exists. The Committee on Privileges and Elections have not dealt with that subject; the chairman has called no meeting of the committee for that purpose; and I insist that it is the duty of that committee to inform the Senate what it proposes to do under these circumstances before calling up the resolution.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I desire to say in reply to the Senater from Massachusetts that it will be remembered that there were two resolutions reported from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, one relating to the seat now held by the sitting member, the other declaring that that seat belonged to a different person. There is now on the Calento the Committee on Privileges and Elections the credentials of a that seat belonged to a different person. There is now on the Calendar a resolution which applies simply and exclusively to the right of the sitting member to the seat. I propose simply to take up and con-sider that resolution. I have not called a meeting of the committee for the purpose of considering the credentials of Mr. Manning, which for the purpose of considering the credentials of Mr. Manning, which were referred to that committee a few days ago, because there was standing upon the Calendar another resolution relating to the right of the present sitting Senator from Louisiana to a seat.

Mr. HOAR. The resolution reported by the committee, making the final disposition of that case, was a resolution declaring who is entitled to the seat. The other resolution, declaring that somebody else is not entitled, is a mere incident. Now the person so declared by that committee entitled to the seat is dead. Therefore the committee have indicated to the Senate no final disposition of the subject whatever and they ask now to take up a mere incidental resolution, although the Senate has expressly ordered them to deal with the question of the credentials presented the other day signed by the governor of Louisiana, without dealing with which there can be no overnor of Louisians, without dealing with which there can be no disposition of this subject whatever. Now, does the Senator from Delaware claim that he is obeying the order of the Senate or dealing properly with a great subject by undertaking to take up an incidental and preliminary resolution and shrinking from the main question. The Senate unanimously required of the Committee on Privileges and Elections its opinion as to the title of Mr. Manning, whose credentials have been referred to it to this cent.

have been referred to it, to this seat.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I am very thankful to the Senator from Massachusetts for any suggestions in reference to the duty of the chairman of the Committee on Privileges and Elections; but while I find upon the Calendar resolutions reported from that committee, I feel at perfect liberty to call those resolutions up, even though the Committee on Privileges and Elections have not had a meeting at the present session. Those resolutions have been reported from the committee and stand upon the Calendar of the Senate. I simply desire to call them up and have the action of the Senate upon them. At the proper time I can assure the Senator from Massachusetts the credentials of Mr. Manning referred to us will receive proper consideration at the

Mr. Manning referred to us will receive proper consideration at the hands of the committee.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to ask the honorable Senator if he expects to ask the action of the Senate on that grave subject on the day, or the day but one, before the Christmas holidays, when, as everybody knows, the Senate is always thin, for many members are absent from their seats? It seems to me that not only is the notice in the parliamentary condition of the Senate, its manner, not a proper one, but that the time is one which the Senator from Delaware on reflection will not think he ought to fix.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I desire to say in reply to the Senator from Massachusetts that my only purpose this morning was to give notice, that nobody might be taken by surprise, of my intention on Thursday next, or at an early day thereafter, as I stated this morning, to call up this resolution. I may not be able to get it up on Thursday next, I may not get it up before the Christmas holiday recess, if next, I may not get it up before the Christmas holiday recess, if there should be any recess over the Christmas holidays, of which I have no knowledge. I know what has been the custom of the Senate, but I do not know what will be the present disposition of the Senate in reference to taking any recess at the Christmas holidays. But my object this morning was simply to announce to the Senate that on Thursday next or an early day thereafter I should call up the resolution standing upon the Calendar, and I have done that in order that the Senator from Massachusetts and other gentlemen might not be taken by surprise. It would have been in perfect order this morning to have asked the Senate to take up the resolution to day morning to have asked the Senate to take up the resolution to-day, but I did not want to call up a resolution of this character without having first announced to the Senate my intention of doing so at an

I think the criticism of the Senator from Massachusetts in reference to the course of the chairman of the Committee on Privileges and Elections wholly unwarranted by anything that has transpired.
As I before remarked, I am always thankful to that Senator for any instruction as to the course which I am to pursue as chairman of that committee; still I shall not feel myself bound at all times to act in accordance with the suggestions of the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like the attention of the Senator from Delaware for a moment in respect of the notice that he gave, for the purpose of asking him if he has any objection to making that notice for the first day of the meeting of the Senate after the holidays, or the second day, immediately after the meeting of Congress after the holidays, with the expectation on all sides that we shall devote ourselves to the subject until it is disposed of? My reason for making that suggestion is the well-observed fact that the Senate is not by any means full, and gentlemen who have already expressed their opinions on the subject and whose opinions are known in respect of this most important subject are not now present and are not likely to be here until the regular meeting for business after the Christmas holidays. It is a question of so great importance, not to the sitting member merely—that is the smallest part of it, but in respect of the principles it involves which will cut in a great many directions, but of course I will not go into that—it is so important to all sides of the Senate that it should be settled upon sound, firm principles, that I am sure the Senator from Delaware would agree that the Senate ought to be as full as possible on the occasion of the final disposition of this matter upon its merits. I suggest to him, therefore, whether it would not equally meet his views to have it taken up immediately on the meeting of the Senate after the holidays, with the expectation on all sides that we shall devote ourselves to a fair and careful consideration of it, and settle it upon its merits with a full Senate.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I will say in reply to the suggestions of the Senator from Vermont that I have not acted entirely in accordance with my own wishes in this matter; I have not acted without some consultation with members of the committee of which I am chairman. I did not have the opportunity yesterday to consult the Senator from Massachusetts but I did confer with another Senator on that side as to my purpose. I will, however, let the notice stand as it is. If upon consultation with the committee of which I am chairman they shall consent to the suggestion of the Senator from Vermont, I shall personally have no objection.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That will be the fair thing.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I do not want to act on my own individual responsibility. I simply desire to give notice this morning that on Thursday next or some early day thereafter I shall call up the resolution and ask the Senate to consider it.

Mr. BLAINE. In that convection it wight be well to have the

Mr. BLAINE. In that connection it might be well to have the question of a holiday recess understood, for I have seen it announced in some public newspapers that there was to be no Christmas holiday recess this year. I think the distinguished Senator from Kentucky, [Mr. Beck,] whose eye is on important public business, has given it out that there shall be no vacation of Congress for what are ordinarily called the Christmas holidays. Therefore it might expedite and arrange matters if we could have that question definitely understood. Of course the question as to whether we shall have a recess or not will entirely rest with the other side of the Chamber.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, the Senator from Maine has called attention to some utterances of mine in regard to a holiday recess. I did not then pretend to speak for the Senate nor for any member of it except myself. At the time some newspaper friend asked me what my views and feelings were in that regard. I said then, and I repeat now, that I shall endeavor as far as my vote will have any influence to ask the Senate to sit during the so-called holidays, not on Christ-Mr. BLAINE. In that connection it might be well to have the now, that I shall endeavor as far as my vote will have any influence to ask the Senate to sit during the so-called holidays, not on Christmas Day nor New Year's Day—I believe they each come on Saturday and Congress can have those days for enjoyment and Sunday to rest after the exhaustion of them—but I shall endeavor, if I can accomplish it by my vote, to sit all the rest of the working days of this session. We have only some sixty or seventy working days before this Congress expires. We have an important refunding bill involving many millions, five or six hundred million perhaps, and effecting a reduction of the interest we have to pay to the amount of from tense to twelve million a year; we have the census bill to dispose of; we have all the appropriation bills; we have very important questions relating to our navigation laws and tariff taxation that ought to be considered, and I am very much indisposed that any public business should remain unfinished on the 4th of March. I have supposed that should remain unninshed on the 4th of March. I have supposed that none of us desire an extra session of Congress, and therefore I desire that there should be no excuse for having an extra session, or any political excitement, before the regular meeting in December, believing that the business of the country will be better promoted during the summer not to have Congress in session before the regular time. Whether anybody agrees with me or not upon all or any of these questions I do not know. My attention having been called to what I said in the country. I have stated in substance here. I feel now what I said in the country, I have stated in substance how I feel now, and the way I shall endeavor to vote when these propositions are brought up.

BEN HOLLADAY.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I desire to give notice that on Thursday of this week I shall call up and ask the Senate to take action upon the bill (S. No. 231) for the relief of Ben Holladay.

EDUCATIONAL FUND.

Mr. BURNSIDE. Some days ago I gave notice that to-day after the morning hour I should ask the Senate to proceed to the consid-eration of the bill (S. No. 133) to establish an educational fund and apply a portion of the proceeds of the public lands to public educa-tion, and to provide for the more complete endowment and support of national colleges for the advancement of scientific and industrial education. Of course I shall not ask to displace the Fitz-John Porter bill now before the Senate, but upon its conclusion I shall ask that Senate bill No. 133 be considered.

TELEPHONE COMPANIES.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. No. 1618) to amend section 553 of the Revised Statutes, relating to the District of Columbia.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to amend section 553 of the Revised Statutes, relating to the District of Columbia, by inserting the word "telephone" after the word "transportation;" so as to read as follows:

SEC. 533. Any three or more persons who desire to form a company for the purpose of carrying on any kind of manufacturing, agricultural, mining, mechanical, insurance, mercantile, transportation, telephone, or marketing business in the District, or savings-bank therein, may make, sign, and acknowledge, before some officer competent to take the acknowledgment of deeds, and file in the office of recorder of deeds, a certificate in writing, in which shall be stated, &c.

The bill was reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with an amendment to strike out the second and third sections, as follows:

SEC. 2. That the provisions of the remainder of the said section, and the remainder of the sections of the said Revised Statutes up to and including section 593, shall continue in force and apply to all companies formed under the provisions of this act and of the statutes of which it is amendatory.

SEC. 3. That this act shall be in force from its passage.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ELLA LONG.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask the Senate, if it is in order, to proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. No. 1376) for the relief of Ella Long.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. By its provisions all the right, title, and interest of the United States in and to the real estate situate, being, and lying in the city of Washington, District of Columbia, known and designated on the public plat or plan of the city as lot numbered 3, in square numbered 530, is granted and conveyed to Ella Long, illegitimate child of Daniel Long, deceased, her heirs and assigns, forever. Mr. EDMUNDS.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Since this bill was reported from the Committee on the Judiciary, Ella Long has intermarried with a Mr. Carroll. I therefore move in line 9 to strike out the word "Long" and insert the words "Carroll, formerly Ella Long," so as to conform it to her present condition.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I will state to the Senate, as this bill appears to convey the property of the United States, what the case is. This person was the illegitimate daughter of one Daniel Long, and she had an illegitimate brother, also of the same father. Her father in his life-time made a deed of trust to her brother for her and for this brother as well, and the conveyance to the brother of another piece of property in order to make provision for these children. Then he died; then the brother died, and both being illegitimate of course this young person could not inherit from her illegitimate brother. The title to the property, therefore, has escheated in point of law to the United States. The object of this bill is to get rid of this escheat in order that she may enjoy the property.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in ment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title of the bill was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of Ella Carroll.

HARRY I. TODD.

Mr. KERNAN. I ask permission to call up Senate bill No. 1628.
By unanimous consent, the bill (S. No. 1628) for the relief of Harry J. Todd, late keeper of the Kentucky penitentiary, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to allow Harry I. Todd, late keeper of the Kentucky penitentiary, to institute and prosecute an action in the Court of Claims against the United States for the recovery of the amount of internal-revenue taxes alleged to have been covery of the amount of internal-revenue taxes alleged to have been improperly collected from him, between the years 1863 and 1868, as the duly elected and qualified keeper of the penitentiary, on manufactured articles produced at the institution by convict labor alone, and on account of other operations of the institution by him under the laws of the State of Kentucky; and to authorize the Court of Claims to hear and determine the cause and render judgment therein according to the right of the profiles with an appeal to the Supreme Court ing to the rights of the parties, with an appeal to the Supreme Court.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Finance with amendments. The first amendment was, in section 1, line 3, to strike out "J" and insert "I;" so as to read, "Harry I. Todd."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, line 15, before the word "rights" to insert the word "legal;" so as to read:

The said Court of Claims is hereby authorized to hear and determine said cause, and render judgment therein according to the legal rights of the parties.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is there a report on this claim?

Mr. KERNAN. There is a report giving an outline of the facts.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to have it read.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. KER-NAN June 1, 1880:

The Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1628) for the relief of Harry J. Todd, late keeper of the Kentucky penitentiary, have had the same under consideration, and submit the following report:
Harry I. Todd was duly elected by the General Assembly of Kentucky keeper of the State penitentiary, and held that position from March 9, 1863, until March 1, the State pentientiary, and neid that position from Marca 9, 1905, until Marca 1, 1871.

He was elected under, and his duties, liabilities, and rights were prescribed by, chapter 922, enacted in 1862, and chapter 2045, enacted in 1867, of the laws of that State.

He received no compensation except such profits as he might make in selling the articles manufactured by the labor of the convicts, over and above their support, the cost of materials, &c., and certain sums which he was required to pay into the treasury of the State by the laws under which he was elected.

Chapter 922 of the laws of Kentucky declares:

"The keeper of the penitentiary shall hold his office for four years.

"If the keeper of the penitentiary fall or refuse to comply with the obligations imposed on him by this act, or shall be guilty of any malfeasance in office, the governor shall have full power, and it shall be his duty, to remove him forthwith.

"In the event of the death or removal from office of the keeper of the penitentiary, the governor, secretary of state, and auditor shall make a contract with a suitable person to take charge of the penitentiary according to the provisions of this act until the next ensuing meeting of the General Assembly, and until a new keeper be elected and qualified."

These sections and various sections of chapter 2045, Laws of Kentucky, 1867, describe the keeper as an officer subject to the control of the State. He was required to and gave a bond as an officer to perform the duties of his office as required by law. As keeper of the penitentiary he was required by the statute to keep the convicts at labor, and for this purpose the State furnished buildings, machinery, &c., for the manufacture of certain articles, among them bagging, wagons, chairs, &c. While in the performance of his duties as keeper from 1863 to 1869 he was called upon by the United States internal-revenue officials to pay taxes on articles manufactured by the convicts and sold by him. The taxes were paid under protest, and a claim for refunding the amount paid was duly made to the Internal Revenue Bureau. The papers submitted showed beyond a doubt that the articles were made exclusively by convict labor, and on being presented to the law officer of the Treasury, Hon. W. H. Smith, solicitor, the claim was allowed, July 27, 1879; but the Commissioner thereupon submitted the case to C. P. James, and on his opinion the claim was rejected.

the Commissioner thereupon submitted the case to Cr.
the claim was rejected.
The present Commissioner of Internal Revenue declines to reopen the case under the rules of the Department that a case once decided by a former Commissioner cannot be reopened by a succeeding Commissioner, unless in certain contingencies which the Commissioner does not think exist in the present case.
The amounts of the taxes exacted by the United States officials and paid into the United States Treasury are as follows:

Statement of taxes assessed and paid.

 For 1863-'64. For manufacturing and sales of bagging and chairs and tax for slaughtering animals to feed convicts.
 $3, 320 25

 1865. Same, and manufacturer's license for each employment
 6, 691 64

 1866. Same
 17, 751 99

 1867. Same
 4, 481 00

 4868. Same
 3, 761 69

Your committee are of the opinion that whether Mr. Todd was liable to pay any part or all of the sums exacted is a question which should be decided by the courts. The committee therefore report back the accompanying bill, with an amendment, and authorizing Mr. Todd to institute an action against the United States in the Court of Claims to recover the amount of said internal-revenue taxes alleged to have been improperly collected from him, and recommend its passage.

Mr. MORRILL. I do not know that there can be any serious objection to submitting a question of this kind to the decision of the jection to submitting a question of this kind to the decision of the judiciary, provided the point in the case is properly presented. I am not quite satisfied that the phraseology of the bill really presents the full case to the Court of Claims. It struck me at the time this bill was considered by the committee that this Mr. Todd had received the full benefit of the tax in the increased price of the products made and sold by him, and that the State was in point of fact in no sense interested in the matter, but it was solely and exclusively a matter that belonged to Mr. Todd.

If this question could be fairly presented to the court I think there could be no objection to the measure, but I am not quite satisfied that the phraseology of the bill brings up the point in the case, and the real point is that this man was the manufacturer himself, taking the rest point is that this man was the manufacturer himself, taking the risk and benefit of loss or profit in the business, and so far as the tax was concerned it raised the price of these products all over the country, and as a matter of course raised the price of the manufactures that were produced and sold by him. Under the circumstances it seems to me that the phraseology of the bill ought to be such as would bring out this point clearly before the court.

Mr. KERNAN. We carefully considered in the committee the whole

The papers that were before the Department were submitted to the committee. Of course we cannot present the whole argument to the court by a bill which shall indicate clearly and distinctly what each item was paid for. Of course the officers of the Government will look to that matter. We simply authorize the party to prosecute an action in the Court of Claims against the United States to recover an action in the Court of Claims against the United States to recover the amount of internal-revenue tax alleged to have been improperly collected from him between the years 1863 and 1868. The very papers sent to us from the Treasury present the whole case. We find on the back of the papers that when first presented the Solicitor of the Department thought the tax should be refunded, and such an order was about to be made. Afterward the Internal Revenue Bureau employed other counsel outside who came to a different conclusion. We had both their expensions before you are applied to the results of the counsel of the c had both their conclusions before us, and surely this bill will present the exact case. Anything that will make it plainer I have no objection to. The bill is to test the question whether the money which this man paid on various items, as appears by the Treasury papers, which he paid under protest, ought to be refunded. I think the bill which he paid under protest, ought to be retunded. I think the bill protects the Government perfectly.

Mr. MORRILL. Let me put one question to the Senator from New York. I suppose he understands that this question will be decided upon the point as to whether the State of Kentucky was the manufacturer. If it should be established that Kentucky was the manufacturer, ought the State to be relieved from the tax? Might not such a principle as that, if adopted, lead to the manufacture of along Incturer, ought the State to be relieved from the tax? Might not such a principle as that, if adopted, lead to the manufacture of alcohol and spirits by States wholly exempt from any tax?

Mr. KERNAN. Allow me to answer—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The morning hour has expired.

Mr. KERNAN. I hope the Senate will allow a vote. I am sure not much time will be wanted.

The VICE-PRESIDENT.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there be no objection, the bill will be continued. The Chair hears none.

Mr. KERNAN. The sole question of law which will be presented will be, as the Senator says, whether this man was acting as a mere officer of the State, and whether he comes within the protection of the decision which says a State shall not be taxed. That will arise on the very facts that come up, of course. In making the claim the party must bring his suit and make the allegation that will bring him within the rule of law and establish it, or he cannot recover.

Mr. BECK. Lonky desire to say that my recollection is that I took.

him within the rule of law and establish it, or he cannot recover.

Mr. BECK. I only desire to say that my recollection is that I took the bill, after it was printed, to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue and presented to the Department fully and fairly the object of it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to ask the Senator from New York if this tax was illegally exacted, in the time of it why the person who paid it did not bring a suit to recover it back then as people do in other similar cases both as to customs and internal-revenue taxation?

Mr. KERNAN. As I understand, the claimant followed the law by paying under protest and by presenting his application to the Department. The Department held it under consideration and finally decided against him, they being authorized in certain cases to refund, but thinking that this case did not come within the provision. Therefore, a law is necessary to send him to the court.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The refusal to refund, if I correctly understand the dates, was within the statute of limitations, the six years within which the party could sue; and there is not any law in this country, and I hope there never will be, which prevents a citizen from suing an officer of the law for exacting money from him illegally. My atan officer of the law for exacting money from him illegally. My attention is called to it from the circumstance that I remember, at the last session particularly and generally before that time, that the Committee on the Judiciary which has a variety of applications to bring suits like this to recover back money supposed to have been illegally exacted or money in the Treasury that ought not to be there when the statute of limitations has run, invariably has refused to do it, on the ground that the statutes of limitation are statutes of general policy founded upon justice, in respect of getting evidence on both sides while witnesses are living and the facts are fresh. I need not go over the ground; everybody understands it.

Now it appears that after sixteen years, when the precise nature of these transactions may not be capable of explanation—or they may; I do not know—when evidence which might have been produced in the time of it in a suit at law regularly brought is gone, Congress is asked to interpose and remove the statute of limitations and authorize asked to interpose and remove the statute of inflictations and attablate a suit to be brought in the Court of Claims. I do not think that laws of that kind are of good policy. It appears to me that they are injurious to the public interest and do not generally work justice to individuals. They work injustice to every tax-payer, and allow in most instances unjust claims to be wriggled through the courts, as well as elsewhere. The evidence of the payment of the tax of course is always at hand. The evidence for the defense very often is entirely gone. I do not say that that is this precise case; I am only talking of the general principle. So I think, Mr. President, before we set this precedent of reopening to everybody who is now barred by the statutes of limitations a right to sue for the collection of a tax illegally exacted, a right to appeal to the Court of Claims, (for we must be consistent and uniform, it appears to me,) we ought to consider carefully. We ought not to take such a step in a hurry; and if it is not disagreeable to the Senator from New York, in order that we may think of it further, I would ask him to let the bill go over that we may take or it further, I would ask him to let the bill go over that we may take up the regular order. I believe I have the right to do that.

Mr. KERNAN. I am quite willing the bill should lie over if I may be allowed to call it up at a proper time. I agree entirely with the general principle stated by the Senator from Vermont as to statutes of limitation; but this is a case where the application was pending before the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and when a new head came in he would not reopen the case, and hence the necessity of a law of Congress to enable the party to go to court and get a judicial construction of his rights.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senate proceeds to the consideration of the unfinished business of yesterday.

FITZ-JOHN PORTER.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 1139) for the relief of Fitz-John Porter, late major-general of the United States volunteers and colonel of the Army, the pending question being on the amendment proposed by Mr. Randolph to strike out the preamble and all after the enacting clause and in lieu thereof to insert:

That Fitz-John Porter be, and he is hereby, relieved from the disability of disfranchisement and incapacity to hold office as imposed by sentence of court-martial of January 19, 1863, and the President is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to reinstate to the Army the said Fitz-John Porter, who was dismissed by said sentence: Provided, however, That such reinstatement shall give no higher rank than colonel on the retired list: And provided further, That said Porter shall receive no pay, compensation, or allowance for the time intervening between his dismissal and his restoration.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. President, is it in order to offer a substitute for this amendment?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is.

Mr. DAWES. I move to strike out all after the first word "That," in the matter to be inserted, and in lieu thereof to insert:

The President is hereby authorized within eighteen months from the passage of this act, in his discretion, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint to the Army Fitz-John Porter, who was dismissed by sentence of court-martial January 19, 1863: Provided, however, That such appointment shall give no higher rank than colonel on the retired list: And provided further. That said Porter shall receive no pay, compensation, or allowance for the time intervening between his dismissal and such appointment.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. President, I have no doubt, and I have at no time had any doubt, of the power of Congress to pass just such a bill as was introduced by me, together with the amendment which I

Mr. HOAR. The Senator from New Jersey will permit me to say to him that he is not heard on this side of the Chamber.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I was saying to the Senate that I have had no doubt, and I entertain none now, of the power of Congress to pass just such an amendment to the original bill as that introduced by me yesterday; but I desire to come to a speedy vote and to remove every possible obstacle not vital in character, and obtain thereby all the votes that may be had. The main object of the bill is to place General Porter on the retired list of the Army, and this amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts being in harmony with this purpose, I shall accept it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator may do so by unanimous consent, the yeas and nays having been ordered on his original amend-

Mr. DAWES. Before the Senator accepts it I desire to be entirely frank with him, and say that I do not know that I shall vote for the bill, nor do I know that I shall vote against it, if this amendment be bill, hor do I know that I shall vote against it, it this amendment be adopted. I shall hold myself entirely free to act upon the final vote as if I had not offered this amendment. I offer it on the parliamentary principle that it is every man's duty to improve as well as he may any pending measure. Still I do not mean to intimate that I should vote against the bill if it were thus amended. I hold myself at liberty in that regard, notwithstanding the acceptance of myself at liberty in that regard, notwithstanding the acceptance of my amendment by the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I did not misunderstand the Senator from Massachusetts, and I did not consider him at all committed by the presentation of the amendment. My object in accepting the amendment is to avoid, if practicable, a repetition of the lengthy debate we had yesterday upon questions of constitutional law over, as it were, the body of this old soldier. My idea is to avoid all difficulties that can practicably be put out of the way so as to reach the desired end; that is, the placing of General Porter on the retired list of the Army.

Mr. LOGAN. I ask for the reading of the amendment. I did not hear it.

hear it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be again read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

That the President is hereby authorized within eighteen months from the passage of this act, in his discretion, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint to the Army Fitz-John Porter, who was dismissed by sentence of court-martial January 19, 1863: Provided, however, That such appointment shall give no higher rank than colonel on the retired list: And provided further. That said Porter shall receive no pay, compensation, or allowance for the time intervening be-tween his dismissal and such appointment.

Mr. LOGAN. I want to understand the full scope and meaning of Mr. LOGAN. I want to understand the full scope and meaning or that. I understand it is that the President may appoint Fitz-John Porter to the retired list, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate—not into the Army, but to the retired list.

Mr. DAWES. The Senator is so much better posted in military affairs than myself that if he says it has that effect of course it is so. Mr. LOGAN. That is my understanding of it.

Mr. DAWES. And it is mine.

Mr. LOGAN. I understand the amendment has been accepted by the Senator from New Jersey.

the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. CARPENTER. He cannot accept it.

Mr. LOGAN. He is in favor of it, in other words, which means, I presume, that it will be accepted. I have nothing to say now until the action of the Senate on it. I shall have something to say, however, on the amendment if it is accepted.

The VICE-PRESIDENT, The Senator from New Jersey has accepted this is line of his control with the senator from New Jersey has accepted.

cepted this in lieu of his amendment, and it stands now as the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The first point that strikes my mind, Mr. President, is whether it is intended by this amendment to limit the power of the President of the United States to the period of eighteen months. It does not say as the amendment I offered which was so summarily disposed of yesterday, that the power is to terminate at that time, and it will become instantly a question for the casuists in the Attorney-General's Office, &c., to determine whether this term "eighteen months" is not merely directory and that the President may exercise the power afterward. If the real purpose be to have this thing disposed of once for all within eighteen months and then to be ended one way or the other, I would suggest to the Senator from New Jersey to add the words "and not afterward," so as to make it clear that we mean that. Mr. RANDOLPH.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I have no objection.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be so modified by inserting "and not afterward."

Mr. DAWES. I do not see any necessity for that modification, but

Mr. EDMUNDS. I did not doubt it.
Mr. DAWES. I have no objection to the amendment being modified in that way

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment is modified by consent of the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. DAWES. The Senator from New Jersey and myself are not in partnership, but whoever has power will accept the modification. I accept it; and if I have not the power to accept it, somebody else

Mr. RANDOLPH. I beg the Senator's pardon. The Senator from Vermont appealed to me to accept it and I accepted it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think the Senator from New Jersey was entitled to do so as he had become the proprietor of the amendment by accepting it.

The next thing I should like the Senator from New Jersey to tell me is what I think he told the Senator from Illinois, whether this bill is designed simply to authorize General Porter to be placed on the retired list of the Army with a rank not above that of colonel. the retired list of the Army with a rank not above that of colonel. I suppose that to be the intent. Now the words are "that the President is authorized by and with the advice and consent of the Senate" to appoint to the Army Fitz-John Porter "who was dismissed," &c.: "provided, * * *, that such reinstatement shall give no higher rank than colonel on the retired list." The rank of a colonel on the active list is no higher than the rank of a colonel on the retired list. It is precisely the same. If, therefore, under this bill the President of the United States and the Senate of the United States choose to appoint Fitz-John Porter at the very top of the colonels of the retired list many of whom are long his seniors and have been in the Army all the many of whom are long his seniors and have been in the Army all the time, they can do it. I do not propose to vote for any such law as that myself.

If this has the square intent merely (as I have not the least reason to doubt) to provide an authority to appoint this gentleman to the place of colonel on the retired list of the Army of the United States, let it state where he is going to stand in this long list of maimed heroes which I hold in my hand, whether at the top, the middle, or the bottom, so that we may know precisely what we are about; and then I shall be ready to consider it, but I do not think it right to pass a bill in this shape.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I should like the Senator from Vermont to suggest to me what change he would make in the phraseology. Some of it comes in because of amendments that have been placed on the bill from time to time. It may therefore be imperfect in its expression. The object of this bill is simply this, that the President shall be authorized to nominate to the Senate and with its advice and consent put the name of General Fitz-John Porter on the retired list of the Army—just this and nothing more.

Mr. CARPENTER. Let me ask the Senator why the President has not got that power now?

Mr. RANDOLPH. Simply because there is a law preventing it, passed in 1868. That is all.

Mr. CARPENTER. A law recogning what?

assed in 1868. That is all.

Mr. CARPENTER. A law preventing what?

Mr. RANDOLPH. Preventing the appointment of any person to the Army or on the retired list who has been dismissed from the service of the United States.

Mr. CARPENTER. That brings me to the other question which wanted to put, and that is whether the sole object of this bill with that explanation be not to relieve him from the sentence of that court-martial; in other words, to pardon him?

Mr. RANDOLPH. The gentleman must decide that for himself.

My object is certainly to restore him to the Army and place him on the retired list.

Mr. LOGAN. I desire, in answer to the Senator from New Jersey. to say that there are two reasons, one other in addition to the one he mentioned, why this man cannot be appointed to the Army. The first is that by the rules and decisions of courts in different States, and according to the principle laid down wherever it has been laid down in the law, the power to pardon belongs to the Executive, and down in the law, the power to pardon belongs to the Executive, and there is no use of trying to shirk this matter at all or dodge it. If Fitz-John Porter and his friends want him back in the Army, let them apply to the President to pardon him. The object has been all the time to avoid an application for pardon. I do not say the President would appoint him in the Army; I say he ought not to appoint him in the Army. He is not worthy to be in the Army, either on the retired Est or on any other. But, sir, the whole point has been here from the beginning to avoid an application for pardon. It is to dodge the court-martial, to get around it. Your bill yesterday proposed to reinstate him in the Army. Under that he would be reinstated back to the rank that he held, which would go behind the court-martial. It was only a means of getting around the court-martial. That was the object of your bill of yesterday.

Mr. RANDOLPH. May I interrupt the Senator?
Mr. LOGAN. Certainly.

Mr. LOGAN. Certainly.
Mr. RANDOLPH. I have said before, I repeat it again so clearly that I hope the Senator from Illinois will not misunderstand me, that there was no such purpose on the part of the Senator from New Jer-

Mr. LOGAN. I will relieve the Senator from interrupting me. I will not attribute to the Senator a purpose to do this thing; but by my language I mean that that is the bill; that is what it does, call it a purpose or what you choose. I do not wish to attribute any improper motive to the Senator. I want him to understand that what I mean is that that is the bill, that is its operation and its effect; and the effect of this amendment is to put this man back in the Army without a pardon. This amendment is just as bad as the bill of yesterday, so far as that is concerned.

As I said vesterday. I have not the physical strength to discuss this

As I said yesterday, I have not the physical strength to discuss this question or any other as I would desire to do. I thought when the discussion of this question was had at the last session that that was an end of it. I thought it was an end of the bill. I will not say that men have changed their opinions since then, but I do believe if the vote had been taken on the bill then it would not have received twenty votes in this Senate. I have reason for so believing other than a mere desire that it should be so; but yesterday it seemed as though a change had come over the spirit of the dreams of some gentlemen.

Whom the gods wish to destroy they first make mad.

Men have been mad in this country for some time, and they seem to grow worse. I exhausted my physical strength on this bill before in grow worse. I exhausted my physical strength on this bill before in trying to demonstrate to the country that this man was an unfit man to go into the Army. I am not able to do it again, but I will take time enough before it does pass to expose it, for I see the point. There is a kind of sentiment running around here that you must do some generous thing for somebody. If you want to do a generous act, do it for a man entitled to a generous act. This man is no more entitled to be put on the retired list of the Army, or on the active list, than is Jeff. Davis, in my judgment; not one particle. Davis's act was treason, this man's act was perfidy. It was a failure to supact was treason, this man's act was perfidy. It was a failure to support his commanding officer in time of need and trial, such a failure as, if he had been in the Army of the Tennessee, would have ended Senators may sympathize with him as much as they please, and I senators may sympathize with him as much as they piease, and a find that many who were not in this terrible conflict have great sympathy for men who did not do their duty on either side. Sir, I respect the man who did his duty on the side of the rebellion more than I respect any man who failed to perform his duty on our side. The men who stood by us against the men who fought against this country, who, as I understand, now undertake to put these men back in the Army to destroy the efficiency of the Army and to bring disin the Army to destroy the efficiency of the Army and to bring discredit upon the whole Army, are not doing their duty to the country. They may have done it once, but this sickly sentimentality that runs through us at times encourages men to do these acts by which you disgrace those who are in the Army with an honorable record, and put men with dishonorable records in there, because the fact of doing it will only cast a slur on those who put them out.

I do not believe in this kind of generosity as it may be called. am as generous as most men to those who show they are entitled to it, but when a man claiming to be a soldier appeals to me for generosity he must show that he was a soldier when the time required him to be one. Sir, this man is not entitled to generosity in any sense whatever, either by being placed on the retired list or being put anywhere else; and if gentlemen on our side and gentlemen on the other side of this Chamber commence putting back in the Army men who were disgracefully dismissed from the Army, where will it stop? There stand on record to-day over one hundred and fifteen dismissals from the Army where the fatal penalty was attached as it was to Fitz-John Porter, that the convicts should never after hold office of honor, trust, or profit under this Government. Now, if you relieve this man from that odium, why not relieve the other one hundred and fifteen? There is not a case on the whole list that is as flagrant a case as is that of Fitz-John Porter. Sir, do this act and you will have applications coming to you from men who are equally entitled to the consideration of Congress and the President as is Fitz-John Porter, and much more so. Let those things rest that were settled during the war; do not bring them up here every day to arouse excitement, as you have done continuously. If you want things to be quiet, and to have rest pervade this land, let those things that were settled during the war, by those who had control then, stay settled; do not disturb them

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. FERRY. I ask that the amendment be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be again reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

That the President is hereby authorized within eighteen months from the passage of this act, and not afterward, in his discretion, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint to the Army Fitz-John Porter, who was dismissed by sentence of court-martial January 19, 1863: Provided, however, That such appointment shall give no higher rank than colonel on the retired list: And provided further, That said Porter shall receive no pay, compensation, or allowance for the time intervening between his dismissal and such appointment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. On this amendment the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The yeas and nays were taken.

Mr. BLAINE, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Mississippi, [Mr. Lamar.]

Mr. EATON, (when his name was called.) On this question I am paired with the Senator from Rhode Island, [Mr. Anthony.]

So the amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

Mr. BURNSIDE. Mr. President, as a member of the Committee on Military Affairs, to which the bill for the relief of General Fitz-John Porter was referred, it became my duty to investigate the case. I was unable, after hasty examination, to concur entirely with a majority of the committee in the report which they presented. The conclusions at which I arrived were presented in a report which I had the honor to submit to the Senate, which reads as follows:

The undersigned, member of the Committee on Military Affairs, begs leave to say that he dissents from the report made by the majority of the committee upon the Fitz-John Porter case, so called. He agrees with the minority report of Senators Logax and PLUMB in many of the legal points made by them and especially in their views as to the dangerous course recommended by the majority.

He thinks that the interference by Congress in the sentence of a court-martial, which has been duly found and promulgated, is a most dangerous interference, to be resorted to only under extreme circumstances, and then in the most careful manner.

manner.

He also thinks that Congress has no right under the Constitution to legislate a man into office, as the right to appoint officers is vested in the President of the United States by the Constitution, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, except that "Congress may by law vest the appointment of such inferior officers as they think proper in the President alone, in the courts of law, or in the heads of Departments."

That Congress has the right to authorize the President to reopen the case of General Porter, upon his own application, and order a new court for the purpose of granting him a new trial, which court shall consider the proceedings of the original court, and such new evidence as may be presented by the Government or General Porter, and make its decision thereon, the undersigned has no doubt. He believes that the only limitations upon the power of Congress over cases arising in the land or naval forces is to be found in the Constitution itself.

A law of Congress authorizing a second trial would not be an ex post facto law, because, adopting the general definition laid down by Chief-Justice Marshall, it would render no act punishable in a manner in which it was not punishable when mmitted.

The sixth amendment to the Constitution withdraws from common-law protection all "cases arising in the land and naval forces," and hence that provision of the act of April 10, 1806, which declared that "no officer, non-commissioned officer, soldier, or follower of the Army shall be tried the second time for the same offense." (See the old 87th article of war, now the 180d, Revised Statutes, page 240.)

In 1818 Attorney-General Wirt delivered an opinion upon this article, and that opinion has ever since governed the practice in our military service. In that document he refers to the English precedents in common and military law, to the laws governing military trials passed by the Congress of the Confederation, and to the fact that the provision in question of the article then under consideration was simply an application of the great common-law maxim to our military code. He then explains the uniform practice under the common law and uses the following language:

"The rule which forbids a second trial, devised purely for his benefit, [i. e., the was simply an application of the great common-law maxim to our military code. He then explains the uniform practice under the common law and uses the following langage:

"The rule which forbids a second trial, devised purely for his benefit, [i. c., the party accused.] has never been considered as being infringed by granting such new trial on his motion; that he has invariably had this new trial whenever, in the estimation of those constituted to judge, the reason and equity of the case have required it. Now, why should a rule of martial law, borrowed obviously from the common law, and therefore aimed at the same common object in both, produce a different effect in the derivative from that which is produced in the primitive law? Both the rule and the reason being the same, I 'cannot see the reason for a different result." (1 Opinions, pages 233, 234)

The original court-martial was composed of officers of high character, and we have no right to suppose that they were not actuated by a desire to promote the public interests. General David Hunter, its president, was and is one of the most nighly respected officers of the Army. General Garfield, one of its members, has were since the close of the war represented one of the best-cultivated constituencies in the United States in the lower Hall of Congress, and has recently been elected to a seat in this body by the great State of Ohio. General Hitchcock, General Ricketts, and General Casey were most honorable, respected, and intelligent officers of the Army. General Buford was a graduate of West Point, and a man of probity and learning. Generals Slough and Prentiss were volunteer officers of great culture and reliability. General King was an educated, gallant soldier. It cannot be assumed that they gave a verdict which was not entirely warranted by the evidence before them; but there may have been facts connected with the case which were not and could not have been, under the circumstances, brought before the ourt, and in view of this the undersigned is of opinion t

President transmitted to Congress for its information without any recommendation whatever.

Now, with all due respect to the President, the undersigned begs to say that the board was not convened by authority of Congress, nor was it asked by Congress for information upon which it might act. The President surely has the right to transmit the conclusions of that board to Congress, but it would have been proper, if he desired Congress to act upon them, to have examined and summarized the whole case, and to have transmitted with them a recommendation covering what he thought should be done in the premises. It would not be wise or right for Congress to take up the proceedings of a court-martial, together with the proceedings of such a military board, and examine, review, criticise, or change the effect of the same as an original work, without recommendation from the President or some authorized department of the Government. As to the power of Congress to do this I will not express an opinion in this connection. The undersigned does not care now to enter into a discussion of the report of the board, nor does he care to enter into any discussion as to the action of the original court-martial.

If action upon the bill recommended by the majority of this committee is to be insisted upon and taken by the Senate, it may be found to be the duty of individual Senators to enter into a full discussion of the proceedings of the court and the board, with a view to giving a conscientious and intelligent vote upon the case. I will say, however, that I think the board committed a very grave mistake when, in summing up its conclusions as to the resemblance which the charges and specifications before the original court bore to the facts of the case, it said:

"We trust it is not necessary for us to submit in detail the results of this comparison, and that it will be sufficient for us to point out the fundamental errors, and to say that all the essential facts in every instance stand out in clear and absolute contrast to those suppos some contrast to those supposed races upon which ceneral Forter was adjudged guilty."

The undersigned thinks that it was very necessary for the board, if they desired to give their action weight with the President, Congress, or the country, that they should show in absolute detail the bearings which the facts of the case had upon the original charges. It seems very clear to the undersigned that some of the so-called "fundamental errors" of the court-martial which the board have summed up in a few words are not errors in fact. This statement is made after an examination of the four volumes of record in this most important case, but with no desire to make any charge detrimental to the military intelligence of the high officers who composed the board. A second court-martial of thirteen high officers of the Army who would be legally constituted, whose business it would be to examine into all the facts of the case, to compel the attendance of witnesses and the production of records, to give their opinions under oath, and to give to the case all the time necessary, would give a reliable opinion, one which would command the respect of the military men all the world over, and would give to General Porter the justice which is due to him. Any vindication short of that would do him and his descendants no good. Consider, for instance, the action of Congress upon this bill. If it should be against him—in other words, if this bill should fail to pass—then he will have had no vindication. In fact, it will add to his condemnation. If it should pass in a modified form, then it can be said that he did not deserve the full measure of his sentence, but yet deserved condemnation of some kind. If it should pass as it has been reported by the majority of this committee, and fail to pass by a substantially unanimous vote, it will be said that for years General Porter has been trying to get action upon this case, and never, until this particular period, and under the present peculiar circumstances, has he been able to get it; and now he gets a bill passed without the favorable recommendation of the President, by a simple majority of Congress, and in violation of a pretty well established principle of the Government, that sentences of courts-martial should not be annulled by Congress; whereas if a bill should pass this Congress by a large vote, such as the undersigned recommends, giving to General Porter a new trial by a court which has full authority to examine all facts, whether they appeared before the original court or have been discovered since, and that court acquits him of all offense, and that sentence is approved by the President, then he stands before the world a vindicated man; and surely no good citizen can then justly gainsay his right to the vindication.

It may not be improper to say that the undersigned has for years held this same It may not be improper to say that the undersigned has for years held this same view.

The Schofield board closed its report by saying:

"But it is our duty to say that the indiscreet and unkind terms in which General Porter expressed his distrust of the capacity of his superior commander cannot be defended; and to that indiscretion was due, in very great measure, the misinterpretation of both his motives and his conduct, and his consequent condemnation."

misinterpretation of both his metives and his conduct, and his consequent condemnation."

How the board knew that this indiscretion caused or contributed to his condemnation is not explained. This positive assertion is somewhat akin to the one made on page 1719 touching the great service General Porter rendered in saving the Union army from destruction. The undersigned is forced to say that he does not know exactly what would have happened to the Union army had General Porter not remained quiet all the day of the 29th of August, or had obeyed the order given him to attack, because he is not possessed of the high order of military is telligence which would enable him to divine exactly what the enemy would have done in case General Porter had made advances, or obeyed the order. The undersigned would be glad to see General Porter freed from even the condemnation of the board for having spoken in "indiscreet and unkind terms" of his superior commander at a time when his duty to the Republic called for obedience, co-operation, subordination, and industry of the highest order. It is very clear that the opinion of this board of officers has been regarded by a large majority of the people co-operation subordination, and industry of the highest degree. The plea of General Porter was made up by eminent counsel, who presented it in the most skillful manner. The Government was represented by a judge-advocate brought into the case suddenly, with the obligation resting upon him to look after both sides of the case. The contr was unauthorized to compel attendance of witnesses, and entirely unauthorized to pass any binding judgment. A private individual who would submit to arbitrations like this would, in a very short time, find himself stripped of all his worldly goods, no matter how much of them he might possess. His utter ruin would be but a question of time if he allowed himself to be drawn into such arbitrations. Should we, as custodians of the public interest, be led into a course so detrimental to Army discipline and th would lead us?

The portion of the bill recommended by the majority which gives to General Porter back pay the undersigned cannot concur in, for the reason that it is a violation of a well-established principle of the Military Committee and of Congress not to allow to officers who have been dismissed and reinstated pay for the time that they have been out of the Army. There is no reason for not applying to this case a rule which is invariably applied to officers of a lower grade than that held by General Porter.

A. E. BURNSIDE.

Soon after the majority of the committee reported the original bill I offered an amendment, which is as follows:

That upon the application of General Fitz-John Porter, late colonel Fifteenth Infantry, and major-general of volunteers in the service of the United States, the President is authorized to grant him a new trial by court-martial upon the charges and specifications upon which he was tried, and in part convicted, by a court-martial convened under Special Orders No. 362, and dated headquarters of the Army, Washington, District of Columbia, November 27, 1862.

SEC. 2. That the court-martial that may be convened by virtue of this act shall consist of not less than thirteen officers of high rank in the Army; it shall consider all testimony taken in the first trial as entered upon the record thereof; all pertinent official reports, both Union and confederate, on file in the War Department; and such new testimony as may be offered either by the United States or by the said Porter; and the said court shall have power, subject to the approval of the President, to confirm, mitigate, or annul the sentence of the former court-martial.

Since the preparation of that report and the offering of this amendment I confess that my belief as to the power of Congress to order a new trial has been materially shaken. As to the lack of power of Congress to go further than that, in my mind there is no question; that is to say, to annul the sentence of the court or to authorize the President of the United States to restore General Porter to the Army, in the face of the sentence now resting against him, in any other way than by a new trial.

I have thought that, as General Porter's trial occurred at a period of high excitement, it is not unreasonable to suppose that, in the multitude of important events which were occurring from day to day, the public interest, which, as a rule, is a great protection to a man under trial for a serious charge, and brings out evidence favor able to him, judgment was not exercised as impartially as it would have been in a period of profound peace and at a time when the suspicions of the people as to the faithfulness of their officers were not so easily aroused.

Besides, I have thought that new evidence touching General Porter's case may have been brought to light. I am of the opinion that just at this time the impression that General Porter did suffer wrong has created an exaggerated interest in his favor, yet I have thought that if we could by any constitutional, lawful means adopt a course by which any wrong which has been done him could be righted, we should do it.

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. RANDOLPH] who has in charge the bill reported by the majority of the committee, upon whom I urged the wisdom of adopting the amendment reported by me, seemed determined to adhere to his own bill, and I was forced to go into an elaborate examination of the records of the original court and of the Schofield board in order that I might give an intelligent vote upon the bill which he and the majority in this body seem determined to press forward. The conclusions at which I arrived from an examination of those reports I will endeavor to give briefly.

The Senator from Illinois [Mr. Logan] at the last session went so fully into the proceedings touching this case and had them so completely placed when the second in convention with his removal or the process.

I shall not attempt to incorporate any of them in my short statement, but will simply refer to them as occasion may require.

The original court which tried General Porter we must assume, in the absence of anything to the contrary, was fairly constituted and conducted its proceedings in a lawful and unbiased manner and gave a verdict warranted by the evidence presented to it. General Porter has from time to time applied to the properly constituted authorities to have a rehearing of his case, and I for one have been in favor of General Grant, while President, examined the application of General Porter for a reopening of his case, and refused it. The present Chief Magistrate thought it right and proper to organize a board of officers who were requested to give him advice as to what action he should take upon the application. That board met and, after a long examination, came to certain conclusions, which conclusions were transmitted to the President, and, as I have said in my report, the President, without making any recommendation whatever, forwarded the report of this board to Congress for its action. The Senator from Indiana at the last session assumed in his very elaborate and well-considered argument that the President by sendelaborate and well-considered argument that the President by sending this report to Congress gave it his sanction. In this he was wrong, and he will realize that he was wrong if he will take into consideration the fact that the President could not have given these proceedings a personal examination, and that if he meant to approve of the findings he would have said so; and I am quite sure that if the President could be properly reached upon this matter with the view to elicit from him a statement as to whether he did or did not approve of the findings of this board, or in other words as to whether he was or was not convinced of the wisdom of those findings, that he would say to us that he had formed no opinion whatever as to the findings, but had simply submitted the report to Congress for its action.

That report is now before us, and is the subject of discussion. To be sure, the board was not authorized by Congress, neither has Congress asked it for an opinion, but its proceedings have been transmitted by the President to the Senate. Now, as the President has made to us no recommendation, it becomes our duty to form a decision as to what action, if any, we shall take upon it. The Senator from Illinois holds that we have no right to take any action with reference to the Fitz-John Porter case until the pardoning power has been exercised by the President, and I am now much inclined to take his view of the case; but as the report of the board of officers has been exercised by the Freschent, and I am now much inclined to take his view of the case; but as the report of the board of officers has become a matter of public interest, it may be well for us to consider it upon its merits, and I shall endeavor now to so consider a few of its main points to show that there is at least enough of error in it to prevent it from being a proper basis of action for the absolute reversal by Congress, or any other power, of the findings of the court-martial which tried General Porter.

The gist of the conclusions of the board lie in the five following paragraphs:

paragraphs:

I. These charges and specifications certainly bear no discernible resemblance to the facts of the case as now established.

II. We trust it is not necessary for us to submit in detail the results of this comparison, and that it will be sufficient for us to point out the fundamental errors, and to say that all the essential facts in every instance stand out in clear and absolute contrast to those supposed facts upon which General Porter was adjudged guilty.

III. Porter's faithful, subordinate, and intelligent conduct that afternoon saved the Union army from the defeat which would otherwise have resulted that day from the enemy's more speedy concentration. The only seriously critical period of that campaign, namely, between 11 a. m. and sunset of August 29, was thus safely passed.

IV. The judgment of the court-martial upon General Porter's conduct was evidently based upon greatly erroneous impressions, not only respecting what that conduct really was and the orders under which he was acting, but also respecting all the circumstances under which he acted.

V. The evidence of bad animus in Porter's case ceases to be material in view of the evidence of his soldierly and faithful conduct. But it is our duty to say that the indiscreet and unkind terms in which General Porter expressed his distrust of the capacity of his superior commander cannot be defended. And to that indiscretion was due, in very great measure, the misinterpretation of both his motives and his conduct and his subsequent condemnation.

As to the first paragraph, I will say that I shall not examine all the

As to the first paragraph, I will say that I shall not examine all the charges and specifications with a view to prove its incorrectness, because I do not care to occupy sufficient time for that purpose, but I will simply take the first specification of the first charge, which reads as follows:

Specification 1.—In this, that the said Major-General Fitz-John Porter, of the volunteers of the United States, having received a lawful order, on or about the 27th August, 1862, while at or near Warrenton Junction, in Virginia, from Major-General John Pope, his superior and commanding officer, in the following figures and letters, to wit:

"HEADQUARTERS ARMY OF VIRGINIA,

"Bristow Station, August 27, 1862—6.30 p. m.
"General: The major-general commanding directs that you start at one o'clock to-night, and come forward with your whole corps, or such part of it as is with you, so as to be here by daylight to-morrow morning. Hooker has had a very severe action with the enemy, with a loss of about three hundred killed and wounded. The enemy has been driven back, but is retiring along the railroad. We must drive him from Manassas and clear the country between that place and Gainesville, where McDowell is. If Morell has not joined you, send word to him to push forward immediately; also send word to Banks to hurry forward with all speed to take your place at Warrenton Junction. It is necessary, on all accounts, that you should be here by daylight. I send an efficer with this despatch, who will conduct you to this place. Be sure to send word to Banks, who is on the road from Fayetteville, probably in the direction of Bealton. Say to Banks, also, that he had best run back the railroad trains to this side of Cedar Run. If he is not with you, write him to that effect.

"By command of Major-General Pope." GFORGE D. RUGGLES.

"GEORGE D. RUGGLES, "Colonel and Chief of Staff.

"Major-General F. J. PORTER, Warrenton Junction.

"P. S.—If Banks is not at Warrenton Junction, leave a regiment of infantry and two pieces of artillery as a guard till he comes up, with instructions to follow you immediately. If Banks is not at the Junction, instruct Colonel Cleary to run the trains back to this side of Cedar Run, and post a regiment and section of artillery with it.

By command of Major-General Pope.

"GEORGE D. RUGGLES, "Colonel and Chief of Staff."

did then and there disobey the said order, being at the time in the face of the enemy. This at or near Warrenton, in the State of Virginia, on or about the 28th of August, 1862.

Now, it must be clear to every one that the evidence shows that General Porter received this order in due time and failed to execute General Porter received this order in due time and failed to execute it; in other words, disobeyed it, and the board certainly was not warranted in saying that the facts "bear no discernible resemblance" to this specification. Yet the board may say that General Porter was justified, and, in fact, do say that he was justified in disobeying this order. But that is a matter of opinion. In point of fact General Porter did not obey this order; and unless there was some overpowering and good reason for the disobedience, guilt attaches to him for it. The only possible excuse that this board attempts to give for this disobedience was that the night was dark that the roads were filled. obedience was that the night was dark, that the roads were filled with wagons, and that it was impossible for him to move. If that was really the reason in his mind for determining not to begin his march as ordered, he should have immediately communicated with General Pope at all hazards and explained to him that he could not obey it, because the night was dark and the road was full of wagons. It can hardly be claimed by any one that it was impossible for General Porter to have communicated with General Pope.

I need not say to Senators who have seen service in the field that the alleged excuse for not marching at the time indicated by the order is not sufficient. Each one of them has moved troops under as great or greater difficulties than were presented to General Porter; and I think I am fully borne out in this by an examination of the and I think I am fully borne out in this by an examination of the records of the court and of the board.

It will be news to the soldiers on both sides of that great contest of the rebellion to learn that a corps cannot be moved on account of the darkness of the night and wagons in the road. All soldiers know that marches were made during the war under very much greater difficulties than presented themselves to General Porter on that occasion. If any one corps commander during General Grant's last campaign had taken the responsibility to delay any one of his night movements until the following morning at daylight, contrary to the orders of General Grant, the success which attended that campaign would have been very much jeopardized, possibly ruined, and the war might have been in continuance at this day, or the confederacy recognized; in which case we would have presented the sad spectacle of a divided country, and the "Government of the people, by the people, and for the people" would have been regarded by the nations of Europe as a failure.

Whatever our opinions may be with reference to General Grant, we

Whatever our opinions may be with reference to General Grant, we-

Whatever our opinions may be with reference to General Grant, we should all agree that his campaign was carried on upon proper war-like principles, and that it resulted in a union of the States, a union of which we hope we will always continue to be proud.

The Senator from Indiana has spoken of the confusion and the difficulties which presented themselves to the march of General Sigel and General Ricketts, and speaks of them in comparison with the difficulties which presented themselves to General Porter. The movements of these generals are not now under consideration; and if they were absolutely wrong and criminal in what they did, it is no justification to General Porter if he did wrong. Their movements were on entirely different roads from the road upon which Porter was ordered to march, and they were attended by entirely different circum-Does the Senator from Indiana mean to say that these offistances. Does the Senator from Indiana mean to say that these on-cers did not try to obey the orders that were given to them, or even if he does say and could prove that they had disobeyed orders, is it a justification to General Porter in case he did not obey orders? The question before us is, Was this board of three officers which made this-report now before us justified in saying to the President that the specification and charges preferred against General Porter bear no discernible resemblance to the facts of the case? I believe that that statement is an incorrect statement, and for that reason I am ready to discard this report as a basis for my action in giving an intelligent

Mr. McDONALD. I should like the indulgence of the Senator from Rhode Island for one moment. He says that it was the duty of General Porter, if he determined that the night was so dark that he could not march, having received orders to march at one o'clock, to have so informed General Pope. If the Senator will examine the testimony of General Pope, he will find that General Porter did so inform him by a dispatch sent in reply to his dispatch to that officer, which was received by General Pope, but which General Pope said he had lost and could not produce.

Mr. BURNSIDE. Mr. BUKNSIDE. The Senator will be kind enough to state that again. I shall be very glad to be corrected if I am creating any wrong impression whatever. I do not remember any such dispatch or any reference to it. I would be glad now, or after I get through, if the Senator from Indiana will correct any misstatement I may have made. If it could be said that General Porter knew absolutely at that time that there was no necessity for making that movement, that could have been presented by the board as a reason for failure to obey, but the text of the order should have given General Porter the impression that it was very necessary for him to obey to the very letter. The very fact that he was to begin at one o'clock in the morning should have been sufficient to make the order seem important in

It was not wise or right for this board to look at what followed the next day; in other words, the day of the 28th, after General Porter had disobeyed the order, for a justification of his disobedience, because they did not know what would have followed a literal obedience of the order. Had General Porter marched at one o'clock, as he was ordered, and had he succeeded, as many other general officers had, in removing obstacles from his road, and making a rapid march on a dark night, and reported to General Pope at a very early hour in the morning, saying to him, "General, I received your order in due time, and have executed it promptly, and have my troops ready to perform with alacrity any duty you may assign to me," who can say that the result of the movements of the 28th would not have been to the benefit of the Union arms? He did not do that, and who can say how much harm resulted to the Union arms from his failure to do it? Campaigns can be criticised, and any three men, skilled or unskilled, can come to a conclusion as to what would or would not have happened if such and such a thing had or had not occurred; but we all know that conclusions of that sort are most unreliable. Many persons in the United States for a long time after the close of the war said that General Grant during his last campaign showed no skill as a soldier; that in point of fact he was a butcher, and only knew how to have men slaughtered! But as time lapses wise and thoughtful men look at that campaign in the proper light, and conclude that he was a great soldier. Why was he a great soldier? Because with his armies and by his great generalship he suppressed the rebellion and saved the Union.

Now, Mr. President, let me give a few examples of the many examples of night marches during the war.

The movement of the whole of General Grant's army from the Wilderness to Spottsylvania was made during the nights of the 7th and deriess to Spottsylvania was made during the lights of the full at 8th of May, 1864.

The movement of the same army from Spottsylvania to North Anna was commenced on the night of the 21st of March, 1864.

The movement from Cold Harbor to James River was commenced after dark on the night of June 12, 1864. In fact nearly all the movements of General Grant's immense army in his last campaign were made more or less during the night.

Thus, it will be seen that the entire army of General Grant was specesfully moved at night.

successfully moved at night.

The remarks which I made with reference to the responsibility of any one corps commander of delaying the execution of an order can be appreciated when you think of the great confusion which would have occurred and the disasters which might have taken place in any one of these movements had such disobedience occurred. It seems to me that any disinterested person will say, after examining this subject, that General Porter was not guiltless in the delay which he made.

made.

As I before said, it is not an excuse that the march would have been an unnecessary one if performed in accordance with the order, particularly in the absence of any proof that that was the moving cause in General Porter's mind, and that the delay resulted in good to the Army. The fact that General Porter did not show this order to his division commanders at the time, or consult them, so that they might have given an opinion based upon an imperative order of that might have given an opinion based upon an imperative order of that kind, is, in my opinion, very much against him, and I am quite sure that General Sykes, of whom the Senator from Indiana spoke so highly at the last session, and in whose praise of him I am glad to join, spoke the sentiments of his heart when he said promptly, on the first presentation of this order to him, that if he had known the nature of the order he would have advised a strict compliance with it. The Senator from Indiana said that General Sykes was a most relia-The Senator from Indiana said that General Sykes was a most reliable witness, and it is surely not for me to attempt to impeach his testimony. I held General Sykes in high regard, and I introduced the resolution into this Senate touching the removal of his remains. My desire was to do honor to the memory of a brave soldier by granting his last dying request, which was to be buried at West Point. An examination of the evidence given by him shows clearly that his friendship for General Porter had to some extent biased his judgment. The conclusions of the board upon this subject are erroneous, and the statement in their report that "the evidence of bad animus in Porter's case ceases to be material in view of the evidence of his soldierly and faithful conduct" falls to the ground, because it was not soldierly and faithful in him to disobey the order. Therefore we must assume that any appearance of bad animus prior to the disobedience must be taken into account in making up judgment and the statement of the board that "these charges and specifications certainly bear no discernible resemblance to the facts of the case as now established," cannot, in any degree, apply to this specification, because the specification and facts of the case as developed by both the evidence and animus are exactly coincident with this specification.

I shall pursue the criticism upon the first paragraph no further. Now, in reference to what I call the second erroneous paragraph of the report, which reads as follows:

the report, which reads as follows:

We trust it is not necessary for us to submit in detail the results of this compar-ison, and that it will be sufficient for us to point out the fundamental errors and to say that all the essential facts in every instance stand out in clear and absolute contrast to those supposed facts upon which General Porter was adjudged guilty.

I have already referred in my report to the mistake made by the board in this paragraph. It must be plain to every Senator that there was a very great necessity for this board to give in absolute and accurate detail the results of its comparisons, and to point out accurately what it considered the "fundamental errors" in the former trial. There are but very few Senators who can give the time necessary to an accurate examination of the four volumes connected with this trial. Livil venture to say that not half a dozen Senators have attempted it. How is it possible for them to make themselves intelligent judges in the case without a proper examination? If they say that they are willing to take the judgment of the officers, then they must expect Senators who disagree with the report to criticise that judgment; and the very first specification of the charge, when compared with the facts of the case, shows that these officers have made an incorrect statement in their report. Therefore Senators can not rely upon their opinion as a basis for an absolutely intelligent vote upon an important case like this. It was consequently very necessary, as I have before stated, for them to enter into an absolute detail in making up their conclusions.

Now, Mr. President, as to the third erroneous paragraph in this report, that "Porter's faithful subordinate and intelligent conduct that afternoon saved the Union army from the defeat which would otherwise have resulted that day from the enemy's more speedy concentra-

Is it for any power save that High Power which is over and around all of us to form this conclusion? How do these officers know that Porter saved that army? If they had said that they believed it was so, Porter saved that army? If they had said that they believed it was so, there might have been some excuse for the statement; but even then it would seem to me very absurd. Who saved that Army from defeat on that day or upon any other day? Where on that day was Reno, Kearney, King, Reynolds, Ricketts, McDowell, Heintzelman, Hooker, Schenck, Schurz? I do not mention the commander of the army, Pope; not from any disposition of disrespect, but because it would at once excite opposition in the minds of those who are so strenuously determined to vindicate General Porter at all hazards. What would the officers and soldiers of the commands of these officers to whom I the officers and soldiers of the commands of these officers to whom I have referred say to an assertion that General Porter saved the Union army from defeat on that day? Is it just and fair to these brave com-manding officers or their subordinates and soldiers to make such an assertion? The statement of itself seems almost too absurd to demand criticism. The bare statement of the proposition shows its absurdity, criticism. The bare statement of the proposition shows its absurdity, and I need say nothing more about it.

The fourth erroneous paragraph of the report, of which I speak, which says that "the judgment of the court-martial upon General Porter's conduct was evidently based upon greatly erroneous impressions, not only respecting what that conduct really was and the orders under which he was acting, but also respecting all the circumstances under which he acted," can be treated very much in the same way that the preceding paragraphs have been treated. How was it possible for this board to know what entered the minds of members of this court in making up their judgment? To be sure there is a saving clause in this statement when they use the word "evidently." There are members of that court still living who know better what was in their minds and what ruled their action during this trial than the members of this board, but the obligations attaching to members of courts-martial will forever prevent us from knowing what they

the members of this board, but the obligations attaching to members of courts-martial will forever prevent us from knowing what they were, except through a "court of justice in due course of law." They were certainly not known to the members of this board.

The fifth erroneous paragraph which alludes to the indiscretion of Porter, in speaking in unkind terms of his superior officer, and ends as follows, "and to that indiscretion was due, in very great measure, the misinterpretation of both his motives and his conduct and his consequent condemnation" is very much akin to the preceding paragraph. consequent condemnation," is very much akin to the preceding paragraph, differing from it only in one respect: that this paragraph states positively that his condemnation was due in a very great measure to this indiscretion; and I will say of it, as I said of the previous one, that only the officers now living who composed that court can state what feelings possessed the members of that court when they

The Senator from Indiana speaks of the composition of this court and the method of its organization in something of the spirit of the remarks which are frequently made in connection with this case, to the effect that the board was organized to convict. Now, Mr. President, I will say that I had as good an opportunity at that period of time of knowing the moving causes of action with reference to the Army by the President and the commanding general as almost any other officer. There were certainly not a score of officers in the Army who knew more about it than I did, and I feel justified in saying that I believe this court was organized in exact accordance with the wishes of the President; and had the charges been preferred by General Pope, which would have necessitated the ordering of the court by the President, General Halleck and the President would have acted in perfect accord, and the same court would have been ordered for their trial that was ordered by General Halleck. The Senator from Indiana speaks of the fact that two of the officers of the court were connected with General Pope's army, and that one member of it was summoned as a witness by the Government. Does the Senator from Indiana mean to say that this circumstance in any degree affected their acmean to say that this circumstance in any degree affected their action? The offenses with which Porter was charged had no relation to them whatever, and can be in no way fairly connected with them. Is there any man living to-day who will say that they were not honorable men and were not properly impressed with the responsibilities and importance of the oaths under which they were acting? I will say of that whole court that I have never yet heard anything of a definite character to impugn the intelligence or the integrity of any one of its members.

Now, Mr. President, I propose to say something with reference to the general conduct of this board.

the general conduct of this board.

No one can examine the report of the board carefully without discovering that it has in every instance given to General Porter's side of the case the most favorable possible construction. As I said in my report, the case of General Porter was conducted in the most skillful manner, and every statement presented by them seems to have been eagerly seized by the board, and all the evidence was construed in the most favorable way to General Porter's claim.

Every man who felt disposed to say anything favorable to General Porter would most naturally apply to come before the board, and the majority of those who had information detrimental to him would be inclined to keep away from the board, from a disposition not to

Every man who felt disposed to say anything favorable to General Porter would most naturally apply to come before the board, and the majority of those who had information detrimental to him would be inclined to keep away from the board, from a disposition not to persecute a man who was in trouble. To be sure, some vindictive persons who knew of damaging circumstances might be inclined to present themselves voluntarily to the board; but I say the majority, and a very large majority, of people who felt that they would damage Porter by giving evidence kept away from the board if they could, and there was no power to compel their attendance. As a fact, there were persons summoned by the Government whose attendance could not be secured from want of power. It is not reasonable to suppose that General Porter or his friends called persons before the board after having discovered by correspondence or otherwise with them that their evidence would not be advantageous to him. If the Senate of the United States were to treat the report of this board in the same spirit that the evidence of young Captain Pope, (now deceased,) General McDowell, General Sturgis, Colonel Smith, Generals Schenck and Barnes was treated by the board, the whole report would be thrown out as unworthy of consideration. It appeared in evidence before the board that two men assert that Captain Pope told them, at a dinner table, I believe, that he was wrong in the evidence which he gave before the original court-martial; but Captain Pope, before this board, reiterated substantially what he said before the court, except that he might possibly be mistaken to the extent of half an hour in the time of the delivery of the 4.30 order from General Pope to General Porter, and testified to his exact route from personal examination; but the board, in the most imperative way, cast aside his whole evidence as utterly worthless, on the ground of a slight discrepancy, and on the statement of two officers that Pope, at some period of time, had said something to them. N certainly the depreciation of nearly every other general officer on the field of the second Bull Run.

Courts-martial, Mr. President, although sometimes harsh in their sentences, are proverbially fair. They are not confined strictly to the rules of evidence. Judge-advocates are not allowed to browbeat and confuse witnesses. The members of the court almost always are of sufficient intelligence to determine when a witness is telling the truth, and there is no necessity for the cross-questioning which law-yers resort to in civil trials. They are not confined to precise rules and maxims of law in making up evidence. They make their verdicts more from the equities of the case, or rather from the animus of the parties concerned in relation to the points at issue. It is sometimes thought that they are led to the condemnation of men upon light evidence, but you will always find behind that there is something or other in the record of the man which justifies the court in making the offense for which he is tried an excuse for giving him what may appear to in the record of the man which justifies the court in making the offense for which he is tried an excuse for giving him what may appear to be a harsh punishment. The esprit de corps which makes a good army makes it necessary for courts to take the daily walks of a man's life into consideration in making up a sentence against him. Such is not the case at all, or to any great extent, before civil courts. A man's character is only considered in the mitigation of sentences.

Many lawyers, and eminent lawyers, too, have given an opinion as to the propriety and justness of the sentence in this case, but they have given their opinion in very much the same way as they would give an opinion as to the violation of a contract. They have looked at all the legal points in the case, and have said that in their view General Porter fulfilled his contract.

Porter fulfilled his contract.

Well, now there is no such condition of affairs as that existing in the life of a soldier. A soldier is not only bound to obey all the orders that are given to him, but he is bound to use his best efforts to promote the cause for which he is fighting. He is bound at all times to show alacrity, to show co-operation, and to smother any feeling of distrust which he may have of his superior officers. He is certainly bound at all events to speak of them in respectful terms, and to yield to them a respectful and loyal obedience. When he undertakes to disobey an order, or undertakes to judge for himself as to how far he shall carry out an order, then he subjects himself surely to criticism, possibly to punishment, and the animus of his conduct becomes a legitimate subject of examination, not only by the people and the country for which he is fighting, but by any court which may be ordered to try him; and if the service in which he is engaged is of sufficient importance to stir the hearts of a great people, then if he fails in doing what they consider to be a loyal service, he must expect to receive the punishment which the hearts of that loyal people say he ought to receive at that time, and it is not fair that he should in time of profound peace, when the excitement of the people has ought to receive at that time, and it is not fair that he should in time of profound peace, when the excitement of the people has cooled off, and their patriotism is to a certain extent at rest, ask them in their leniency to forgive him for what he did in a time when his whole heart should have been in their service. Therefore, Mr. President, I do not regard the opinion of these lawyers—and I say this with all due respect to them and to their course—I do not regard their opinion as worth anything to me in making up my mind as to whether this sentence was just or unjust. As I have said before, I would be glad to have General Porter tried now by thirteen intelligent officers of the Army. That is surely the most that he can ask. I will say again, Mr. President, that there is a great difference between fulfilling contracts of a civil nature in times of profound peace when it is understood that all business men have the right to look to their own interests and when they have a right to take all fair peace when it is understood that all business men have the right to look to their own interests and when they have a right to take all fair legitimate mercantile advantage of each other in order to make gain in trade or to make advancement in politics and the contract which a soldier makes with the country to do his duty in the field when the liberties or the safety of that country is in jeopardy.

Ask me, Mr. President, to believe that men who had been educated by the Government of the United States, and were officers in the regular Army at the breaking out of the rebellion, threw up their commissions and went with the armies of the South because they believed that their allegiance to their States was paramount to their allegiance to the Union—ask me to believe that they have come back into this Union with upright intention and with loyalty in which we can be confident—ask me to believe that all the officers and soldiers of the confederate army felt that they were fighting for a just cause—but ask me not to believe that General Porter during the last days of Angust, 1862, did not think more of the interests and the advancement of one man than he did of the welfare of the Republic.

So the bill was passed. Mr. EDMUNDS. Now Mr. EDMUNDS. Now, I would like to know what has become of the preamble, which is the next thing to be voted upon, and I desire to hear it read.

Mr. RANDOLPH. That has been withdrawn.
Mr. EDMUNDS. You cannot withdraw the preamble to a bill very easily in any way that I know of. Let us hear how it reads.
Mr. DAWES. Was not the amendment I offered to strike out the preamble and all after the enacting clause?

Mr. EDMUNDS. You could not amend the preamble at that stage.

It comes up now after the passage of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will report the pre-

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Whereas a board of Army officers was convened by order of the President, by special orders numbered 78, dated headquarters of the Army, Washington, April 12, 1878, to examine, in connection with the record of the trial by court-martial of Major-General Porter, such new evidence relating to the merits of said case as was then on file in the War Department, together with such other evidence as might be presented to said board, and to report, with the reasons for their conclusion, what action, if any, in their opinion, justice required should be taken on said application by the President, and said board reported that they had made a very thorough examination of all the evidence presented and bearing in any manner upon the merits of the case, in addition to that which was before the court-martial; and also reported with entire unanimity and without doubt in their own minds, with the reasons for their conclusions, that in their opinion justice required such action as might be necessary to annul and set aside the findings and sentence of the court-martial in the case of Major-General Fitz-John Porter, and to restore him to the positions of which that sentence deprived him, such restoration to take effect from the date of his dismissal from the service; and

Whereas the President sid heretofore transmit the proceedings and conclusions of the board to Congress with a message declaring that, as he was without power in the absence of legislation to act upon the recommendation of the report further than by submitting the same to Congress, the said proceedings and conclusions were transmitted for the information of Congress, and for such action as in their wisdom should seem expedient and just: Therefore,

Mr. RANDOLPH. By reference to the Congressional Record of to-day, containing the proceedings of yesterday, page 6, it will be found that the Vice-President stated that—

The Senator from New Jersey proposes to strike out the preamble and also all after the enacting clause of the bill, and to insert what will now be read.

after the enacting clause of the bill, and to insert what will now be read.

That was my motion, and that was adopted.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The trouble is that the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey was not adopted. The Senator from Massachusetts proposed another one, that was read at the desk, which did not propose to strike out the preamble, and the Senator from New Jersey accepted that in lieu of his amendment. That leaves the preamble just where it was. The Senate has not voted yet either way on striking out the preamble. Regularly it could not do so until the bill was disposed of.

Mr. RANDOLPH. If the Senator from Vermont desires a further vote, of course I have no objection to it.

vote, of course I have no objection to it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not desire anything except to keep the record straight.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I am very sure that the same words as quoted by me from yesterday's RECORD in regard to the amendment offered by me yesterday were adopted by me this morning in accepting the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Journal does not show it in that way.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state to the Senator from New Jersey that the record as kept by the Clerk shows that the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts was to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert.

Mr. CARPENTER. And that is the amendment that was adopted. Mr. THURMAN. I am quite sure the Senate understood that the preamble had fallen; that it was withdrawn, as the Senator from New Jersey had moved to strike out the preamble and all the bill after the enacting clause and insert a substitute.

Mr. CARPENTER. That question was not put to the Senate at all. Mr. LOGAN. It was never voted on.

Mr. CARPENTER. It was never voted em at all, and subsequently the Senator from Massachusetts offered a substitute.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state to the Senator from Ohio that the record as kept by the Clerk shows that the Senator from New Jersey proposed to strike out the preamble and all after the enacting clause and to insert the amendment offered by him. The Senator from Massachusetts offered a substitute for the him. The Senator from Massachusetts offered a substitute for the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey, and that substitute proposed to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the amendment proposed by that Senator, and that amendment was accepted by the Senator from New Jersey, and was adopted by the Senate.

Mr. THURMAN. Then if we are to vote on the preamble, I ask that it may be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will again report the preamble.

The Chief Clerk read the preamble.

Mr. THURMAN. Now I have only to say that I am very glad that that preamble has not been stricken out, and I hope that it will be

Mr. EDMUNDS. It probably will, if the Senate votes as it has Mr. EDMUNDS. It probably will, it the Senate votes as it has voted before although it is somewhat inconsistent with the bill. We seem to agree by this preamble that as a unanimous report of a constitutional board of officers having no doubt in their own minds declares that this officer had been unjustly sentenced by a courtmartial, and that that court-martial proceeding ought to be set aside by act of Congress as transmitted to us by the President; therefore, instead of proceeding to set it aside by act of Congress, as is argued by gentlemen who maintain this bill, or restoring to the individual the justice which the preamble recites he is entitled to, we say that the President of the United States may, with the consent of the Senate, (this, or some other that may be of a different mind,) appoint him, as is claimed by the friends of the bill, to a colonelcy on the retired list, and as would be claimed by them, and I think correctly myself, at the foot of the retired list. I think that is the law. I was in hopes that gentlemen would consent to an amendment which should put him not over the heads of those whose gallantry and merit have never been questioned, and who are suffering from wounds received in the service of what they supposed to be their country; but it was not done. That is the aspect of it. Now, then, if the Senate chooses to make itself so inconsistent as to adopt a preamble which declares in substance that although this officer is entitled to an absolute restoration, as the bill to which the preamble belongs provided he should be, with all the intermediate pay and emoluments, and so forth, although that is all true and was find it so by adopting this preamble voted before although it is somewhat inconsistent with the bill. toration, as the bill to which the preamble belongs provided he should be, with all the intermediate pay and emoluments, and so forth, although that is all true and we find it so by adopting this preamble, nevertheless all that we are willing to do is to authorize the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to disregard the sentence of a constitutional tribunal, a court, and do something that the law says shall not be done in such a case. If the gentlemen in the majority are satisfied, I think I can bear it. I ask for the yeas and nays on the adoption of the preamble.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 133.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I had given notice that at the conclusion of the Fitz-John Porter bill I should call up House joint resolution No. 116, but as I understand the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] wishes to occupy the floor, I of course will give way, and will renew my motice that to-morrow morning after the morning hour I shall call up the joint resolution.

Mr. McDONALD. I desire to give notice that at the conclusion of the morning business to-morrow I shall ask that the Senate consider the morning business to-morrow I shall ask that the senate consider the pending motion on bill No. 19, which is a motion to reconsider the vote by which Senate bill No. 19 was indefinitely postponed at the last session. The bill to which I refer is entitled "A bill to au-thorize the Secretary of the Interior to ascertain and certify the amount of land located with military warrants in the States described therein, and for other purposes." It stands on a motion to reconsider the vote by which the Senate postponed indefinitely the consideration of that bill at the last session. Being a motion to reconsider I shall ask at the conclusion of the morning business to-morrow that that motion has called up. be called up.

Mr. SCOVILLE on the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and on the Committee on the Census, to fill vacancies.

VISITORS TO MILITARY ACADEMY.

The SPEAKER. The Chair also announces the appointment of Mr. Scales, Mr. Cook, and Mr. Williams of Wisconsin, as Visitors to the Military Academy.

UNMAILABLE MATTER IN WASHINGTON CITY POST-OFFICE.

Mr. MONEY. I rise to make a privileged report. I am instructed by the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads to report back the resolution referred to that committee, which I send to the desk with an amendment.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Whereas it is alleged that there are in the city post-office at Washington, District of Columbia, certain bags of mail matter which are there detained for the want of postage; and Whereas it is alleged that they were attempted to be sent under frank, and did not contain matter which could properly be sent through the mails under the franking privilege: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Postmaster-General be, and he is hereby, requested, if not incompatible with the interests of the public service, to report to this House as soon as practicable all the facts relating to the receipt and detention of said mail matter by the postmaster of Washington City.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will cause the rule to be read. The committee are compelled to report within one week.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. Rule IX does not make this a privileged question. I am opposed to the resolution and amendment. This is an attempt to resurrect certain slanders out of the débris of the late political canvass.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the first clause of Rule XXIV.

The Clerk read as follows:

1. Each Monday morning during a session of Congress, immediately after the Journal of the proceedings of the last day's sitting has been read and approved, the Speaker shall call all the States and Territories in alphabetical order for bills and joint resolutions for printing and reference, on which call, joint and concurrent resolutions and memorials of State and territorial Legislatures may be presented and appropriately referred, and on this call only, resolutions of inquiry directed to the heats of the Executive Departments shall be in order for reference to appropriate committees, which resolutions shall be reported to the House within one week thereafter.

The SPEAKER. The House will observe this rule is mandatory and states the committee shall report within one week. Now if the committee must report within one week it is the duty of the Chair at some time to recognize a gentleman to make such report; and the Chair has always recognized it as in the nature of a compulsory or privileged report under the rules of the House.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. The gentleman from Mississippi said he rose to make a privileged report, and, as I understood, made the report not under the rule which the Chair caused to be read, but under the pinth rule.

under the ninth rule.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not rule that this is a question of privilege under Rule IX. But the Chair recognized the gentleman from Mississippi to make a report under the rule that has just been read. That rule is mandatory and states that the committee shall report within one week.

Mr. MILLS. Is it a privileged question for consideration now, or simply privileged for reporting?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can raise the question of consideration. The power to report in this case and under such circumstances would be of no value if the House had not the power to con-

Mr. FINLEY. If there be a privilege to report, it must necessarily carry with it the privilege to consider.

The SPEAKER. In such case as now presented it follows as a natural consequence.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. Do I understand the Chair to decide that the resolution is new up for consideration?

The SPEAKER. The Chair so decides. Such has been the practice of the committee is now before the Breaker. The consideration and the question is first on the amendment recommended by the committee.

Mr. BUCKNER. I call for the reading of the report again.

The resolution and amendment were again read.

Mr. MONEY. I move the previous question.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. I do not think the gentleman from.

Mississippi can move the previous question while I have the floor.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman making the report has the control of the matter and the floor until an adverse vote by the House thereon

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. I claim to have held the floor while waiting for the reading of the resolution.

I am not aware of any rule which makes this report a privileged question. It contains nothing, no allegation affecting the dignity, integrity, and safety of the proceedings of this House; nor does it affect by its allegations the rights, reputation, and conduct of members individually in their representative capacity.

The first clause alleges that certain mail matter is detained for want of postage. If this is true, the law directs the disposition to be made of such matter.

The second clause alleges an attempt by some one unnamed and unknown to frank such matter. There is no allegation that any member of Congress was privy to the attempt to frank the matter so detained for want of postage.

The amendment of the committee is simply an attempt to stir up the embers of our late political strife and rake out something to be made the subject of special investigation whereby to blacken or damage the character of some innocent and unoffending person.

damage the character of some innocent and unoffending person. It has been, I am informed, a very common custom of all parties to leave franked envelopes with their respective committees for legitimate use in sending out such public documents as are authorized by law to be franked; and if an unknown person, as in the instance under consideration, should have made improper use, or attempted to make improper use, of such franks, without the knowledge or consent of the member whose frank has been thus abused, it cannot affect the conduct of the member, and thereby become a privileged question; and, if now in order, I will move to lay the report on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was not agreed to, upon a division—aves 29: noes 91.

ayes 29; noes 91.

The amendment reported from the committee was then agreed to, and the resolution as amended was adopted.

Mr. MONEY moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

NICARAGUA CANAL COMPANY.

Mr. MORTON, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 6609) to incorporate the Maritime Canal Company of Nicaragua; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

NATIONAL RAILWAY FROM NEW YORK TO COUNCIL BLUFFS.

Mr. DIBRELL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back the following with an adverse recommendation:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to furnish this House, at as early a day as practicable, from such information as he has at hand, an estimate of the cost of a double-track steel railway to run from New York City, New York, to Council Bluffs, Iowa, the terminus of the Union Pacific Railroad, the road to be thoroughly built and properly equipped for a great national and enilitary highway.

The resolution was laid upon the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

HOME FOR AMERICAN SEAMEN.

Mr. YOUNG, of Ohio, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 6610) to encourage American seamen, and to provide for aged, helpless, and disabled seamen, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the call of committees for reports, and the morning hour will begin at twenty-five minutes before one o'clock.

EXPENSES IN CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE.

Mr. SPRINGER, from the Committee on Elections, reported back, with a recommendation that the same do lie upon the table, the petition of John M. Bradley for additional apprepriation for expenses in contested-election case of Bradley vs. Slemons.

Mr. KEIFER. Is there any written report accompanying that petition ?

Mr. SPRINGER. There is no written report.

The SPEAKER. There should be one. The House can give consent that the report be submitted hereafter.

Mr. KEIFER. You had better withdraw the petition now.

Mr. SPRINGER. It is merely an adverse report. I can hand in the written report to the Clerk hereafter. There being no objection, the petition was received and laid upon the table.

JOHN B. DAVIS.

Mr. STONE, from the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, reported, as a substitute for House bill No. 4699, a bill (H. R. No. 6611) for the relief of John B. Davis; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MARIA L. LEE.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF, of Ohio, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 4009) granting a pension to Maria L. Lee and her children; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

The SPEAKER. The call of committees for reports has been con-

ELECTORAL COUNT.

Mr. BICKNELL. I now call up the unfinished business of yesterday.

The SPEAKER. The unfinished business of yesterday is the concurrent resolution of the Senate in relation to the electoral count, on which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] is entitled to

Mr. BICKNELL. I move the previous question on the concurrent

Mr. SPRINGER. I obtained the floor yesterday on this resolution, but I will give way at this time with the understanding that I can have the floor after the previous question shall have been ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will have such right as the rules give him.

Mr. MILLS. I desire to inquire of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BICKNELL] if he will permit the amendment to be offered suggested the other day in the colloquy between the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. McLane] and myself, and that the votes shall be counted by the concurrence of both Houses?

Mr. BICKNELL. I am not authorized to admit any amendment.

The question was taken upon seconding the previous question; and upon a division there were ayes 81, noes none.

Mr. CONGER. No quorum has voted.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. BICKNELL and Mr. CONGER were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported that there were ayes 87, noes none.

Mr. CONGER. No quorum.

Mr. BICKNELL. The point being made that no quorum has voted, the only motions now in order, I believe, are a motion for a call of the House and a motion to adjourn. I move that there be a call of the House

The motion was agreed to; more than fifteen voting in the affirmative.

The Clerk proceeded to call the roll, when the following members

Crowley, Davidson, Davis, Lowndes H. Dickey,	Kitchin, Knott, Lapham, Martin, Joseph J.	Persons, Robeson, Ross, Russell, Daniel L.	Wood, Walter A. Wright, Young, Casey.

The SPEAKER. The roll-call discloses the presence of a quorum, two hundred and thirty-one members having answered to their names.

Mr. BOWMAN. Mr. Speaker, I came in when the first roll-call was half through. Cannot my name be recorded?

The SPEAKER. Did the gentleman answer at either roll-call?

Mr. BOWMAN. I came in when the first roll-call was half through; but being engaged in conversation did not notice when my name was called on the second roll-call.

The SPEAKER. The Chair cannot afford the gentleman any remcalled on the second roll-call.

The SPEAKER. The Chair cannot afford the gentleman any remedy under the rule. The gentleman's statement will go into the Record, showing that he is in fact present.

Mr. BICKNELL. A quorum being present, I move that all proceedings under the call be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. BICKNELL. The proceedings this morning have shown that our friends on the other side are in no better mind since the debate than they were before. Under existing circumstances I will not press any further the consideration of the resolution at this time. I give notice that I will bring it forward in January next, as soon as I can find one hundred and forty-seven members present on this side of the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection to the motion of the gentleman to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

Mr. CONGER. In reply to the remark of the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. BICKNELL,] I desire to say that we shall be exceedingly gratified if our course should compel members on the other side to be present and attend to their duties.

The SPEAKER. And the Chair also will be very much gratified if it should have the effect of bringing absentees to the House.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering the funding bill.

Mr. REAGAN. If it is in order, I move as a substitute for that motion to take up the special order, House bill No. 4748, to establish a board of commissioners of interstate commerce, and for other purposes, which was made a special order for the 24th of March last, and from day to day thereafter, to be acted on in the House as in Committee of

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I will inquire of the Chair whether a privileged motion such as mine can be antagonized by a motion of this character?

Mr. REAGAN. If the gentleman will allow me to answer, I will

It is competent for a member to raise the question of consideration upon a report, even though a question of privilege is involved in the report.

I refer to the Manual, page 254.

The SPEAKER. The question involved here is whether a motion to go into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union takes precedence over a motion to consider a special assignment on the House Calendar. To bring directly to the mind of the House the point involved, the question is whether a motion the object of which is to reach the interstate-commerce bill, which is on the House Calendar, has precedence over the motion of the gentleman from New York. The Chair thinks it has not. The fourth clause of Rule XXIV provides that-

After the hour shall have been devoted to reports from committees it shall be in order to proceed to the consideration of the unfinished business in which the House may have been engaged at an adjournment.

The record shows that the bill indicated by the gentleman from Texas, [Mr. Reagan,] while it is on the House Calendar, has never yet been considered. It cannot, therefore, be viewed in the light of unfinished business. The rule goes on to state—

Unfinished business having been disposed of, it shall be in order to entertain a motion that the House do now proceed to the business on the Speaker's table.

That motion has not been made to-day.

Business on the Speaker's table having been disposed of, it shall then be in order to entertain motions, in the following order, viz:

First. That the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to consider, first, bills raising revenue and general appropriation bills, and then other business on its Calendar.

Second. To proceed to the consideration of business on the House Calendar.

The mode of proceeding under the rules to reach the bill which the gentleman from Texas desires to take up is to vote down the motion to go into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. The Chair will then recognize a motion that the House proceed to the consideration of business on the House Calendar. That is the order which the rule prescribes. If the House should vote to consider the House Calendar, then under another rule the bills on that Calendar will be taken up in their order. This latter proceeding will be under control of the House in the Committee of the Whole.

control of the House in the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. REAGAN. I will inquire of the Speaker, for information, whether the only mode of raising the question of priority on the motion of the gentleman from New York is by voting it down? I will inquire whether I cannot offer my proposition as a substitute for the proposition of the gentleman from New York?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not. The motion of the gentleman from New York is not amendable. If a majority of the Mouse desires to take up the bill indicated by the gentleman from Texas, the mode of reaching that end is to vote down the proposition to go the mode of reaching that end is to vote down the proposition to go into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. The Chair would then feel obliged under the rule to recognize the gentleman would then feel obliged under the rule to recognize the gentleman from Texas. The Chair will now say that on any day when there is no motion made having priority of the motion to proceed to the House Calendar, the Chair will recognize the gentleman for that motion.

Mr. REAGAN. If I understand, however, the suggestion of the Speaker, (I do not know that I do understand it,) the motion to go into Committee of the Whole on any measure excludes, without the power of raising the question of consideration, the right to proceed to the consideration of a special order.

The SPEAKER. The question of consideration is practically raised by a vote on the motion of the gentleman from New York. If a negative vote should be given on the motion to go into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, it is a refusal of the House to con-Whole on the state of the Union, it is a refusal of the House to consider bills under the clause of the rule which permits the motion to be made which the Chair recognized, and the Chair would then recognize the motion next provided for under the rules.

Mr. REAGAN. I do not know, Mr. Speaker, that it would be in order for me to say a word on the question of consideration at this time. If it would, I should like to say a word to the House.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman has the consent of the House, the Chair will be glad to listen to him, but, under the rules, questions of priority of business are not debatable.

Mr. REAGAN. I understand that, but I do not think there will be objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection, and the gentleman

Mr. REAGAN. I wish to say a word. The special order for the consideration of the bill to regulate interstate commerce was made on the 18th of February last. It is a measure of importance which has been pressed upon the attention of the House and the committee by the agricultural, manufacturing, and commercial interests of almost the entire country. It will doubtless be conceded that there is no measure before Congress of greater importance or which should receive prompter action on the part of this House. It will not take up so great a length of time as to prevent action on the funding bill, and I respectfully and earnestly ask the House to take up the interand I respectfully and carnestly ask the House to take up the interstate commerce bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has cited the rules which govern him in practice; but, in justice to himself, he ought also have read another rule, which was the result of a compromise between the committees of the House. The Clerk will read clause 9 of Rule XVI.

The Clerk read as follows:

At any time after the expiration of the morning hour it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering bills raising revenue or general appropriation bills.

The SPEAKER. There is an evident conflict here, but the conflict does not displace in any respect the priority of the motion to go into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

In reply to the gentleman from Texas, the Chair desires to say he agrees with the gentleman as so the importance of the subject to which he has alluded, and the Chair will take the greatest pleasure in recognizing him on any day when these prior motions as provided under the rules are not pending or may, if pending, be disposed of.

Mr. REAGAN. Allow me one word. I had somehow got the impression that the question of consideration could be raised at any time when there was not a question of privilege up for consideration.

The SPEAKER. The better way to raise the question of consideration on a motion of this sort is to vote it down. That is the most

Mr. HOOKER. I desire to say, Mr. Speaker, that according to the rules as they are at present we have three calendars of business in this House, and all bills before the House are upon one or the other. We have the House Calendar, the Calendar of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and the Calendar of the Committee of the Whole House on private bills. I shall insist, therefore, when it is moved to go into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and that motion is adopted, the committee shall take up the business on the Calendar as it stands there shall take up the business on the Calendar as it stands there.

The SPEAKER. The rule fixes that, and the Chair will cause to be read the rule the administration of which the gentleman from Mississippi commends.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I do not think it necessary to make any reply to the gentleman from Texas as to the relative importance of these two bills. I am quite sure the funding bill is second to none before the House in gravity, importance, and necessity for immediate passage. The interstate-commerce bill has had no more struggle in this House than has the funding bill. While the interstate-commerce bill might, possibly, in the opinion of some gentlemen, go over without injury to the country, no man is willing to concede, I believe, that the funding bill can be postponed without serious injury. Therefore I claim it is a privileged question.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not entertain it in that light, but

The SPEARER. The Chair does not entertain it in that light, but in the light of a prior motion, according to the rules.

Mr. BLOUNT. Before that motion is put I should like to say to the gentleman from New York that probably there will be printed and ready for consideration to-morrow four regular appropriation bills, and to ask him whether he will not be willing to yield at that time to go on with these bills.

The SPEAKER. That will be a matter within the volition of the House

Mr. BLOUNT. I so understand.

The SPEAKER. The agreement made gives the appropriation bills in the committee prior claim for consideration, if the House so wish. Mr. BLOUNT. I so understood, and thought it would be agreea-ble to the gentleman from New York to have an understanding on the matter at this time.

The SPEAKER. However, these questions are to be decided by the chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I have no desire to antagonize the appropriation bills. The bills which the gentleman from Georgia refers to scarcely ever give rise to lengthy discussion, and the whole four may be passed in a few hours. I shall not antagonize the appropriation bills, which require immediate action.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York agreed originally that he would not that he would not.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I will not, although I have a ruling under the rule that revenue bills have precedence over appropriation bills and should be first considered.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read from the Journal.

The Clerk read as follows:

House bill No. 4592.—Mr. FERNANDO WOOD, from the Committee on Ways and Means, reported a bill to facilitate the refunding of the national debt; which was made the special order immediately after the morning hour for the first Tuesday in March, and from day to day until disposed of, to the exclusion of existing orders, but not to interfere with the appropriation bills.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will cause to be read the rule which should govern the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The Clerk read as follows:

Rule XXIII, clause 4:
In Committees of the Whole House, business on their calendars shall be taken up in regular order, except bills for raising revenue, general appropriation bills, and bills for the improvement of rivers and harbors, which shall have precedence, and when objection is made to the consideration of any bill or proposition, the committee shall thereupon rise and report such objection to the House, which shall decide, without debate, whether such bill or proposition shall be considered or laid aside for the present; whereupon the committee shall resume its sitting without further order of the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair only desires to add that he has nothing to do with the execution of the rules in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, or in the Committee of the Whole House on the other calendars.

Mr. SPRINGER. Before the question to resolve the House into Committee of the Whole is taken, I desire to ask whether it would not be in order, with the consent of the gentleman from New York, to move that general debate in the Committee of the Whole be limited to two hours? Or, let me ask, what time does the gentleman from New York suggest?
Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I think that after the several gentlemen who desire to discuss this question shall have concluded their rewho desire to discuss this question shall have concluded their remarks, if the House will consent to take it up to-day, I would like that to-morrow, after the speeches shall have been made to-day, to ask the House to limit debate at the close of to-morrow's session.

Mr. SPRINGER. I have no objection to debate under the five-minute rule. I think that is the debate from which most light is likely to be derived on this question.

Mr. WEAVER. I think this bill is of too much importance to limit debate on it.

Mr. PAGE. I think so, too.
Mr. WEAVER. There is no bill before the House which is so important as this is to the people of the country, and I am opposed to any limitation on the debate.

Mr. SPRINGER. I think that all the discussion that can be had on this bill under the five-minute rule will be of importance in throwing light upon it, but I think general debate had better be limited to a reasonable time.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say that the bill which I have mentioned here to-day is one which I and other gentlemen regard as of so much importance that I shall ask that a record be made of the votes of members who prefer to take up other business to that which I have indicated.

The SPEAKER. In what way does the gentleman desire to make a record?

Mr. REAGAN. By the yeas and nays on the motion.

The SPEAKER. Does he propose to do it on the present motion?

Mr. REAGAN. No, sir; not now; but I shall take the proper time to do so.

The SPEAKER. The question before the House is on the motion of the gentleman from New York, that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering the refunding bill.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 110, noes 47.

Mr. REAGAN. I call for the yeas and nays.

The years and pays were ordered.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 136, nays 90, not voting 65; as follows: YEAS-136.

The SPEAKER. Pending the announcement of the vote, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BRIGHT] asks leave to introduce a bill

MRS. JANE VENABLE.

Mr. BRIGHT, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 6612) for the relief of Mrs. Jane Venable; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE OF A BILL.

The SPEAKER. On yesterday there was a bill reported from the Committee on the Public Lands, the bill (H. R. No. 2666) for the benefit of homesteaders and pre-emptors of public lands, which was erroneously referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of It should have been referred to the House Calendar, and the Chair has caused the necessary change of reference to be made.

REPORTS OF FOREIGN AFFAIRS COMMITTEE.

Mr. COX. I desire to ask unanimous consent that the second Wedhesday of January be fixed for the consideration of business reported by the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. REAGAN. I will be obliged to object unless the order be so made as not to interfere with preceding orders.

Mr. COX. We have reported our business to the House and nothing has been done with it. Other committees have had their chance and I think we should have ours.

Mr. REAGAN. I would not object if the condition be added that this shall not interfere with the consideration of the interstate-commerce bill.

Mr. COX. I am willing to amend the proposition so that it shall not interfere with the bill in charge of the gentleman from Texas.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that the second Wednesday of January, after the morning hour, be assigned for the consideration of reports from the Committee on Foreign Affairs; not to interfere with appropriation bills, the funding bill, or the interstate-commerce bill. Is there objection?

Mr. COX. Let it be made an order continuing from day to day.

The SPEAKER. The House had better be advised that the effect of that might be to let the reports of the Committee on Foreign Affairs run for several days.

Mr. COX. If the House do not object, I am sure the Speaker will

Mr. REAGAN. I must object to the proposition as it is now made. MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Burch, its Secretary, informed the House that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. No. 1618) to amend section 553 of the Revised Statutes, relating to the District of Columbia; and

A bill (S. No. 1376) for the relief of Ella Carroll, formerly Ella

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the joint resolution of the House (H. R. No. 338) directing one copy of the Congressional Record to be sent to each of our legations abroad.

ELECTION OF POSTMASTER.

Mr. CABELL. Pending the announcement of the vote on going into Committee of the Whole, the gentleman from New York [Mr. Fernando Wood] yields to me to offer the resolution which I send

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That A. W. C. Nowlin, of Virginia, be appointed Postmaster of the House of Representatives to fill the vacancy occasioned by the death of James M.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. If this proposition is to create delay, as it probably will, I shall insist on the announcement of the vote.

Mr. CABELL. I think it will cause no delay.

Mr. REAGAN. Has the result of the vote on the motion to go into Committee of the Whole been announced?

The SPEAKER. The vote has not yet been announced. The Chair would not have entertained any proposition after the vote was an-

Mr. CONGER. I desire to offer an amendment to the resolution submitted by the gentleman from Virginia. I move to amend by striking out the name of A. W. C. Nowlin and inserting the name of Henry Sherwood. I desire to say, Mr. Speaker, that Mr. Sherwood, as all the members of the House will remember, was the last Postmaster of the House under republican administration. He was a gallant soldier of the Union Army, and lost one leg in the service of his country. He is a gentlemanly, courteous, and polite man, and performed the duties of that office while he held it, I believe, to the entire satisfaction of all the members of the House.

Mr. COOK. You can elect him Postmaster in the next Congress; you will be able to do it then you will be able to do it then.

Mr. SPARKS. The gentleman from Michigan is moving him for the next Congress.

Mr. CONGER. I think we had better elect him now.

Mr. CABELL. Mr. Nowlin, whom I have nominated as Postmaster of the House, is an honest, faithful, and efficient officer, and I think has given to all the members of the House satisfactory evidence of his capacity.

The SPEAKER. The question is first on the amendment.

Mr. CONGER. I call for the yeas and nays.

Blackburn, Bland,

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 100, nays 118, not voting 73; as follows:

Mr. Nowlin then appeared and took the oath of office as Postmaster of the House.

REFUNDING THE NATIONAL DEBT.

The SPEAKER. Upon the motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. Fernando Wood] that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union the yeas were 136, nays 90; so the motion was agreed to.

136, nays 90; so the motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. Covert in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 4592) to facilitate the refunding of the national debt. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Warner] is recognized by the Chair and is entitled to the floor. tled to the floor

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. Before the gentleman from Ohio proceeds to address the committee on the bill now before it, I wish to announce that the Committee on Ways and Means, since it reported this bill to the House, has agreed to propose a change in the rate of interest on the bonds to be issued, from 3½ per cent. to 3 per cent. per annum, and there probably will be one or two other merely techincal annum, and there probably will be one or two other merely technical amendments which the committee may submit to be acted upon.

Mr. KELLEY. Before the debate proceeds, I desire to submit, as by consent of the committee reporting this bill, a substitute therefor. The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to state to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] that he is somewhat in doubt whether the House in Committee of the Whole can entertain such a proposition at this time.

Mr. KELLEY I submit it simply that it way be reading before

Mr. KELLEY. I submit it simply that it may be pending before

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would suggest that it would be better to submit it as an individual proposition.

Mr. KELLEY. It is submitted as a substitute for the bill, with the knowledge and by the consent of the committee that reported the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The only embarrassment, in the judgment of the Chair, is as to the propriety of the introduction of this amendment while the House is in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. MILLS. The pending bill is as much subject to amendment in Committee of the Whole as in the House. The House is now in Committee of the Whole for the consideration of this whole ques-

The CHAIRMAN. The question in the mind of the Chair is, whether one committee of the House can report to another committee of the House. The House is now in Committee of the Whole for the discussion of this bill.

Mr. MILLS. The House is in Committee of the Whole for the discussion of the bill and the consideration of amendments to it.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I would inquire what is the pending

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Kelley] presents an amendment to the pending bill, announcing that he does it as the result of action on the part of the Committee on Ways and Means. The Chair would suggest the question whether one committee of the House may report in this way to another committee of the House. Mr. KELLEY. I beg leave to correct the Chair. I do not act as the organ of the Committee on Ways and Means. As a member of this Committee of the Whole I propose a substitute for this bill, and I state that I do so with the previous knowledge of the committee that reported the bill to the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair misunderstood the gentleman. He now understands that the gentleman offers this as his individual prop-now understands that the gentleman olders this as his individual proposition and not as a report from the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. KELLEY. That is so; and I ask that it be read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the substitute.

Mr. FINLEY. Is the substitute proposed by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] in the nature of an amendment?

Mr. MILLS. It is a substitute for the bill.

The Clerk read the substitute, as follows:

A bill to provide for the payment of the bonds falling due in 1881.

A bill to provide for the payment of the bonds falling due in 1881.

Section 1. Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to issue Treasury notes to the amount of $400,000,000, in denominations of not less than $10, bearing interest at the rate of 3 per cent. per annum, redeemable at any time at the pleasure of the Government after the 1st day of July, 1882, and to sell the same at not less than par. He is also authorized to issue bonds to the amount of $237,000,000 bearing interest at the rate of 3 per cent. per annum, and redeemable at the pleasure of the Government at any time after the 1st day of July, 1885, and to sell the same at not less than par. And the proceeds of the sale of said notes and bonds shall be applied to the payment of the bonds of the United States falling due in 1881.

Sec. 2. The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to exchange, at not less than par, any of the bonds or notes herein authorized for any bonds of the United States outstanding and which mature during the year 1881; and on the bonds so redeemed the Secretary of the Treasury may allow to the holders the difference between the interest of such bonds from the date of the exchange to the time of their maturity, and the interest for a like period on the bonds or notes issued; and the bonds so received and exchanged in pursuance of the provisions of this act shall be canceled and destroyed.

Sec. 3. The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to issue the said notes and bonds either coupon or registered, and in such form as he may prescribe.

Sec. 4. The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to make suitable regulations in compliance with this act, providing that the expense for the disposing of said notes and bonds authorized to be issued shall not exceed § of 1 per cent.

Mr. WARNER. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GHLLETTE]

Mr. WARNER. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GILLETTE] to offer an amendment.

Mr. GILLETTE. I offer as a substitute for the whole bill the proposition which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

osition which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill to provide for the payment of the public debt of the United States.

Be it enacted, &c., That all bonds of the United States which shall become redeemable in the year 1831 or prior thereto shall not be refunded or exchanged for other bonds of the United States, but shall be paid as hereinafter provided.

SEC. 2. That it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to set apart all surplus coin and paper money which may be in the Treasury from time to time as a fund for the payment of the said maturing bonds and for the purchase of silver bullion for minting purposes. The said Secretary of the Treasury shall cause to be coined at the mints of the United States standard silver coins to the full extent of the capacity of the mints; and he is hereby authorized to purchase the silver bullion for said purpose as provided in the act approved February 28, 1878, entitled "An act to authorize the coinage of the standard silver dollar, and to restore its legal-tender character."

SEC. 3. That it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to prepare Treasury notes to the amount of $340,000.000, with such additional amount as may be necessary to equal but not exceed the amount of national-bank notes in the United States as shown by the books of the Treasury on May 1, 1881. These notes shall be in denominations of one, two, five, ten, twenty, fifty, and one hundred dollars, as most adapted to the convenience of business, and shall be receivable for all dues, and debts, and taxes of every kind due or that shall become due to the United States, and shall be receivable for all dues and debts of every kind due from or that shall become due from the United States where not otherwise provided by law, and shall be receivable for all dues and debts of every kind due from or that shall become due from the United States where not otherwise expressly stipulated by contract. These notes shall be paid for an equal amount of United States bonds, unless coi shall return to the respective numes of issue of the payment by him.

SEC. 5. That as a further means for raising the necessary funds for the payment of all outstanding Government bonds it is hereby enacted that from and after May 1, 1880, here shall be imposed upon all not incomes exceeding $1,500 per annum of each and every citizen of the United States, taxes as follows, to wit: A tax of 3 per cent. upon all excess over $3,000; these taxes to be collected under the provisions of "an act to provide internal revenue to support the Government, and to pay interest on the public debt," approved July 1, 1882, as modified and in force after the act of March 2, 1867, so far as they may be applicable, with such provisions and penalties as therein prescribed.

SEC. 6. That in case there should not be sufficient accumulations in the Treasury to fully meet all of the said bonds of the United States, only-so many of them shall be called in as can be paid under the provisions of this act, but as fast as possible the Secretary of the Treasury shall call in, redeem, and cancel them.

Mr. WARNER. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McMillin] to offer an amendment.

Mr. McMillin. I desire merely to offer at this time an amendment to add to the first section of the pending bill these words:

And provided further, That the bonds issued under this act shall be subject to taxation as other property.

Let that amendment be pending.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks censent to submit at this time, and to have printed, as the Chair understands, the amendment he has just read. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. BUCKNER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WARNER] yields to me that I may have printed in the RECORD a substitute for the pending bill.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection that will be done.

There was no objection.

The substitute submitted by Mr. Buckner is as follows:

The substitute submitted by Mr. Buckner is as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

"That in lieu of the bonds authorized to be issued by the act of July 14, 1870, entitled 'An act to authorize the refunding of the national debt,' and the acts amendatory thereof, the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to issue Treasury notes of the United States, in the amount of not more than $600,000,000, in denominations of not less than $10, and bearing interest at a rate not exceeding 4 per cent, per annum, of which said notes not more than sixty millions shall mature each year from the date of their issue; and said notes shall be disposed of by the Secretary of the Treasury at not less than par, and the proceeds thereof shall be applied to the payment of the 5 and 6 per cent, bonds of the United States maturing during the year 1881, or the Secretary may exchange the Treasury notes for the said bonds, on such terms as he may deem most advantageous to the United States.

"Sec. 2. That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to make suitable regulations for disposing of said Treasury notes to the best advantage to the Government, and all expenses attending the same shall not exceed \(\frac{1}{2} \) of 1 per cent, of the notes so disposed of or exchanged.

"Sec. 3. That the sum of \(\frac{8}{100},000,000 \) of the coin in the Treasury of the United States be set apart as a fund for the redemption of the notes known as legal-tender notes; and any surplus of coin over and above said sum, and belonging to the United States, remaining in the Treasury shall be used by the Secretary of the Treasury in the purchase or redemption on account of the sinking fund of any of the said 6 per cent, bonds maturing in the year 1881.

"Sec. 4. All acts and parts of acts in conflict with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed."

Mr. WARNER. Mr. Chairman, in dropping from the excitement

Mr. WARNER. Mr. Chairman, in dropping from the excitement attending the discussion of a political question to the dry subject of finance and statistics, I do not expect to be able to entertain this finance and statistics, I do not expect to be able to entertain this House, and should not even were I able in any degree to instruct it. The first question to decide in dealing with the problem of national debt is, Shall a policy of vigorous and steady payment be adopted and pursued till the whole debt is extinguished? or, looking only to a low rate of interest, shall the debt be funded and perpetuated? I believe public debts should be paid, not made perpetual. It may at times be necessary to create them, but their perpetuation beyond the time actually necessary for their extinction should not be allowed. It is as bad for a nation to be always weighted with debt as it is for an individual. The policy of extinguishing in time of peace obligations created in time of war was early adopted in this country. There was but one opinion in 1790 after the war of the Revolution, and there was but one opinion in 1816, after the close of the second war, as to the policy of the speedy extinction of the debts created during the two wars. the two wars

Hamilton, in his Treasury Report, distinguished not only as the first in order of succession but for its marked ability, said:

He ardently wishes to see it incorporated as a fundamental maxim in the system of public credit of the United States, that the creation of debt should always be accompanied with the means of extinguishment. This he regards as the true secret for rendering public credit immortal. And he presumes that it is difficult to conceive a situation in which there may not be an adherence to the maxim. At least he feels an unfeigned solicitude that this may be attempted by the United States, and that they may commence their measures for the establishment of credit with the observance of it.

Washington, in his message in 1795, said:

Congress have demonstrated their sense to be, and it were superfluous to repeat mine, that whatsoever will tend to accelerate the honorable extinction of our public debt accords as much with the true interests of our country as with the general sense of our constituents.

And Hamilton, in the same year, referring to this message, again

The President of the United States, with that provident concern for the public welfare which characterizes all his conduct, was pleased, in his speech to the two Houses of Congress at the opening of the present session, to invite their attention to the adoption of a definite plan for the redemption of the public debt, and to the consummation of whatsoever may remain unfinished of our system of public credit, in order to place that credit, as far as may be practicable, on grounds which cannot be disturbed, and to prevent that progressive accumulation of debt which must ultimately endanger all government.

Jefferson wrote in 1813, (page 239, volume 6:)

At the time we were funding our national debt we heard much about a public debt being a public blessing; that the stock representing it was a creation of active capital for the aliment of commerce, manufactures, and agriculture. This paradox was well adapted to the minds of believers in dreams, and the gulls of that size entered bona fide into it.

Mr. Crawford, Secretary of the Treasury, in 1816, said:

An attentive examination of the rise and progress of public debts in other countries cannot fail to impress the American Republic with the necessity of making suitable exertions, in periods of peace, to release the national revenue from so heavy an incumbrance.

A sinking fund was established by name in 1795, and the policy of paying the debt created by the war of the Revolution and the war of 1812, including the Louisiana purchase, of $15,000,000, was steadily persisted in until, in 1834, President Jackson, in his annual message, made the welcome announcement that the country was out of debt.

made the welcome announcement that the country was out of debt. A happy day indeed! When can such another message be issued? Assuming that the \$13,414,000 falling due the last day of the present year will be paid from surplus revenue, the interest-bearing debt of the United States, excluding guaranteed railroad bonds and the Navy fund, will stand, in round numbers, on the 1st of January, 1881, at \$1,660,000,000. Of this, \$740,000,000 funded into four percents, become redeemable in 1907, but may run indefinitely; \$250,000,000 of four and-one-half percents mature in 1891. The balance, (except the railroad bonds,) consisting of \$204,285,550 6 per cent. and \$469,651,050 5 per cent. bonds, become payable at the pleasure of the Government after May 1 and June 30, 1881. It is this \$673,936,600 that we have especially to consider now. The bill before the House proposes to fund \$500,000.000. consider now. The bill before the House proposes to fund \$500,000,000 of this sum into 20-40 bonds at $3\frac{1}{4}$ per cent., or at 3 per cent., as I understand the chairman of the committee now proposes, and to provide for paying \$200,000,000, or, as it will stand now, \$174,000,000, in ten years, through certificates issued to the public and from time to time redeemed. This policy is manifestly one of perpetuation and not of payment of the debt, for \$740,000,000 have already been put off till 1907, and to fund and defer payment of \$500,000,000 more till 1901 or 1902, or perhaps longer, would bring the two parts of the debt so near together again at maturity as to necessitate another refunding, which is equivalent to perpetuation, and should be looked upon as such at the outset. For who is there so hopeful as to expect that a generation will pass without the necessity arising for the creation of new debt? And with a new debt superimposed upon fifteen hundred millions of old debt, who would hope ever to see the land again free from the curse of bonds? And if such a policy were to be considered at all, the only question in that case being the lowest possible rate of interest, an irredeemable stock would undoubtedly be the most profitable form to fund in. A stock as low as 21 or 3 per cent. might be sold at par, perhaps not rapidly, but in a reasonable time the whole debt might be funded into perpetual stock of that kind.

It must be remembered, in the first place, that 3 per cent. free from taxation of all kinds, and with interest paid quarterly is equal in the United States to at least 5 per cent. in other investments, and in many localities to more than that. And there is undoubtedly an increasing supply of capital in the world, such as large individual incomes, trust funds, and the like, ready to accept a non-taxable bond or stock, trust funds, and the like, ready to accept a non-taxable bond or stock, if perpetual and the security unquestioned, at a low rate of interest, regardless of average rates of profits on capital otherwise invested. But active productive capital will be governed in its investments by average rates of profit that capital yields in trade and business. And that kind of capital will not rest in a 3 or 3½ per cent. bond. For that is a false theory which attributes the rise and fall in established securiis a false theory which attributes the rise and fall in established securities, or the rate of interest at which a government can make loans, solely to the rise and fall in the rating of its credit. The rate of interest at the Bank of England may, and sometimes does, vary from 2 to 10 per cent. in a few months. Does that register variations in the credit of all its customers, including the British government itself? The question of credit, of course, may, and often does, affect largely the rate of interest a nation may have to pay; but when credit is firmly established the rate of interest at which a nation or an individual can harrow may vary materially within short payids. At any rate can borrow may vary materially within short periods. At any rate, the fact that we have paid a heavy debt will be the best possible guarantee of our credit in the future.

Bonds bearing a low rate of interest, which sold readily in 1878-79 when profits in ordinary business were doubtful and business itself precarious, and capital, in consequence, was lying idle, would almost certainly not attract the same kind of capital now, when profits in ordinary business are more certain and better. It is true that rates of interest on capital have been low for some months past, but they are higher now, and if profits in business increase, are almost certain are figure now, and if profits it business increase, are almost certain rather to advance than decline. It is not, therefore, at all certain to me that rapid sales of 3 or 3½ per cent. bonds, redeemable in twenty years, can be made. Certain it is that a 2½ or 3 per cent. perpetual stock would absorb, quite as readily as a 3 or 3½ per cent. redeemable bond, the kind of capital I have described. And it is extremely doubtful whether either kind of securities will at this time attract much of any other class of capital.

The following table shows the prices of some of the first stocks of the world, as given in the London Economist of November 20:

British consols, three percents
India four percents, redeemable in 1888	104
Metropolitan board of works, three-and-one-half percents	105
United States four percents
French rentes, five percents	117. 2
French rentes, three percents	85, 20
Norwegian four-and-one-half percents	103.50
Austrian silver rentes	62.
Austrian gold rentes	73. 73
Prussian consols, four percents	99
Prussian consols, five percents	83. 2

The April number of the Economist gives the average rate of profits, including rise in price, on English investments for 1879, as follows:

	Per cent.
Investments in United States railways have yielded. Investments in South American railways have yielded. Investments in continental railways India and home railways from.	. 94 . 85 . 54
India and home railways from	. 6 to 9
Irish railways	. 3 to 7
India sterlings	. 6 to 8

These tables show the difference between the rates of profit on Government securities and invested business capital. And the difference is doubtless greater for 1880. But at whatever rate of interest the debt can be funded or bonds sold, funding is in itself a more or less costly operation, and interest in the long run eats away everything.

ULTIMATE COST OF LONG BONDS.

And the real cost, in the end, of long bonds or perpetual stock must not be lost sight of. Indeed a true statement of a debt due at a future date would embrace the interest as well as the principal; for the actual debt owed is the principal with interest to date of maturity added. Thus, to pay the $740,000,000 recently refunded into 4 per cent. bonds, having thirty years to run, will require for interest and principal $1,628,000,000. And this sum is the true debt growing out of that operation.

with interest permanent at 5 per cent., $100,000,000 paid down, or $5,000,000 annually forever, or $6,000,000 for forty-five years, would have equal value in the money market. Now, compare the sums that would be paid in each case. In the case of a perpetual debt of a hundred millions calling for $5,000,000 interest a year for one hundred years, the one hundred millions of debt would be still to pay at the years, the one hundred millions of debt would be still to pay at the end of a hundred years, but the Government would have paid in that time, as interest, $500,000,000. Starting with the same debt, with interest the same, and paying $6,000,000 a year for forty-five years, $270,000,000 would have been paid, but the whole debt would then be extinguished. To pay the $100,000,000 in a year might have required too large a part of a nation's income for such a purpose, but it ought, I think, to be apparent to every mind that it is correct public economy to apply as large a part of income as possible to the extinction of debt rather than to perpetuate it.

We have already paid as interest on our debt since the year 1861 over $1,900,000,000, or nearly $250,000,000 more than the present interest-bearing debt. We have paid as interest since the war closed in 1865 over $1,820,000,000; and if the whole interest-bearing debt were funded into thirty-year 4 percent. bonds, the interest alone would were funded into thirty-year 4 percent. bonds, the interest-bearing debt were funded into thirty-year 4 percent. bonds, the interest alone would run up to over $2,000,000,000; and then the debt would still remain to be paid in the end; or, in other words, we would be just where we are now. I say let us avoid this by paying the debt itself.

It is said, I know, that bonds can be bought up after they have been funded; but that may be more costly in the end than to let the maturing bonds stand as they are. We have already paid in one year as premium on $108,758,000 of purchased bonds $3,786,521; that is, we have paid this sum for the privilege of paying so much of our own debt.

Suppose the whole debt to be placed beyond our reach except by buying it in the market, and the Secretary were required to buy $50,000,000 a year. What is the limit to which combinations might not raise the price of bonds? To pay the $740,000,000 of four percents lately funded would now cost, at the present market rate of these bonds, over $70,000,000 for premium, and to pay the four-and-one-half percents it would cost $26,000,000 more; and to pay all the bonds off now, if we were prepared to do it, would cost more than $110,000,000 for premiums! I think this is reason enough why the debt should be kept where it can be paid at the option of the Government. And as fast as the right to pay at par is recovered to the Government.

kept where it can be paid at the option of the Government. And as fast as the right to pay at par is recovered to the Government, it should be firmly held and no part of the debt once brought within such control should be permitted on any plea to pass beyond it again. But there are other advantages to be gained by paying the debt, not perhaps so apparent at first. The extinction of the debt will do away with the cost and loss attending the collecting from one class and paying over to another a hundred millions a year. This cost and the loss attending upon such diversion of capital is in itself not an inconsiderable item. But more important is the fact that as fast as bonds are paid non-taxable capital is transferred to the taxable list. If the bonded debt were all paid, there would be $1,700,000,000 more capital to help bear the burden of taxes. Seventeen hundred millions of dead capital is dislodged and set at work. So every million ap-capital to help bear the burden of taxes. Seventeen hundred millions of dead capital is dislodged and set at work. So every million applied to the payment of the principal of the debt is so much less to pay interest on, and so much more capital to levy taxes oa; and $50,000,000 of bonded capital liberated each year adds $50,000,000 to the loanable or usable capital of the country for other purposes.

Fifty millions a year will go a good way toward supplying capital for building railroads, establishing manufactures, developing mines, and extending commerce. This, I repeat, is an important consideration in the economy of paying. There will be found to be a very great difference between converting $670,000,000 of capital from the industrial operations of a country into dead capital—and not only dead capital, but capital that hangs as a dead weight on industry—and converting a like sum from dead, bonded capital, to active, working, industrial capital. I know that to raise the funds to be applied to the extinguishment of bonds it must first be brought into the Treas-

But there is a wide difference between gathering in a part of the surplus—net gains—of a people by taxes evenly distributed, and locking up in bonds accumulated capital that otherwise would be aplocking up in bonds accumulated capital that otherwise would be applied to some industry. In the one case net savings, in sums too small separately to be applied effectively as capital, are taken, and in the other the very working capital itself is tied up by being converted into bonds, and is liberated when bonds are paid. The difference between taking a part of the income of the people, and restoring it again as capital by paying bonds with it, and borrowing capital to lock up in bonds, is an element of the utmost importance in national economy, and especially when in the one case capital is taken from the taxable list and in the other it is restored to that list.

Of course, this presumes that the debt is owned at home. If not, as is the case with some part at least of our own, the evils become intensified.

As a rule, debts placed abroad bring but little to the debtor country, but require a great deal from the debtor country to pay them. It is a notable fact that all the bonds that went from this country to Europe from 1862 to 1872 brought us no money. They were paid for with commodities at high prices, while we have been paying for the bonds with commodities at very low prices. As an illustration: in 1865 a thousand-dollar bond brought us about six and three-quarters tons of iron rails; to pay a thousand-dollar bond in 1878 took thirtythree tons, and on the average it took at least three times as much in labor to pay a bond in 1878 as a bond brought us in 1865.

Moreover, a country which owes a debt to another is placed at a disadvantage in all its trade. It cannot maintain a balance of trade in its favor except at great cost. We might at one time have an excess of exports over imports of a hundred or two hundred millions of dol-lars and still have an apparent, nay, a real balance against us. But to follow this line of thought further would be a digression from the subject in hand.

Again, freedom from debt promotes economy—private and public. It was when we were most in debt that the most extravagant expenditures took place. With a debt of $2,000,000,000, $100,000,000 more does not seem large. But with no debt at all we would hesitate long—the country would be agitated—at the prospect of a debt of even $100,000,000.

But I do not believe that the people of this country are willing even to entertain for discussion the direct proposition to make perpetual our debt; and if left to me I would not accept a proposition to postour debt; and it left to me I would not accept a proposition to post-pone for forty, thirty, or even twenty years the payment of the debt, even if it would be held free from interest. I would not let such a cloud hang over us. I fear that "progressive accumulation of debt which must ultimately endanger all government." And I would caution the House and the country against losing sight of the principal in the allurements of low interest. I propose, therefore, to discuss the prac-ticability of its early payment, rather than funding it as proposed in the bill before ye.

ticability of its early payment, rather than tunding.

The first step, and the one to be assiduously followed up, is to apply persistently all surplus revenue to the extinguishment of the principal of the debt. The Secretary anticipates an excess of revenue for the next year of $90,000,000; and if expenditures are duly curtailed, it may be made a hundred millions. Here, then, are ninety or a hundred millions to apply outright to the payment of the $200,000,000 of six percents falling due within the year. But $573, 000,000 will then remain to be funded or otherwise provided for.

Second. On November 1 there were $218,710,154 of coin in the Treasury, $141,000,000 of which are held as a redemption fund. So large a fund is wholly unnecessary. With the volume of paper duly Treasury, $141,000,000 of which are held as a redemption fund. So large a fund is wholly unnecessary. With the volume of paper duly restricted it is all unnecessary to retain so large an accumulation of coin in the Treasury as we now have. And to needlessly lock up money, and especially in the face of a vast debt, is the worst kind of economy. It is the abstraction of a most efficient part of the nation's working capital. If only the paper volume be duly restricted a part of the coin accumulation of the Treasury can, with perfect safety and to great advantage, be utilized in the payment of the debt.

On the other hand, if the volume of paper be allowed to expand beyond the limits which a metallic currency would naturally fall beyond the limits which a metallic currency would naturally fall within, no accumulation of reserves will prevent depreciation. If, for instance, $800,000,000 would be as large a share of the metals as would naturally fall to us in the maintenance of the general level of prices, then certainly not more than $800,000,000 of paper could be kept convertible, no matter what the coin reserve might be.

But if the volume of paper be kept sufficiently within that limit the whole volume, paper and coin together, will vary precisely as a purely metallic currency would vary, and but a small amount of coin would be required to exchange all the paper that would be presented. In support of this fact the Secretary reports that but $706,658 of greenbacks have been presented in a whole year to be exchanged for greenbacks have been presented in a whole year to be exchanged for coin. And as long as greenbacks remain legal tender and free from tax, as now, and the quantity be not increased, there is not the least need in the world of keeping one-fourth part of the coin in the Treasury that is now held there as a redemption fund. The volume of greenbacks is not large enough to effect, under any circumstances, an expulsion of coin, and they are as safe from a panic run as coin itself. This was proven in 1873. The safety lies in the limitation of quantity far more than in a coin reserve. Science and experience concur in support of the truth of this proposition. Only coin enough to answer the demands for the interchange of paper and coin is thereanswer the demands for the interchange of paper and coin is therefore required. A hundred millions of coin might then, with perfect safety, be taken from the Treasury and applied to the payment of the debt, and the world would be the better for having it. Its effect would be the same as though some new mine had suddenly penred out a store of $100,000,000 of the precious metals. If this policy were adopted the need of funding would be reduced to about $470,000,000 of five percents. And it is evident at once that it would be economy in the end to let these bonds stand till they can be paid rather than be funded into three-and-a-half or four percents to be hought in be funded into three-and-a-half or four percents, to be bought in again at a premium.

There is another way by which a large part of the maturing debt could be gradually extinguished, and that, too, without adding a dollar to taxes or increasing any other burdens, but, on the contrary, would lessen taxes by stopping several millions of interest, and that is by substituting Treasury notes for national-bank notes. The substitution of Government paper, dollar for dollar, for bank notes, not changing the volume at all, would not change the value of the whole nor of a single unit of the whole; would not therefore affect prices or foreign exchanges; would not reduce by a dollar the loanable capital; would not require a dollar more coin to redeem it; would enable the Government to take up, without disturbing the part of paper and coin. Government to take up, without disturbing the par of paper and coin, three hundred and forty-three millions of interest-bearing debt and save to the people at least from eight to ten millions of taxes annusave to the people at least from eight to ten millions of taxes annually. Nor would it be necessary to give to such Government paper any force of legal tender which the bank paper for which it is substituted does not now possess. Nor would it require a dollar more coin to be kept in the Treasury to redeem or maintain at par a volume of paper all issued directly by the Government than a volume, as now, half greenbacks and half bank paper redeemable in greenbacks. For in the maintenance of resumption the quantity of paper out, as I have shown, is of far more consequence than the quantity of coin in the Treasury. Treasury.

Treasury.

But, as John Randolph once said in this House, you might as well preach against Mohammedism in Turkey as against national-bank currency at the present time. Nor have I faith to believe that so wise a measure as the application of part of the cash on hand in the Treasury to the payment of the debt will be adopted, and I therefore proceed to consider how funding may be carried on and interest reduced without putting the debt again beyond reach of payment.

REDUCTION OF INTEREST.

Great stress is laid on reduction of interest, and so far as reduction Great stress is laid on reduction of interest, and so far as reduction of interest is the object of funding, to that end, and so far, no one can object to funding. But I think interest can be reduced and the debt at the same time kept where it can be paid. I would at once authorize funding into as low a bond as possible, reserving the right to pay at par, taking bonds by lot; and I shall now endeavor to show that the interest can be reduced to at least 4 per cent. without putting the debt again out of reach. About $200,000,000 of the bonds which it is proposed to fund are held by national banks. If these are called in banks must buy other bonds, and they will be only too glad called in banks must buy other bonds, and they will be only too glad to take 3½ or 4 per cent. bonds, which the Government reserves the option at any time to redeem at par, by lot, rather than pay a high premium for funded long bonds.

There is another fund the Government can utilize in immediately

There is another fund the Government can utilize in immediately reducing interest. There are on deposit in savings-banks—largely the savings of the people—about $830,000,000. There are also on deposit in two thousand and ninety national banks an average of about $900,000,000, and in other banks and savings institutions $500,000,000 more, making, in all, about $2,200,000,000 of savings and deposits. Of course these deposits represent largely discounts for business purposes, but if the Government will issue certificates to the public in sums as low as $50 or $25, payable in ten years, and redeemable at the pleasure of the Government, to be drawn by lot, but not to circulate as currency, I believe two to three hundred millions of such certificates would be taken by the people at from 3½ to 4 per cent. This would disturb nothing. The six percents could in this way in a very short time be funded into certificates and low-interest bonds, which the Government would reserve the right to pay off at par. I lay special stress on this mode of reducing interest on the 6 and 5 per cent. bonds; I believe it to be the true way. It offers to the people, it offers special stress on this mode of reducing interest on the 6 and 5 per cent. bonds; I believe it to be the true way. It offers to the people, it offers to persons of small savings, a secure investment. It would in some measure take the place of savings-banks, especially in the country. I urge this policy with the utmost confidence of its success, and one that will be eminently satisfactory to the people, and shall move, if permitted, an amendment to this effect to the bill under consideration. The $200,000,000 which the bill proposes to place in the form of small certificates is very well as far as it goes, but it looks only to the payment of $200,000,000 in ten years, while I think the whole $670,000,000 to be provided for can and should be paid within that time. The Secretary of the Treasury in his report just submitted recommends the issue of $400,000,000 of Treasury notes. He says:

In view of the requirements of the sinking fund, it is believed that a large por-

In view of the requirements of the sinking fund, it is believed that a large portion of the public debt to be redeemed can be provided for by Treasury notes running from one to ten years, issued in such sums as can, by the application of the sinking fund, be paid as they mature. The purchase of bonds not due has heretofore involved the payment of premiums, which it is believed can. in future be avoided by the issue of such Treasury notes. The large accumulation of money now seeking investment affords a favorable opportunity for selling such notes bearing a low rate of interest. It is believed that they will form a popular security, always available to the holder, and readily convertible into money when needed for other investment or business. They should be in such form and denominations as to furnish a convenient investment for the small savings of the people, and fill the place designed by the ten-dollar refunding certificates authorized by the act of February 26, 1879.

the act of February 26, 1879.

The Secretary here recommends notes as low as $10. The objection to notes so small is that, although they bear interest, they will in some degree, especially if issued in large quantity, operate as currency, and when withdrawn will be attended by reaction in business. Debt should be kept as distinct from currency as possible. The recommendation of the Secretary to supplement Treasury notes with bonds having fifteen years to run is open to the objection already made to the issue of any bonds hereafter which the Government cannot redeem whenever its revenues will permit. The Secretary recommends also that the proposed Treasury notes shall run from cannot redeem whenever its revenues will permit. The Secretary recommends, also, that the proposed Treasury notes shall run from one to ten years. Why should such notes run ten years? The very object of issuing them is, first, to borrow in small sums from the people; and, second, to keep the debt where excess of revenue can be applied to it as fast as it accumulates. There is no objection to issuing either bonds or Treasury notes with the right to redeem at par reserved. The well-timed proposition of the gentleman from Pennsylvania just reported, if I rightly understand it, is the more acceptable one.

THE SINKING FUND.

But if there was no other reason for paying our debt rather than funding it into long bonds, the sinking-fund law now on the statute-books, and constituting part of the debt obligation, requires it. If $100,000,000 of the maturing debt be paid in 1881 from surplus revenues, as it is admitted it can be, the rest of the 1881 bonds will become extinguished under the operation of the sinking fund, if this law be faithfully observed, in a little more than ten years.

The Secretary of the Treasury, in his last report, says:

The requirements of the sinking fund prior to the maturity of the 4½ per cent. bonds, for a period of ten years, from 1882 to 1891, both inclusive, are estimated as follows:

For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882	$43, 386, 645 00
For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883	45, 122, 110 80
For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884	46, 926, 995 24
For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1885	48, 804, 075 04
For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886	50, 756, 238 04
For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887	52, 786, 487 56
For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1988	54, 897, 947 07
For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889	57, 093, 864 95
For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890	59, 377, 619 55
For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1891	61, 752, 724 33

Now, why not execute this law providing for a sinking fund? Why violate it? Why repeal it? Do you say we do not repeal it? Then why put the debt out of reach of this fund for twenty years? When you do that do you believe, do you expect we will continue the operation of the sinking fund? This sinking-fund law I say is part of the debt contract. The public faith is pledged to its execution. How is it that gentlemen who have such exalted notions about public faith on other matters are willing to see it violated here? They talk eloquently about public faith. Here is a chance to keep it, and to keep faith with the people at the same time!

I know very well there is no magical power in a sinking fund. The

I know very well there is no magical power in a sinking fund. The only real sinking fund any nation has is the excess of revenues over expenditures. But I do know if $130,000,000 be raised annually from fixed revenues and applied to the principal and interest of the public debt, that that sum will pay the interest each year and leave an increasing sum to be applied to the principal, which will pay off all the bonds except the four percents of 1907 in less than fifteen years, and will extinguish the whole bonded debt in less than twenty-two years. And $130,000,000 is $20,000,000 less than the interest alone and will extinguish the whole bonded debt in less than twenty-two years. And $130,000,000 is $20,000,000 less than the interest alone amounted to in 1865; and but ten millions more than the average annual interest during the entire administration of General Grant. But more than this: in the five years following the close of the war, we paid nearly $450,000,000 toward the principal of the debt, making an average annual reduction of principal of over $85,000,000, besides $130,000,000 of interest each year. And, surely, it is much easier to pay $130,000,000 a year now than it was ten or fifteen years ago. Indeed, the present revenue will easily afford from a hundred and thirty to a hundred and fifty millions over and above ordinary expenditures for interest and sinking fund.

This is the intelligent kind of sinking fund we need to apply now, steadily and unfalteringly, to the payment of our bonded debt till the last bond is paid off. The real operation of such a fund is simple. We will suppose $130,000,000 to be applied annually to the debt, and that it takes of this sum at first $80,000,000 for interest, leaving $50,000,000 to be applied to the principal of the debt. Each year the interest becomes less, and more of the $130,000,000 can be applied to the principal. Thus the extinction of the principal is accelerated from year to year. This was the principal of the sinking fund as first established in England. With the creation of every debt a fixed revenue, equal to a given per cent. of the debt, was indebt a fixed revenue, equal to a given per cent. of the debt, was intended to be provided, which was to operate in the way I have illustrated till the debt was extinguished. This also was undoubtedly the intent of the act of 1862, but Mr. Boutwell decided that instead of a fixed sum equal to 1 per cent. of the initial debt, 1 per cent. of the debt as it might stand at the beginning of each year was to be taken as the basis of a sinking fund. The extinction is not so rapid under this interpretation, but the calculations I have given are on this interpretation of the law this interpretation of the law.

And to pay the debt as rapidly as here proposed will be accomplishing, I say, nothing near what was done just after the close of the war, and no more, comparatively, than was accomplished in the payment of the debt of the Revolution and of the war of 1812.

In 1790 the interest-bearing debt of the nation was $56,363,527, and the debts of the States, assumed by the General Government, $18,201,205, making a total debt of $74,564,732. The public revenue of that year was less than $4,000,000; the population was 3,929,214. The revenues, therefore, were little more than 5 per cent. of the debt, while the debt was about $19 per capita, and the expenditures for carrying on the Government more than the revenue. Nevertheless, in 1816 there remained of this debt, to which had been added the Louisiana pur the Government more than the revenue. Nevertheless, in 1816 there remained of this debt, to which had been added the Louisiana purchase, but $38,340,000.

During the war of $812, however, the debt rose again, till in 1817 it was $115,000,000. The revenue in that year was $33,833,532; but the expenditures were $38,000,000. The population was about eight and a half millions. The revenue was nearly 30 per cent. of the debt, and the debt about $13 per capita. Assuming that our interest-bearing debt, exclusive of the perpetual Navy fund of $14,000,000 and the railway bonds, will not exceed $1,660,000,000 on the first of January, 1881, it will be but $33 per capita, while the estimated revenues for 1881 are $350,000,000 and the expenditures $260,000,000, giving a surplus of over 5 per cent. of the whole debt. Therefore, as a burden and compared with the means of paying, the debts of 1790 and 1817 were probably quite as great as the present debt. But that of 1817 was extinguished entirely in seventeen years.

Moreover, these earlier debts were nearly all paid before we became producers at all of the precious metals. Since then we have become producers at all of the precious metals. Since then we have become the largest producers of the metals in the world. And although the production of gold and silver has considerably fallen off, and as to gold, at any rate, is certain in the future to be a diminishing supply, still the production of both metals during the last fiscal year, as given by the Director of the Mint, was, gold, $36,000,000; silver, $37,700,000. The production of the whole world for 1879 is stated at $105,000,000 gold and $81,000,000 silver.

Is it not strange, with these facts before us and in the face of a maturing debt of nearly $700,000,000, it should be proposed to shut our mints against silver? Is it not stranger still that, in the presence of the facts connected with the creation of our debt, the right

Part of the facts connected with the creation of our debt, the right to pay it in silver as well as in gold should be questioned?

Part of the six percents of 1881 were issued under the act of February 18, 1861, and part under the acts of July 17 and August 5, 1861, and part under the act of March 3, 1863. Those issued prior to the legal-tender act unquestionably stand upon the coins of 1861, which legal-tender act unquestionably stand upon the coins of 1861, which were gold and silver—25.8 grains standard of the one metal to a dollar, and 412½ grains of the other. Can the right of the Government to pay these bonds in either coin be questioned? The bonds issued under the act of March 3, 1863, after the passage of the legal-tender act, were in terms payable, principal in lawful money, interest in coin. But the difference between paper and coin has happily disappeared, and this question is out of the way now. But the coin they are payable in is the same as when the bonds were sold. By what right does the owner of these bonds come forward and claim gold for them? Were they bought by that scale? A single incident what right does the owner of these bonds come forward and claim gold for them? Were they bought by that scale? A single incident will show by what scale a large part of our debt was in fact created, and what the real operation has been. In 1864 a gentleman from the West took to New York $10,000 in coin, gold and silver—I presume principally gold, as that was then the cheaper metal. This he sold for something over $27,000 currency; $27,000 of this he invested in 6 per cent. bonds at par, having enough left to pay the expenses of his trip. On this original investment, if he kept it, he has received as interest, in gold, $810 semi-annually or in all, $27,540. If this interest, as paid, had been put out again at 6 per cent. and compounded, it would amount now to about $62,000. But, leaving out the question of reinvestment, in seventeen years he has received over two and a half times the original sum invested, and now he doubtless wants gold and thinks it dishonest for the Government to pay in silver! O Honesty, what deeds are done in thy name! The 5 per cent. funded bonds of 1881 were issued under the acts of July 14, 1870, and January 20, 1871. I here give the conditions expressed on the face of these different classes of bonds:

TREASURY OF THE UNITED STATES,

Washington, February 14, 1880.

SIR: In compliance with your verbal request, I send you herewith memoranda showing the terms of redeemability of the sixes of 1880 and 1881 and of the funded-loan fives of 1881.

Very respectfully,

Hon. A. J. WARNER, House of Representatives.

Loan of February 8, 1861, sixes of 1880.

The United States of America are indebted unto * * * $—, redeemable after the 31st day of December, 1880, with interest from the — day of —, 18—, inclusive, at 6 per ceut. per annum, payable on the 1st days of January and July in each year. This debt is authorized by an act of Congress approved February 8, 1861.

Loan of March 3, 1863, sixes of 1881.

The United States of America are indebted unto * * * , redeemable after the 30th day of June, 1831, with interest from the 1st day of June, 18-, inclusive, at 6 per cent. per annum, payable on the 1st days of January and July in each year. This debt is authorized by act of Congress approved March 3, 1863.

Loan of July and August, 1861, sixes of 1881.

The United States of America are indebted unto * * * $—, redeemable after the 30th day of June, 1821, with interest from the 1st day of ___, 18—, inclusive, at 6 per cent. per annum, payable on the 1st days of January and July in each year. This debt is authorized by acts of Congress approved July 17 and August 5, 1861.

Funded Loan of 1881.

The United States of America are indebted to * * * $.—. This bond is issued in accordance with the provisions of an act of Congress entitled "An act to authorize the refunding of the national debt," approved July 14, 1870, amended by an act approved January 20, 1871, and is redeemable at the pleasure of the United States after the 1st day of May, A. D. 1881, in coin of the standard value of the United States on said July 14, 1870, with interest in such coin from the day of the date hereof, at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum, payable quarterly on the lat day of February, May, August, and November in each year. The principal and interest are exempt from the payment of all taxes or duties of the United States as well as from taxation in any form by or under State, municipal, or local authority.

Will holders of these securities please read the conditions so plainly nominated in the bond? Then read, also, the laws under which they were issued. On what ground then do they stand who demand that silver shall be demonetized in order that their bonds shall be paid only in gold? "Is it so nominated in the bond?" Does not everybody know that to subtract the silver from the money of the world is to double the value of the gold? The credit-holding classes know it perfectly well, and they know, too, that to limit the future supply of the metals to gold alone is to increase the value of gold. They know that the standard in fact is not a piece of gold, nor a piece of silver, but the whole volume of money. A piece of gold does not determine the value of a volume of money; but it is the volume of money, the quantity of the metals, that determines the value of a single piece. Let us be plain. All will agree that to change the standard by adding another metal and making it legal tender equally with gold and silver and then compel the creditor to accept the same number of ounces, or the same number of depreciated dollars, in settlement of a debt would be a fraud on the creditor. But is it not as much a fraud on the debtor to increase the value of the standard by abol-Will holders of these securities please read the conditions so plainly a debt would be a fraud on the creditor. But is it not as much a fraud on the debtor to increase the value of the standard by abolishing half of the metals formerly used as money? In short, if he who seeks by legislation to change the value of money so that he may discharge a debt by paying one dollar where he owes two is a cheat, does not he too attempt to cheat who, by legislation, seeks to double the value of money so that he can get the value of two dollars where he is entitled to but one? Is not the injunction "Thou shalt not steal" as much a law unto the lender as the borrower; as much a law constants on the farmer at his plant. much binding on the banker at his counter as on the farmer at his plow?

The difference is very great, you see, between diluting a currency and boiling it down. He who receives money understands quickly enough the one process, but is willfully blind to the other.

Nor has silver in fact depreciated in general purchasing power. An able writer in the October number of the Westminster Review says:

It is certain that the purchasing power of silver in London over commodities has not only not diminished, but has rather increased—that is, with a given weight of silver one can go into the markets of London and buy a larger quantity of average staple articles of consumption than he could have done with the same silver before the gold price of silver began to fall.

In support of the same fact in this country I gave some data in a speech I had the honor to make in this House in the extra session, and to which I beg now to refer. Again, the same writer says:

There can be no possible doubt that during the last six years silver has been much more approximately a standard of value than has been the case with gold.

And again:

The United States, as an extensive borrower in gold values, has had an enormous burden added to its debts for the benefit of lenders, both at home and in

This is the testimony of a foreign writer. And still the insatiable demand of avarice is that this burden shall be still further augmented by the exclusion of silver altogether—at least from the future supply of money

But it is only when it is considered in connection with the world's. indebtedness that the enormity of the proposition to contract the money volume to one metal becomes apparent. No, it does not become apparent at all. It becomes a crime on so vast a scale that the come apparent at all. It becomes a crime on so vast a scale that the imagination fails to compass it. The plundering of provinces by Roman proconsuls in the name of tribute affords no parallel to this modern method of plundering the people. All the armed maranders of the world have not committed such spoliations. And it does not help the case to cloak the operation under the pretense of "honest money." There are no devils like those in the guise of saints; there is no every explanation of the process of the guise of saints; there money." There are no devils like those in the guise of saints; there is no cover so plausible as an honest pretense.

The total national debts of the world reach an aggregate of $30,000,000,000, and other public indebtedness at least $10,000,000,000 more, making a grand total of $40,000,000,000, or four or five times the volume of money of the whole world. The United States now stands fourth in the list of nations with huge debts.

Following is a statement in detail of the public debts of the world, compiled from recent official and other most reliable sources:

Note.—The columns of debt, revenue, and expenditures for the European States are made up from debt tables and budgets for 1879-'80 as given by the London Economist of March 6, 1880, counting $5 to the pound sterling and adding the increase since 1879.

To help to comprehend the magnitude of so vast a mortgage on posterity consider that the sum total of these immense debts equals the whole present wealth of the North American continent

National debts are of comparatively modern origin. They were almost unknown in ancient times. Wars were carried on by taxes and almost unknown in ancient times. Wars were carried on by taxes and tributes levied upon conquered people. Rome inexorably levied her tributes upon conquered provinces. According to Arnold, loans were sometimes made from wealthy individuals, and commercial companies sometimes furnished stores for the army and took orders on the treasury payable at a future time without interest. But these, the same historian tells us, were never left to constitute a national debt. And it is only recently that national debts have been considered permanent and while the last treasury was that the increase in these manent; and only in the last twenty years that the increase in these debts has become alarming.

The total debts of the European States alone, it will be seen, are now $23,000,000,000—an increase of over 75 per cent. in fifteen years—and the total cost of government of the same States is over $2,900,000,000 a year, being an increase of nearly $1,000,000,000 in annual expenditures in the same time. The cost of their military and naval establishments amounts to $800,000,000 per annum, an increase of $215,000,000 per annum since 1865. The principal increase in the cost of government arises from the cost of armies and interest on public debts. It is the same now as when Tacitus said, "There can be no peace without troops, no troops without pay, and no pay without tribute." The total debts of the European States alone, it will be seen, are now

But it is not necessary to go to Europe for examples of large expenditures and excessive taxation. From 1861 to 1880, $6,086,000,000 have been collected as taxes in the United States. This sum is about one-sixth of the total wealth of the whole people, or one-sixth as much as eight generations have accumulated on this continent, and probably nearly one-half as much as has been accumulated altogether by the last generation. During the same period the total expenditures, including interest on the public debt, have been $7,990,000,000, or full four times the total expenditures for all purposes from the foundation of the Government down to 1861.

And let it be understood that to abandon silver is to increase every debt and tax burden of every people on the face of the earth. And more than that, it will curtail commerce and cripple every industry by which the life of man is sustained and the means of paying debts are produced.

I wish, therefore, in this connection, to emphasize my protest against the premeditated crime of abolishing one of the money metals of the world, in the presence of the overshadowing accumulation of public world, in the presence of the overshadowing accumulation of public debts, to say nothing of that vaster sum of private debts existing in all countries. Crime, I say; it is indeed a high crime against civilization and humanity. I say this vast accumulation of money obligations rests upon the world's whole money supply of to-day. They rest not upon one, but upon both metals; not upon the stock of the metals now in the hands of man, but upon the produce of the mines as well; not mines of gold alone, but mines of both gold and silver.

"All present contracts," says Ernest Seyd, "are based on the stock of gold and silver now in the world, and on the coming in of the annual supplies of both metals together;" and, with a just sense of its enormity, he designates silver demonetization as a "stupid general crime, whose authors humanity would some day learn to curse."

whose authors humanity would some day learn to curs

And never were curses more richly deserved.

But the consideration of the question of public debts, Mr. Chairman, would be incomplete without an examination of the way they get made up, and how they are often manipulated and changed. As a burden, much depends on interest, population, accumulated wealth, industrial condition, and the relation of debt to income and to labor. But whatever these relations may be, as a rule, a full equivalent is never given in the original creation of a public debt.

A large part of the British debt was made at 60 per cent. of its face.

A large part of the British debt was made at 60 per cent. of its face. Our own debt was created by a scale so different from that by which we are paying it that the mere comparison presents a sad commentary on our past financial policy.

The plain truth is—and it is the only explanation of the fact—that The plain truth is—and it is the only explanation of the fact—that the debt was largely created by a scale made of a volume of money of $983,000,000, counting nothing but effective legal-tender money and bank notes, or $39 per capita, or 7 per cent. of the total wealth of the population using it; while in 1879 we were paying the debt by a scale of $14 per capita, or 2.3 per cent. of the wealth of the population using the currency; or, to state the case in another form, the debt was created by a paper scale of, so to speak, forty to fifty cents to a dollar, and is being paid by a scale of from one hundred (or through silver demonetization) to one hundred and ten cents to a dollar. To call the currency that made up the volume of money existing from 1863 down to 1879 merely debt is simply to mystify what is in itself very plain. very plain.

The volume has been increased again, not only absolutely increased, but increased relatively to commodities, and the payment of debt has been made thereby easier.

The debt was largest in 1865, lowest in 1873, and increased again by $87,000,000 in 1879. And it was not till August of this year that it became reduced again below the lowest point reached in 1873.

The following table will present a comparison between debt and labor at three different periods; and in the end, be it remembered, all debts must be paid by labor:

Public debt in 1865, 1873, and 1879, compared with labor.

Year.	Amount of in- terest-bear- ing debt.	Labor equiva- lent.*	Rate of la- bor per day.
1865	$2, 381, 000, 000 1, 710, 000, 000 1, 797, 000, 000	Days. { 1, 190, 000, 000 } 1, 360, 000, 000	$2 00 1 75 1 50 1 00 90

^{*} Increase of labor equivalent in 1879 over 1865 from 437,000,000 to 810,000,000. †Increase in 1879 over 1873 from 657,000,000 to 860,000,000.

Interest on public debt compared with labor.

Year.	Amount of interest paid.	Wages.	Equivalent in days' labor.
1865	$150, 000, 000 105, 000, 000 93, 000, 000	{$2 00 1 75 1 50 { 1 00 } 90	Days. 75, 000, 000 85, 000, 000 70, 000, 000 93, 000, 000 103, 300, 000

equivalent of the interest that year, $150,000,000, was only seventy-five to eighty-five million days.

In 1879, although the nominal debt was not as large by $584,000,000, the labor equivalent was at least 500,000,000 days more; that is, it would have taken the produce of at least 500,000,000 more days labor to pay the debt existing in 1879 than in 1865; and it would have taken from ten to fifteen millions more days' labor in 1879 to equal the interest than would have been required in 1865.

The above table is given to show how easily debts may be changed

The above table is given to show how easily debts may be changed by changing the money scale.

It is readily pleaded, I know, that the war necessitated the great inflation of the currency. This I deny. Economic science utterly refutes the plea. Undoubtedly the demands of war called for some additional currency, but when the issue was continued till it became so depreciated that it took two or three dollars to buy what one dollar bought before, what was the gain? To buy a horse before worth a hundred dollars now took two hundred. To make a hundred exchanges required twice as many dollars. It was men and arms, food and clothing that were needed to carry on war. Two hundred millions of dollars, after the money had depreciated one-half, did not equip a man more; did not put a gun or a musket more in the field; it supplied no more food and clothing than one hundred millions would have done if the relation between money and other things had not been changed by food and clothing than one hundred millions would have done if the relation between money and other things had not been changed by putting two dollars where one had before existed. But it did add hundreds, yes, thousands of millions, and needlessly, too, to our debt. And this is the debt we are now struggling with.

I wish to give one more recent striking example of the way modern debts become created, and show their effect on the income of a people. Mr. Stephen Cave, member of Parliament and British commissioner to investigate the indebtedness of Egypt in 1876, reported the accumulated loans then to be $500,000,000. But for this debt the Khedive had actually received only about $225,000,000. The rest was swallowed up in commissions and discounts. By the end of 1879 there had been paid back as interest a sum equal to the whole amount received by Egypt on all its loans, besides which, all its investments in the Suez Canal—about $50,000,000—were surrendered to its creditors. And still the $500,000,000 remain as a debt against the people of that unfortunate country, on which $30,000,000 annually is exacted as interest.

In his late report, Mr. Baird, British finance commissioner, said:

Last year, when great pressure was put upon the Egyptian Government to pay the coupon due in May, the peasants were forced to sell their growing crops, and in some cases perfectly authenticated corn was sold to the merchants for fifty piasters per ardeb, which was delivered in one month's time, and then fetched one hundred and twenty piasters. These are no exceptional cases; the same thing was going on over the whole of Upper Egypt.

But at this very time a terrible famine was raging in Upper Egypt. On this state of affairs the London Times says:

The spirit, and to a great extent the personal composition, of the Egyptian administration has now become European, and though it is to be deplored that the country has been loaded with a debt out of all proportion to its present resources, there is nothing to be done but to make the best of the situation.

Herodotus tells us that in the reign of Asychis, when commerce was almost destroyed-

From the extreme want of money an ordinance passed that any one might borrow money, giving the body of his father as a pledge; by this law the sepulcher of the debtor became in the power of the creditor, for if the debt was not discharged he could neither be buried with his family nor in any other vault, nor was he suffered to inter one of his descendants.

If this law were in force now all Egyptians would go unburied, for If this law were in force now all Egyptians would go unburied, for their whole land has passed by mortgage to strangers. And this is the work of comparatively a few years of debt. Egypt, the most ancient seat of civilization as well as the ancient granary of the world, oftener than any other land has been conquered, despoiled, and plundered. Alexander conquered it. The Cæsars conquered and held it as the richest tributary to Rome's all-devouring avarice. The Arabs conquered it. Napoleon conquered it, but no conquest, no subjugation, was ever so complete and hopeless as the conquest and subjugation of the money kings, under the Rothschilds of London, Frankfort, and Paris, sanctioned and guaranteed to them by three powerful governments.

kings, under the Rothschilds of London, Frankfort, and Paris, sanctioned and guaranteed to them by three powerful governments.

Forty centuries looked down from the pyramids upon the conquest of Napoleon. Ten times forty centuries, should that debt last so long, will look down upon a nation of slaves, the fruits of whose yearly toil are taken in the name of interest, but in fact as tribute, not to a nation, but to a few individuals to whom powerful governments lend their aid in this work of spoliation. For there is more than one way to conquer and enslave a people. And the most effective of all ways is the modern one of perpetual national debt. We have seen how the debt of Egynt consumes annually in interest every dollar seen how the debt of Egypt consumes annually in interest every dollar that it is possible for that people to produce over and above a bare existence. The debt of England appropriates $120,000,000 annually out of the net earnings of the whole people to a receiving class before the earnings can be shared, which virtually bars out forever a large part of the population from any share in the net annual gains of the country. The total debts of European States absorb the larger share of possible net earnings of all the people.

1865 $\frac{\$150,000,000}{\$175}$$ $\frac{\$200}{\$5,000,000}$$ $\frac{\$200}{\$175}$$ $\frac{000,000}{\$85,000,000}$$ of possible net earnings of all the people. Take our own case. If the net gains of all the people were but a hundred millions, then it is all appropriated by a debt created, it might be, by a generation that had passed away, and there would not exceed one and a quarter millions of days' labor, and the labor the total debt of the total debt of European States absorb the larger share of possible net earnings of all the people. Take our own case. If the net gains of all the people were but a hundred millions, then it is all appropriated by a debt created, it might be, by a generation that had passed away, and there would not be a dollar beyond a bare existence, not a dollar profit, to be divided among the producers. A hundred millions is $2 for each person. The total wealth of the people of the United States is less than $1,000$.

for each. The increase in wealth since 1780 has been but little faster than increase of population; certainly not by more than $2 per capita per annum faster than population has increased, taking the run of a century.

It does not take, then, it will be seen, a debt of incalculable magnitude to require the perpetual appropriation of the net gains of a people for interest alone. That amounts to the perpetual bondage of one class of the people to another.

Let us go a step further. Suppose the gross annual earnings of all our people to be $150 each, or $7,500,000,000; when we have taken out the few large incomes and counted the cost of government and interest on debts, we find that at best there is left to the great mass of the people less than $100 a year each, or twenty-five cents a day, for food, clothing, and shelter, and from this their savings, if any, must come. A perpetuation, then, of our vast debts must necessarily operate to reduce to fiscal bondage more people than the war liberated. And when to the national debt is added State and municipal debts, examples of which I have not time to give, the prospect, if not cause for alarm, ought to warn us, at least, that it is high time to retrace our steps.

If we were in fact in the condition which the London Economist looks forward to in comparing our prospects with those of European States, a bright future would indeed be opened before us:

It is becoming more clear day by day that the industrial competition of the future will be between North America and Europe. North America, possessing all climates, produces, or can produce, everything, and has fairly embarked on an industrial career, and will, without doubt, ultimately relieve herself from the shackles of protection. The United States are rapidly paying off their debt, the only serious national debt of the continent.

Should that occur, it is extremely probable that by 1900, only twenty years hence, North America may compete with Europe in all the markets of the world for the sale of produce and manufactures, which will have had to provide in America only £60,000,000 against the European £600,000,000 for state expenses; in other words, that Europe may be faced by a competitor equal to her in all resources except number of hands, and paying not more than one-tenth of her total taxation. That is, of course, putting the matter favorably for America, for we suppose the United States debt paid off, but it is not putting it too favorably, for we have omitted the heaviest item in the calculation.

Europe, besides paying ten times the total sum in taxes, will have no healthy young men between nineteen and twenty-two engaged in industrial production. They will all be in the army, as outside these islands they already are. As the period of energetic labor with all men only lasts about thirty years, Europe, besides her immense taxation, will be sacrificing in comparison with America one clear tenth of her available supply of human force.

We have no hesitation in saying that as between one continent and the other the older one will enter into the ultimate struggle loaded with a state demand, to be satisfied before profit is realized, equal in weight to a universal income tax of quite three shillings in the pound. That is a heavy load to stagger under, and there is every sign as yet that it will be steadily increased, for the military experts are ruling, and it is evident from the speech of the ablest among them that they do not seriously care about the increase of the financial burden.—London Economist, March 6, 1880.

A great truth is unfolded here in little space. Imagine Europe with her vast armaments, increased expenses, growing debts, and her young men taken from productive fields to be trained for war, with the United States, as we should be, with our debts paid and an active population developing our boundless resources, our fields of agriculture, our mines and manufactures. It would be an advantage of 25 or 30 per cent. in the struggle for existence. That is a kind of tariff that would operate directly on labor and be equivalent to an advantage for American labor of the whole percentage of difference. difference.

I have traced the alarming increase of national debts and the tendency to their perpetuation. I have endeavored to show how they operate to direct the distribution of the future earnings of a people, and how they affect industry and commerce. I have referred to the necessary effect on debts of a reduction of the world's stock of

And I ask again, shall we follow the example of our fathers and make a business of paying our debt and get rid of it, or shall we rather imitate the example of European nations and entail it as a burden forever on our children? I cannot resist the conclusion of Jefferson that the coming generation has the right to take the earth without such an entail.

In his letter from Paris to Madison, September 6, 1789, Jefferson

The question, whether one generation of men has a right to bind another, seems never to have been started either on this or our side of the water. Yet it is a question of such consequences as not only to merit decision, but place also among the fundamental principles of every government. The course of reflection in which we are immersed here, on the elementary principles of society, has presented this question to my mind; and that no such obligation can be transmitted. I think very capable of proof. I set out on this ground, which I suppose to be self-evident, that the earth belongs in usufruct to the living; that the dead have neither powers nor rights over it.

At the annual meeting of the Penny Saving-Bank Association, on the 16th of January last, Lord Derby said of the growing debts of European countries:

Depend upon it, this question of national debts is going to be a serious one some day in Europe. They are getting steadily piled up higher, (I speak of foreign countries, not our own.) and when the burden grows intolerable, people will begin to ask questions which are not quite easy to answer as to the right of one generation to lay burdens on all posterity in perpetuity. So let us keep out of the mess by lightening our load while we can.

A perpetual debt amounts to a decree by one generation that one part of posterity shall pay over to another part forever a certain portion of its produce. Not that one part of posterity renders to the other any equivalent, but a former generation wills, and by the force of that will projected into the future the distribution of the earnings of a generation unborn is controlled. It is, in short, a mortgage on the productive forces of nature—on sunshine, rain, brain, and muscle hereafter to be.

The following prophetic incident in the formation of our debt has, on good authority, been preserved, and I reproduce it here as pertinent to the questions before us:

In the middle of the war Mr. Charles Sumner received a visit from one of the most intelligent of the foreign ministers at Washington. Mr. Sumner used to tell the story of the interview as marking, perhaps, an epoch in American history. After talking of the detail of the history of the moment—marches, sieges, and battles—"For the rest," said the looker-on, who saw the game better than the players, "from this time your Government and ours are the same."

Mr. Sumner asked if he were so blind as to suppose that Mr. Lincoln was to become an emperor.

players, "from this time your deverbilists are also suppose that Mr. Lincoln was to become an emperor.

Mr. Summer asked if he were so blind as to suppose that Mr. Lincoln was to become an emperor.

Not I, indeed. It is not that which makes a government to be one thing or another. What has made America America, and different from Europe, is this: You have had no army, no may, no civil service of any great magnitude; so you have lived without cabals at the center, because you had no powerful bureaus at the center, having little money to receive here and little to disburse. But now, "vous avez changé tout cela."

Now you have a debt as large as the best of us. You will have to raise taxes as onerous as the worst of us. You must have establishments of officials as numerous, as well disciplined, and as powerful as any of us. These central establishments will govern your country as such establishments govern our countries. You will choose your Presidents in one way; we choose ours in another. But you will have just what we have—the intrigue, the corruption, the overruling central power which come in, and must come in, where a great deal of money is collected, is handled, and is paid over. Your nation will be governed, then, just as ours are governed. Only you will still call yours a republic, while we call ours empires or kingdoms. "Voila la difference."

This prophecy has proved but too true thus far.
[During the delivery of the foregoing remarks, when Mr. WARNER's hour expired, the following proceedings took place:
Mr. MILLS. I hope the gentleman's time will be extended.
Mr. REAGAN. The gentleman is nearly through.
Mr. WARNER. I want only ten or fifteen minutes more.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas moves that the time of the gentleman from Ohio be extended. The Chair hears no objection

Mr. Warner resumed and concluded his remarks.]
Mr. CHITTENDEN. Mr. Chairman, let me say in justice to myself that I had no more thought of speaking upon this bill fifteen minutes ago than I had of being indicted for the forgery of the Chinese letter. But it is just possible that I may at a venture say a few words on the funding bill as usefully now as at any time.

Divested of all extraneous matter the funding bill before the House is a very simple, honest, business question, which members of Congress ought to be competent to comprehend. What is it? The Government of the United States owes $600,000,000, more or less, which will become payable next year. The rates of interest on this part of the national debt are now excessive. The credit of the Government of the United States has improved much more rapidly and to a greater of the United States has improved much more rapidly and to a greater extent than anybody could have imagined. What is it that Congress is called upon to do? It is simply a question whether this $600,000,000, more or less, shall remain unpaid, drawing 5 and 6 per $600,000,000, more or less, shall remain unpaid, drawing 5 and 6 per cent. interest, or whether it shall be honestly paid as soon as it can be, and the Government borrow the money at 3 per cent. interest. That is all there is of it. The speech of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WARNER]—without meaning any disrespect for it, because it was a very fine speech, containing a great many things, ancient and modern, of surpassing interest [laughter]—has precious little to do with the question whether the Government of the United States shall avail itself of its credit, which, thank God, in spite of the silver craze which has not yet become operative, is now the best credit in the world. Have we or have we not the sense to avail ourselves of our world. Have we or have we not the sense to avail ourselves of our credit and borrow money at 3 per cent. interest to pay debts now drawing 5 and 6 per cent.?

Now, Mr. Chairman, I am a republican, and presume that my party would prefer to change one feature of this bill to provide against possible exigencies. I would myself prefer to give the Secretary of the Treasury a little latitude. I would not limit him absolutely to par for a 3 per cent bond for so large an amount of money at a time when for a 3 per cent. bond for so large an amount of money at a time when money is loaned in Wall street, in the very center of commerce, at 100 per cent. per annum, day by day, as it is to-day. Yet I confidently believe that the money can certainly be borrowed at 3 per cent.; and I would vote for the bill under that belief, though desiring that the recommendation of the Secretary of the Treasury for a little latitude should be adorted. should be adopted.

Mr. Chairman, what are the signs in the Old World which should lead this Congress, without hesitation, to pass this bill before Christlead this Congress, without hesitation, to pass this bill before Christmas? Those of us (and I presume we are all of that party) who have noticed the late comments of the London Times and other financial authorities of Europe know that the rising credit and financial condition of the United States excites the envy of England and Europe, because it is discovered that our credit should be, and promises to be, better than that of any other nation on earth. The 3 per cent. British consol is to-day worth less than 99, while we are claiming, with good reasons, that the American bond, having but twenty years to run instead of a perpetual existence, will bring par, and so it will. I said just now, or meant to intimate, that it would bring par in spite of the silver craze. Why say that? Because our credit depends upon the fact that, notwithstanding the speeches, old and new, of the gentleman from Ohio on the subject of silver—notwithstanding all that our own country and the world has witnessed with regret of the fallacies on that subject which have been uttered on this floor in the last four years—in spite of all that, it is a fact that there is not a holder of a Government bond in the United States or Engage who intelligently understands the law and the uniform prac-Europe who intelligently understands the law and the uniform practice of this Government who does not regard that bond as payable in gold.

Mr. PRICE. They cannot read, I suppose.

Mr. CHITTENDEN. That is my answer to all that the gentleman from Ohio has said on that subject.

Mr. WARNER rose.

Mr. CHITTENDEN. Do not interrupt me now, because I am talking at random, and do not want to be interrupted. [Laughter.]

I aver that notwithstanding all the stump speeches and other speeches about silver which have been made in the Congress of the United States for the last four years, there is not an intelligent holder of a Government security of the United States who does not regard the Government as pledged in honor by precedent by the recomment. of a Government security of the United States who does not regard the Government as pledged in honor by precedent, by the recommendations of its chief officers, and by the statutes as they stand, to pay every dollar of our bonds in gold. But for that there would be nobody to argue in favor of the 3 per cent. Government bonds at par. But for that there would be no man here or elsewhere who would contend for a single moment that the Government of the United States ought to borrow or can borrow money at 3 per cent. per annum when the British consol is worth but 98 to 99.

ought to borrow or can borrow money at 3 per cent. per annum when the British consol is worth but 98 to 99.

Now, Mr. Chairman, as I undertook to make a speech off-hand, without the least preparation and somewhat at random, I will not apologize for any digression. I come, then, to the silver certificates, and I wish to give gentlemen a hint here in regard to them. I shall have but few more words to say in this place, at any rate, on any of these questions. The Government of the United States, from stress for paper money during the last sixty or ninety days, has issued about $20,000,000 of silver certificates; that is to say, they have issued a circulating medium which is to buy cotton, hogs, wheat, petroleum, and everything the country produces for exportation, and for which the exporter gets gold. They have issued $20,000,000 of these circulating silver certificates, for which the Government has received gold. There has been $400,000 in gold deposited in the sub-treasury in Wall street, New York, to-day, for which the silver certificates have been issued payable in your popular silver dollar of 412½ grains. Now, then, there is not a man here who does not know two things about that dollar. The first is that it will not pay a debt one inchevond the American territory except for what it is worth by weight; and the other is that it is not worth by weight more than 87½ cents.

I make no predictions here, but I give utterance to a principle which is as lasting as the foundations of the earth. There is no other law, human or divine, more enduring than the fact that a lie sooner or later will punish its author or somebody. What I say is that as sure as the tides of commerce continue to flow, just so sure the tides of gold in the existing conditions of the commerce of the world and under our attempt to make a double-coin standard without the coperation of other nations, just so sure as the sun shall rise to-morrow, these tides of gold will flow out from our country. And what then? Who then will have your silver certifi Now, Mr. Chairman, as I undertook to make a speech off-hand, with-safe and good as one that cost eighty-seven?

Mr. Chairman, the day of reckoning is coming. It is perhaps far in the future, and fortunately it does not interfere with this funding bill simply because the people of the whole world, who own our bonds, believe we are bound in honor to pay them in gold. We have never paid anything else. We have never in the history of our Government offered to pay any debt in silver. I say this silver matter does not interfere with the success of this funding bill, and we are standing here to-day with the power to issue new bonds for the old ones at a little more than half the rate of interest we are now paying. We do not thereby prevent the growth of the sinking fund or such appropriations to that fund as the condition of the Treasury may permit. I am myself in favor of such legislation as shall reduce the mit. I am myself in favor of such legislation as shall reduce the national debt at least $50,000,000 a year. I would rearrange the war tariff, conserving our national industries, in the interest of the labordebt at least $50,000,000 a year.

But, sir, that has nothing to do with this measure now under consideration. The Government has not the money in the Treasury to pay these $600,000,000 next year, and the question is—I will conclude by restating it—shall we borrow $600,000,000 at 3 per cent. to pay an equal amount of the national debt within our reach next year, on which we are now paying 5 and 6 per cent., or shall we scold the bondholders all winter and go on paying them, indefinitely, an average of something over 2 per cent. per annum more than we need to?

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD moved that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Coverr reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had, according to order, had under consideration the bill (H. R. No. 4592) to facilitate the refunding of the national debt, and had come to no resolution thereon.

CONSULAR AND DIPLOMATIC BILL.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported a bill (H. R. No. 6613) making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic service of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1832, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, ordered to be printed, and re-

Mr. BLOUNT. I reserve all points of order on that bill.

MILITARY ACADEMY BILL.

Mr. FORNEY, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported a bill (H. R. No. 6614) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, ordered to be printed, and recommitted.

Mr. BLOUNT. I reserve all points of order on that bill.

MESSENGER.

Mr. MARTIN, of Delaware, from the Committee on Accounts, reported back the following resolution with a favorable report:

Resolved. That the Clerk of the House be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay John Maloney at the rate of $1,000 per annum during the present session of Congress, for services as messenger to the official reporters of debates, and that the same be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

The written report accompanying the resolution was read, as fol-

The Committee on Accounts, to whom was referred the resolution of the House authorizing the employment of a messenger for the official reporters of debates during the present session of Congress, at the rate of $1,000 per annum, respectfully report that they have carefully considered the same, and find its provisions in accordance with an unbroken line of precedents for a number of years and demanded by the necessities of the case. They therefore recommend the passage of the resolution.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. MARTIN, of Delaware, moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the metion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

WEIGHTS-AND-MEASURES CONVENTION, PARIS.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of the communication from the Secretary of State in relation to the amount due from the United States under the weights-and-measures convention of Paris of May 28, 1878; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

MONUMENTAL COLUMN, YORKTOWN, VIRGINIA.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, relative to the model of the monumental column at Yorktown, Virginia; which was referred to the Committee on the Yorktown Centennial Celebration.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. Wells until the 4th of January, on account of important business.

EVENING SESSION ON THURSDAY.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to present a proposition to the House, which I hope will meet with approval. I request that there be an evening session for the special purpose indicated in the paper which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The paper will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That there be a session of the House on Thursday evening next, at seven and one-half o'clock, to act upon Senate bills upon the Private Calendar, subject to the appropriation bills.

Mr. McKENZIE. I object.
Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I move that the House do now adjourn.
The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at four o'clock p. m.)
the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and other papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows, viz:

On motion of Mr. BALDWIN, it was Ordered. That the original deed, executed by Bickford P. Hutchinson, Silas Titus, and Charles Tryon, dated February 9, 1837, to James M. Burger be withdrawn from the files of the Senate and delivered to H. H. Wells, the attorney of Horace Gilpin, who is the grantee of the said Burger.

ALLEGED ABUSE OF JUDICIAL PROCESS.

Mr. CALL. I offer the following resolution:

Resolved by the Senate of the United States, That it be referred to the Judiciary Committee of the Senate to inquire into and report to the Senate as to the cases of alleged unlawful arrest and imprisonment of any of the people of the United States under the process of the cours of the United States, and as to the cases of the unnecessary removal of accused persons to places distant from their homes for a preliminary hearing before the commissioners of the United States courts for personal or political objects; and to report by bill or otherwise such legislation as may be necessary for the protection of the people against the wrongful and oppressive use of the powers and process of said courts.

I ask that the resolution lie upon the table for the present, in order that I may call it up at an early day.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will lie on the table, subject to the call of the Senator. Does the Senator desire that it be printed?

Mr. CALL. Yes, sir.
The VICE-PRESIDENT. The order to print will be made.

UNITED PEORIAS AMD MIAMIES.

Mr. SAUNDERS and others addressed the Chair.
Mr. COCKRELL. If the morning business is through, I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. No. 364) for the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. No. 364) for the relief of Samuel A. Lowe. It will only take a minute.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will recognize the Senator, inquiring, first, is there further business of the morning hour?

Mr. SAUNDERS. I simply desire to give notice to the Senate that to-morrow, after the morning business shall have been disposed of, I shall ask the Senate to take up and consider the bill (S. No. 1598) to provide for the allotment of lands in severalty to the United Peorias and Miamies of the Indian Territory, and for other purposes. It is a bill that in the hurry at the close of the last session failed to get through, and as it is a matter of great importance to these Indians. through, and as it is a matter of great importance to these Indians, who are now proposing to take upon themselves the duties of citizenship, I desire to get up the bill as early as possible. I therefore give notice that to-morrow I shall endeavor to have the bill taken up.

MILITARY WARRANT LAND LOCATIONS.

Mr. McDONALD. I gave notice yesterday that at the close of the morning business this morning I should move to take up the motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill (8. No. 19) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to ascertain and certify the amount of land located with military warrants in the States described therein, and for other purposes, was indefinitely postponed at the last session, and I desire that my notice shall not run out.

THE INDIANS.

Mr. COKE. I desire to give notice that on Tuesday next, at the expiration of the morning hour, I shall ask the Senate to take up and consider the bill (S. No. 1773) to provide for the allotment of lands in severalty to Indians on the various reservations, and to extend the protection of the laws of the States and Territories over the Indians, and for other purposes. The bill is a very important one; the Secretary of the Interior thinks it absolutely necessary; and it should be acted upon as soon as possible.

THE CALENDAR.

Mr. WALLACE. I desire to call up the resolution submitted by the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. Anthony] for the action of the Senate this morning, if in order. It went over on my objection. The Senate proceeded to consider the following resolution, submitted by Mr. Anthony on the 8th instant:

Resolved. That at the conclusion of the morning business for each day, unless upon motion the Senate shall at any time otherwise order, the Senate will proceed to the consideration of the Calendar, and continue such consideration until half past one o'clock; and bills that are not objected to shall be taken up in their order, and each Senator shall be entitled to speak once and for five minutes only upon any question; and the objection may be interposed at any stage of the proceedings; and this order shall commence immediately after the call for "concurrent and other resolutions," and shall take precedence of the unfinished business and other ANTHONY.

Mr. ANTHONY. I did not notice that this resolution was already in force. It has been offered from time to time as applicable to the existing session, but I see that as it was passed the last time it becomes an order of the Senate. I would ask, however, that the resolution which I have offered be substituted for that order, as it is a little more explicit in its expression. There was some debate, Senators may remember, upon the clause "unless otherwise ordered by the Senate," which was taken by some to apply to five-minute speeches, whereas it was intended to apply to the whole rule; and the resolution which I have presented makes it apply to the whole rule.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Will the Senate substitute the resolution just read for what is known as the Anthony rule as printed daily at the head of the Calendar?

the head of the Calendar?

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. ANTHONY. I ask unanimous consent that the rule may not apply to this morning, as my friend from Vermont [Mr. Morrill] is prepared to address the Senate. ["Agreed."]

CONDEMNED SENATE FURNITURE.

Mr. BRUCE. I ask for the consideration of the resolution submitted by me yesterday.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Mississippi calls up, under the morning hour business, the resolution offered by him yesterday, which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Sergeant at Arms be, and he bereby is, authorized and directed to deliver to the National Association for the Relief of Colored Women and Children for its use such articles of furniture as may be condemned as no longer fit for the use of the Senate.

Mr. BRUCE. I offer the following as a substitute for the resolution just reported:

Resolved, That the Sergeant-at-Arms be, and hereby is, authorized and directed to deliver to the National Association for the Relief of Colored Women and Children, of the District of Columbia, for its use, such articles of furniture now on hand as may be condemned by the Sergeant-at-Arms as no longer fit for the use of the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the substitute

Mr. McDONALD. I do not desire to antagonize the resolution, but I suggest to the mover, the Senator from Mississippi, that it had better be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate. I make that motion if it is necessary.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion to refer the resolution to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent

Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. Mr. President, about a year ago the attention of the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate was called to this subject by the Sergeant-at-Arms with a request that that committee should designate some proper person to pass upon the fitness of this furniture and dispose of it, he, being an officer of the Senate, not desiring to take the entire responsibility which he understood had been the previous practice of the Senate. When he called my attention to the subject I gave a little consideration to it and at once said that I did not think the committee referred the day invisibilities over the appearance of the subject I gave a little consideration to it and at once said that I did not think the committee referred to not it and at once said that I did not think the committee referred to had any jurisdiction over the question. The matter, however, was considered by the committee, one member not being present, and we were considering it when the Senator from Mississippi yesterday offered the resolution which has been read. We had previously appointed a committee meeting to consider this subject for yesterday on the suggestion of the Sergeant-at-Arms, and we invited the Senator from Mississippi to meet us yesterday afternoon, which he did.

the suggestion of the Sergeant-at-Arms, and we invited the Senator from Mississippi to meet us yesterday afternoon, which he did.

Now, I will say to Senators that we are informed that the furniture alluded to would perhaps, if put on the market, not sell for exceeding $100. It is furniture utterly useless to the Senate, so we are told, and of course is worth very little. The only serious question is whether we have the power to do what is proposed by the resolution. I will simply say for myself that I am of the opinion that the Senate alone has no power to dispose of this furniture in the manner suggested, nor in any other manner. I believe that is the concurrent opinion of my associates on the committee. This property belongs not to the Senate but to the Government. It is a very small amount and of very small value; but the question of power is precisely the same whether the property involved is worth $100 or $1,000,000. What authority has this Senate, by resolution, even to order the sale of property belonging to the Government? It was purchased with money from the Treasury; true, it is worn out, but it is worth something, and it must be disposed of and ought to be disposed of. In my opinion, it can only be disposed of by a joint resolution of the two Houses, approved by the President, and having the effect of a law. We should adhere to the Constitution in all things. If we do not respect the Constitution in small things we will not respect it in great things, and will soon cease to respect it at all.

There is a precedent for the action proposed by the Senator from Mississing that occurred in 1870, when a resolution was nessed year.

There is a precedent for the action proposed by the Senator from Mississippi that occurred in 1870, when a resolution was passed very much like the one now presented. That resolution, however, I notice was passed without any point being made, without any discussion, merely nem. con. It therefore constitutes no real precedent. I do merely nem. con. It therefore constitutes no real precedent. I do not think it is necessary myself to refer this resolution to the committee. The committee have considered it, it is true, not formally, by the direction of the Senate, but I do not think my opinions would be any clearer after considering it by direction of the Senate than they now are. I think this resolution proposes that the Senate shall do something which the Senate has no power to do, and for that reason I have deemed it my duty to call the attention of the Senate to its character. If any authorize any appropriate that the Senate son I have deemed it my duty to call the attention of the Senate to its character. If any gentleman can convince me that the Senate has the power to do this thing, I am willing to be convinced, but I do not believe the Senate has the power to dispose of any property belonging to the United States by a resolution of the Senate. As I said before, the two Houses of Congress by joint resolution, having the effect of law, can direct the disposition of this property in any manner the two Houses see fit.

The only question is one of power, and now that the question has been made and the attention of the Senate has been called to the point involved, if this resolution should pass it will become a precedent, and may lead to serious abuses. I shall vote against it.

Mr. EATON. May I ask the Senator from Mississippi whether the resolution contemplates a gift or a loan?

Mr. BRUCE. Agift. I am not aware, Mr. President, of the existence of any law touching the disposition of the old furniture of the Senate. I am informed by officers who have been connected with the Senate for many years that prior to the passage of the resolution of December 9, 1870, and since that time, the disposition of the old furniture of the Senate has been left to the discretion of the Sergeantat-Arms; that he has from time to time sold such furniture and applied the proceeds to the purchase of new furniture or covered the money into the Treasury. I am informed that if the condemned furniture now on hand should be sold, it would not bring more than $100; and yet, small as this sum is, if the furniture could be given to this institution, it would go far toward contributing to the comfort of its inmates.

The resolution to which I have just referred was introduced by Mr. Pomeroy, December 9, 1870. I read from the Journal of the Senate of that day:

Mr. Pomeroy submitted the following resolution; which was considered, by manimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Sergeant-at-Arms be authorized to present to the lady managers of the Colored Orphan Asylum and Soldiers and Sailors' Orphan Asylum such old carpets as they may select, with the approval of the Sergeant-at-Arms, from the old carpets lately removed from committee-rooms of the Senate.

This, as far as I know, is the only official notice which the Senate has ever taken touching the disposal of its old furniture.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. It has become necessary, as I am informed by the Sergeant-at-Arms and others, that the old carpets, chairs, &c., which are entirely useless, shall be disposed of in some form. This furniture now occupies a room which ought to be used by one of the committees. There is a committee, I believe, which has no room and which can occupy the room in which this old furniture is stored. I hope the Senate will dispose of it in some way, and I am perfectly willing myself to see it go in the direction the Senator from perfectly willing myself to see it go in the direction the Senator from perfectly willing myself to see it go in the direction the Senator from Mississippi indicates.

Mr. HAMLIN. My attention was invited to this subject by the Sergeant-at-Arms and I examined it a little, and took a peep at this collection of curiosities which it is proposed to give away—an infirmary of disabled furniture; and I think if we keep it much longer it will get on the pension list and draw a pension for its disability. [Laughter.] As a matter of economy, I would suggest that it would be the wisest thing for this body to dispose of it.

According to my recollection, without raising a very grave constitutional question here, we may well repose upon what has been the action of this body since I have ever knewn anything about it. The débris that is collected from year to year I think has always been disposed of by the Sergeant-at-Arms and converted probably into other means. There were objections made that there had been an abuse in that action; I am inclined to think there had been an abuse; and now the present Sergeant-at-Arms simply says to the Senate, "I do not want anything to do with it." I think he very wisely simply saks the attention of the Senate to the matter that he may clear out that room and provide for committees, as it is known here in this that room and provide for committees, as it is known here in this body that some committees are driven out of the Capitol, that other body that some committees are driven out of the Capitol, that other committees are duplicated in the same room, and that other committees have no rooms at all, either in or out of the Capitol. The Sergeant-at-Arms wisely says, "Let me give this to the association for the protection of the poor in this city; it is not worth a hundred dollars; I doubt if it would pay the expense of carting to an auctionroom and the expense of the auctioner." In view of what has been done in the past, I hope the resolution will be adopted.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Indiana, [Mr. McDonald,] that the resolution be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. McDONALD. I withdraw the motion.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The motion is withdrawn. Will the Senate agree to the substitute?

Mr. BECK. I shall vote to give this furniture away, but I desire to say while doing it that I do not approve it if each Department of to say while doing it that I do not approve it it each Department of this Government thus disposes of what it calls its worn out furniture when desks become unfashionable and new ones are placed there, and the carpets are not quite as nice as some of the clerks desire, and new carpets are demanded there; and if the Senate gives away what it has each one of the Departments will go to giving away what they have, and there will be thousands of dollars' worth of furniture concluded and probably will know what becomes of it or what it is they have, and there will be thousands of dollars' worth of furniture squandered and nobody will know what becomes of it or what it is worth. I went through an investigation in regard to that subject in the House relative to the Treasury Department some years ago, and it was proved that property worth thousands of dollars did not bring more than a few dollars when it ought to have brought hundreds. Some general rule ought to be established showing the value of the property; let us know when it is sold and why it is sold, and the amount derived from the sale. If the Senate gives away what it pleases, which perhaps is worth little or nothing, and the House do the same thing, and each Department of the Government does the same thing, there will be no bigger leak in a small way in connection with the management of the Departments of the Government than in turning out and giving away what they do not want in the way of turning out and giving away what they do not want in the way of furniture in order to get better, and get clear of the old by giving it away to whom they please. I shall vote for the resolution, but it is all wrong.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. Mr. President, it seems to me there can be no doubt about the question of power in this case. It is a very small matter, gentlemen think, to make a point on. I should not have made it but for the fact that my attention has been called to it, and for the reason I stated to the Senate before. I felt it my duty to state the matter to the Senate, and have discharged my duty. state the matter to the Senate, and have discharged my duty. But I concur in what the Senator from Kentucky has said, and now the attention of the country has been called to it, we ought to settle a correct rule, because there is no doubt but there may be abuses in this direction if a correct rule is not adhered to. I suggest to the Senator from Mississippi that it would be a very small matter to introduce a joint resolution. That would be legal and competent. If it should pass both Houses, it would settle this matter and settle it correctly. I suggest to the Senator from Mississippi that he offer a joint resolution in order to relieve the matter of all difficulty, and it is the legal and better plan to do that. The wrong is not in the amount we dispose of, but in disposing of anything without authority.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. George M. Adams, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following:

A bill (S. No. 148) granting an increase of pension to J. J. Purman; and

A bill (S. No. 992) granting a pension to Mrs. Julia Gardner Tyler, widow of ex-President Tyler.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 2658) to regulate the award of and compensation for public advertising in the District of Columbia, asked a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. O. R. Singleton of Mississippi, Mr. Benjamin Wilson of West Virginia, and Mr. P. C. Hayes of Illinois, managers at the conference on its part.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the Vice-President:

A bill (S. No. 533) for the relief of Charles W. Abbot, a pay director, and W. W. Barry, a passed assistant paymaster in the United States

Navy;
A bill (H. R. No. 3921) to amend section 2238 of the Revised Statutes, in relation to fees for final certificates in donation cases; and A bill (H. R. No. 5918) granting a pension to Thomas Pettijohn.

EDUCATIONAL FUND.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 133) to establish an educational fund and apply a portion of the proceeds of the public lands to public education and to provide for the more complete endowment and support of national colleges for the advancement of scientific and industrial education.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. Mon-

RILL] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. MORRILL. I yield to my friend from Rhode Island, [Mr. BURNSIDE,] who desires to address the Senate for perhaps ten min-

Mr. BURNSIDE. Mr. President, it is not claimed by the friends of this bill that it is of great magnitude, or that the results of its passage will be very great in the direction of aid to the educational interests will be very great in the direction of aid to the educational interests of the country; but we claim that it is a step in the right direction. We believe it to be for the best interests of the country that Government should aid in the education of the people to the fullest possible extent that the Constitution will allow. Congress certainly has the right to give to the States the proceeds of the sales of public lands and the surplus revenue of the Patent Office in such manner as it may have the states the proceeds of the sales of public lands and the surplus revenue of the Patent Office in such manner as it may deem wise. This bill contemplates the distribution of these funds according to the numbers of residents of the States, of ten years old and upward, who cannot read and write; that is, two-thirds of the and upward, who cannot read and write; that is, two-thirds of the amount to be so distributed, and one-third for the more complete endowment and support of colleges.

The bill provides proper methods to insure the safe and equitable distribution of the funds, all of which will be discussed and explained by friends of the bill. As I said, we believe that it is the duty of the Government to provide in every possible constitutional way for the education of the people, particularly as to the elementary branches. I am in favor of going much further in that direction than this bill contemplates, and it is my belief that at no distant day it will be deemed proper by Congress to take more advanced steps in this direcdeemed proper by Congress to take more advanced steps in this direc-

I believe that after the public debt shall have been reduced to a sum which would seem to warrant the reduction of internal taxes, they should still be continued on spirits and tobacco, and the proceeds of these taxes devoted to educational purposes; and I believe it will be found that as the people advance in education they will be better able to reason themselves into the belief that the use of these products s detrimental to themselves individually and to the community at large. A very striking illustration of what can be done for a community by education is portrayed by Macauley in a speech delivered by him in the House of Commons in April, 1847. He was advocating the right and duty of Parliament to aid in education, and said:

by him in the House of Commons in April, 1847. He was advocating the right and duty of Parliament to aid in education, and said:

But sir, if the state of the southern part of our island has furnished me with one strong argument, the state of the northern part furnishes me with another argument, which is, if possible, still more decisive. A hundred and fifty years ago England was one of the best governed and most presperous countries in the world; Sectland was perhaps the rudest and poorest country that could lay any claim to civilization. The name of Sectchman was then uttered in this part of the island with contempt. The ablest Sectch statesmen contemplated the degraded state of their poorer countrymen with a feeling approaching to despair. It is well known that Fletcher of Saltoun, a brave and accomplished man, a man who had drawn his sword for liberty, who had suffered proscription and exile for liberty, was so much disgusted and dismayed by the misery, the ignorance, the idleness, the lawlessness of the common people, that he proposed to make many thousands of them slaves. Nothing, he thought, but the discipline which kept order and enforced exertion among the negroes of a sugar colony, nothing but the lash and the stocks, could reclaim the vagabonds who infested every part of Scotland from their indolent and predatory habits, and compel them to support themselves by steady labor. He therefore, soon after the revolution, published a pamphlet, in which he carneestly, and, as I believe from the mere impulse of humanity and patriotism, recommended to the estates of the realm this sharp remedy, which alone, as he conceived, could remove the evil. Within a few months after the publication of that pamphlet a very different remedy was applied. The Parliament which sate at Edinburgh passed an act for the establishment of parcohial schools. What followed? An improvement such as the world had never seen took place in the moral and intellect-ual character of the people. Soon, in spite of the rigor of the climate, in

Mr. President, I believe that the passage of this bill will result in great good to the country. The people that it will aid in learning to read will find companions in books, instead of going to grog-shops and saloons for them.

I will now, Mr. President, leave this bill in the hands of friends who are better able to look after its advancement than I am, in the hope that the Senate will allow it to come to an early vote.

who are better able to look after its advancement than I am, in the hope that the Senate will allow it to come to an early vote.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. President, this bill, reported unanimously by the Committee on Education and Labor, proposes to consecrate the proceeds of sales of public lands to the education of the people. It will not interfere with the rights of pre-emption nor with entries for homesteads, and leaves unimpaired the claims of any State to its percentage of the sales of public lands. As the amount of such sales will hereafter be small, it is proposed to add to this educational fund the net proceeds of all receipts for patents after deducting the expenses of the Patent Office. The entire fund is then to be invested in United States bonds and the interest annually apportioned to the several States and Territories upon the basis of population between the ages of five and twenty-five years, except that for the first ten years the apportionment is to be made according to the numbers of their population, respectively, of ten years old and upward who cannot read and write; with the further provision that one-third of the income from the fund shall be annually appropriated to the more complete endowment and support of colleges established, or such as may hereafter be established in accordance with the act of Congress approved in 1862, until the annual income of each shall amount to $30,000; and thereafter all beyond that sum is to be devoted to the education of the children of the several States and Territories, including the District of Columbia, between the ages of six and sixteen versus and support is also the receipt and the education of the children of the several States and Territories, including the District of Columbia, between the ages of six and sixteen versus and sixtee cluding the District of Columbia, between the ages of six and sixteen years. Authority is also to be given for the acceptance of any sums which may be donated for these objects by will or otherwise, and the donations in our country for educational purposes have been and are likely to be of unexampled liberality.

There are other provisions of the bill intended to be useful which will be likely to meet with general acceptance, and among them that which provides for the special instruction of common-school teachers.

which provides for the special instruction of common-school teachers. If the general educational purpose of the bill should meet with favor little fault, it is believed, will be found with its details, as these have been laboriously and very carefully matured. It is not a party measure, and its benefits will cover every State. Should there be any Senator, as I hope there will not be, who objects to the main purpose of the bill, may I not ask, before he ventures to place himself on record against the measure, that he will examine the whole matter so far as to determine whether there is or can be any nobler or more enduring object to which the public domain ever has been, or to which the remnant of that once great estate of the New World can which the remnant of that once great estate of the New World can now be, devoted?

If I appear once more in behalf of a measure not new to me, nor to the Senate, I hope my right to indulgence will be conceded, as the measure, in my estimation, has lost nothing of its interest and its importance more than keeps pace with the rapid growth of our country.

First let me offer briefly some words concerning the land-grant colleges. So long ago as 1858 a bill providing colleges for each one of the States, introduced and advocated by me, passed both Houses of Congress, but was vetoed by the President, who then favored, instead Congress, but was vetoed by the President, who then favored, instead of colleges, a special professorship for some existing institution in each State. In 1862, however, when all of our resources were precious, but not more precious than education, the bill was again introduced and received the favor of both Congress and President Lincoln, and became the law of the land. The object of this law was not to injure any existing classical institutions, but to re-enforce them and bring liberal culture within the reach of a much larger and unprovided for number of the industrial classes in every State. It was designed to largely benefit those at the bottom of the ladder who want to climb up, or those who have some ambition to rise in the world, but are without the means to seek far from home a higher standard of culture. This and more was songht to be accomplished world, but are without the means to seek far from home a higher standard of culture. This and more was sought to be accomplished by bringing forward, at less cost of time and money, courses of study of greater use in practical affairs than those, then largely prevailing, which seemed to offer little of lasting value beyond the mere discipline imposed. Long years of unproductive time upon dead languages cannot always be afforded by those who are never to find occasion in after life to resurrect them. The farmer, mechanic, miner, and engineer, all those intending to work with both hands and brains, have undoubtedly demanded an education worthy to take equal rank with that of purely literary colleges; but for them, education often have undoubtedly demanded an education worthy to take equal rank with that of purely literary colleges; but for them, education often being their chief capital, it was vitally important that it should be something they could carry away and ready for early and daily use. A wider range in scientific studies, more freedom of choice, had become indispensable in order to include the large and varied stores of knowledge extant in the world, and to more definitely satisfy the multiplied intellectual activities and industrial wants of the age.

But the land-grant colleges were not intended to be, and are not hostile to other institutions, as it has been demonstrated that the students of the latter have continued to increase in number; but the field was large, and a large addition to the number of efficient laborers has been most advantageously obtained.

ers has been most advantageously obtained.

I find this point so clearly stated by the Commissioner of Education in his report of 1876, that I will borrow a brief extract, and wish I had room for more. He says:

The task imposed upon the colleges of agriculture and the mechanic arts, founded on the congressional grant of 1862, is rarely understood. Having nothing in their establishment antagonistic to classical culture, designed at discretion to comprehend all learning when established independently, or to harmonize with all other culture when associated as a department with institutions previously established, they are intended, undoubtedly, to furnish the opportunity for instruction in the direction of science, technics, and industry in this country.

They were, let me add, undoubtedly intended to be broad enough to "comprehend all learning," and to educate all classes; but their leading object was to include the branches related to agriculture and leading object was to include the branches related to agriculture and other industrial arts, and to offer better instruction to those aiming at eminence in such busy and varied life-walks.

In no other country is there a more overmastering ambition, among both men and women, to obtain a thorough education, or semething beyond the three R's; and it is not limited to the few looking up to professional pursuits, but all, the children of the poor as well as of the rich, are eager for its supreme and admitted advantages. The farmer, searching for better fertilizers or for better labor-saving machines, finds it a constant helper. The mechanic, striving to increase the value of his individual labor and thus to increase ing to increase the value of his individual labor and thus to increase the public wealth, finds it an unfailing resource. Merchants, and men of enterprise in all spheres of active business, find it above all else the one thing needful. Statesmen of all countries find it the else the one thing needful. Statesmen of all countries find it the chief prop of liberty, law, and order.

As legislators, our first duty is in all cases to ascertain whether or not the facts and merits justify the measure under consideration. The land-grant colleges, though occupying but a subordinate position in this bill, have long since triumphantly passed the ordeal of unfriendly criticism and now fully vindicate their right to live and their claim to continued public confidence. In 1875 the very able Committee on Education and Labor in the House of Representatives, consisting of claver members, were directed to inquire into the fouldition sisting of eleven members, were directed to inquire into the condition and management of the colleges which had received grants from the United States. This committee were unanimous in making an elaborate and conclusive report highly commendatory of the colleges. As to the management of the fund received, they say:

The principal has remained undiminished and the interest has been promptly paid and devoted to the work of instruction. This result is gratifying to the friends of education, is creditable to the States which accepted the trust, and reflects credit upon the Government which bestowed it.

They further say:

It must be added that the reports sent from these colleges reveal, in many cases, a certain fresh interest, a spirit of youth, a new enthusiasm, which, when intelligent and enduring, is one of the best prophecies of success. Strong evidence is afforded of the power of these institutions to establish sympathetic relations between themselves and the communities in which they are placed, in the fact that they have already received appropriations from States and donations from towns, counties, and private individuals, an amount almost equal in the aggregate to the whole bounty of the Government.

Since this report it must be observed that nearly all of these colleges have steadily advanced in usefulress as well as in the public estimation. But I am able to offer direct evidence of a later date, kindly furnished to me by General Eaton, of the Bureau of Educakindly furnished to me by General Eaton, of the Bureau of Education, showing the present condition of these colleges and the broad range of their good works. Considering how recently they were planted, their healthy growth and deep root appears almost incredible. The outfit for buildings and lands, and especially for scientific apparatus, has been much greater than that ordinarily required for any other institutions of learning; but the liberality of States and of many private individuals has supplied in many instances the means to obtain this outfit, and in the aggregate an amount has been received nearly equal to all that was realized from the original land grant. This operates as a guarantee of good faith and of abiding grant. This operates as a guarantee of good faith and of abiding interest on the part of those conducting these institutions.

But let me give the substance of the communication from General

Eaton. Under the date of May 1, 1880, he says:

Eaton. Under the date of May 1, 1880, he says:

The national land grant made by an act of Congress of July 2, 1862, under certain conditions, for the "promotion of the stady of agriculture and the mechanic arts," was accepted by every State, and in 1878 there were regularly organized institutions in every State, excepting Colorado and Florida. In Nevada, the preparatory department of the college only had been opened, and in Mississippi in 1878 one of the schools of agriculture was in suspension in consequence of its removal from the University of Oxford to its new location at Starkville.

In this same year, therefore, thirty-six States have institutions, five divided, making a total of forty-one.

Thirty-feur institutions report 461 professors; thirty-seven institutions report 6,671 students; eleven institutions report 1,394 scholarships, (State;) twenty-three institutions report 84,613 volumes in libraries.

Income from productive funds (thirty institutions) Income from trition fees (fourteen institutions) Income from State appropriations (twenty institutions)	90, 170
Total (thirty-fore institutions)	200 602

Total (thirty-four institutions).

Thirty-two colleges had 11,533 acres in farms, or 360 acres average each.

Eleven colleges had 1,742 acres under cultivation, or 158 acres average each.

The value of grounds, buildings, and apparatus for twenty-eight institutions was $6,868,751, or an average of $245,312 each.

Eight received grants from States of $1,516,476

Fifteen received from other sources 4,794,416

This is an exhibit highly creditable, as I think, to the colleges and to the American people.

From the difference in management and difference in income there is now, and always will be, some difference in the prosperity of these institutions, and not all of them have been equally aided by their States, nor have all of them reported with that fullness of detail which should be required, but the average number of students (over one hundred and eighty) and the average number of professors (over thirteen) to each institution indicate their character and their success. thirteen) to each institution indicate their character and their success. All of the States appear to be earnestly co-operating to extend and perpetuate their usefulness. Individual generosity has also sought the opportunity to make many and large auxiliary donations. But, almost without exception, they sorely need some further help to be fully equipped for the important work originally proposed and now urgently demanded by the people of the respective States.

It may be confidently submitted that the facts recited show these institutions to be entitled to the unstinted favor of Congress, and that no other grant of lands has been bestowed upon a mean winthy that no other grant of lands has been bestowed upon a more worthy object, or one which has been productive of more adequate and comprehensive results. There is something to show for the outlay, and it is destined to last forever.

The second part of the present bill brings to the front school-houses; in the words of Lowell, "the Martello towers that protect our coast." It will be found, I fear, that these in many places are insufficient in number and very inadequately supported.

It would be vain to hide from ourselves the wide extent of illiteracy among our people. The census returns of 1570 reveal the fact that the aggregate number is 4,528,084. In the same statistical neighborhood of aggregate number is 4,528,084. In the same statistical neighborhood of this ugly fact comes another equally regretable, that we have of school population 14,418,923, while only 5,003,298 are in actual daily attendance at school. Think of it! Hardly more than one-third of the millions who should have been in the school house were there! The fate of these millions of unschooled boys and girls, the budding flowers of life, greatly depends upon the fate of this bill.

Every American heart will beat in harmony with an effort to ban-ish illiteracy throughout the land, and any person born here after 1880, and unable to read and write, should be a phenomenon. For existing deficiencies no reproach applies to the present generation, which may well be excused from any ancestral responsibility; nor which may well be excused from any ancestral responsibility; nor can we afford to hiss those who are now acting on the same great stage with ourselves, but the responsibility will weigh heavily upon the men of to-day for whatever illiteracy hereafter survives.

If it follows, as a logical necessity, that the character of the people gives more or less character to their government, it equally follows that governments may be so administered as to elevate or to degrade the character of the people. No one will deny that the arts may be advanced by patronage and protection; that agriculture may be benefited by the consideration it receives at the hands of the government; that commerce may be increased by special privileges; that be benefited by the consideration it receives at the hands of the government; that commerce may be increased by special privileges; that military power may be promoted by encouraging a love of martial glory, or perhaps by an aggressive national attitude, and more by the early Spartan discipline of the male population; that the enterprise of whole communities may be stimulated by liberal internal improvements; and it cannot be denied that mankind are endowed with the capacity to be lifted to a higher plane of morals and intelligence through direct or indirect governmental agency in aid of measures by which the early and thorough education of all those who are on the threshold of life can be secured.

If statesmen were to study national thrift alone, or nothing but the material interests of the people, nothing but how to give them the greatest force in industrial efficiency for the production of wealth and ability to support themselves and families, they could not be unmindful of the material advantages or of the increased power which mindful of the material advantages or of the increased power which follows universal education. It diminishes pauperism by opening new avenues to labor, and by showing how money can be saved as well as earned. It makes more of social life, and there is less crime to be supported or punished. It finds nobler fields of ambition than fields of war, and cherishes human brotherhood. It furnishes a skilled force at hand for constant wants and emergencies: to build railroads, to cortallish workshops and to hail ships as well as to open mines, to establish workshops, and to build ships, as well as to make the waste places "blossom as the rose."

If the iron be blunt, and he do not whet the edge, then must be be put to more

If men are to be made contented to remain in the places of their birth, wearing out their lives in all respected and useful industries, they must be made to feel that nowhere else can there be found wiser or better instruction for their children, and nowhere that that in-

But under our form of government, swayed to and fro by universal suffrage, it becomes our gravest duty as legislators to take heed that all those who wield power at the ballot-box shall be fully informed of the high trust they hold, and of their duty to discharge that trust with fidelity to the whole country and to the sacred obligations of an enlightened conscience. All of our citizens—not a privileged part—must be raised to that intellectual and moral dignity which appremust be raised to that intellectual and moral dignity which appreciates and accepts some personal responsibility to their country for their political privileges and for their appropriate exercise.

Americans as much as Englishmen have been proud to trace their robust origin to the mixture of the Saxon, Norman, Celtic, and other races. To all this we are now having a large infusion of miscellaneous nationalities, but whether or not the posterity of Americans will be improved, intellectually and physically, by the new admixture and by the "survival of the fittest" is a problem which tremblingly awaits future solution. awaits future solution.

Though it will probably be found that the number of the Mongo-lian race now within our borders may have been exaggerated, and that it does not exceed, all told, one hundred thousand, yet the question remains whether or not our people ought not to put a higher value upon both citizenship and inhabitancy. May we not invoke some power to reject persons who are manifestly unfitted to become some power to reject persons who are manifestly unfitted to become American citizens, including those who come with vile habits and viler characters which they are unable to leave behind them; and ought we not to reject those also who are sent here, cripples in mind, person, or purse, solely to relieve their countrymen from the burden of their support? Privileges for everybody break down and leave privileges for nobody. During the late famine in two of the great northern provinces of China, crowded with human beings, more than half of the population died. British India is also immensely overgently and in some large grant district every agen must feed not peopled, and in some large rural districts every acre must feed not less than one human being. How soon the pressure of famine may send to our inviting territories a hungry and countless oriental swarm, who can foretell? Fifty millions removed from Asia at any time would be a loss scarcely to be appreciated.

Time has been when immigrants of a low grade were not unwelcome, but now none but such as will make good citizens and will be readily assimilated are fully tolerated, and even these must here encounter as well as beget sharp competition.

Large as are our boundaries and as distinguished as have proved many of our foreign-born citizens, the time approaches when the short allowance of a dense population must be contemplated, or when the the straitened conditions of our children's children may force them to assert, as rightful heirs, a better title to our national patrimony than that of strangers to its cost and strangers to the workings of American institutions. Here is a grave question, and its solution cannot long be safely postponed. If, however, the discontented foreign legions, whether from Asia or from Europe, should cease to invade our shores, the bulk of those now here are likely to remain, and if they and their posterity remain unschooled, their degradation will be our degradation. Our school-houses as well as churches should therefore be wide open even to heathens, if here to stay, rather than our jails and houses of correction.

We are annually receiving large accessions to our population through immigration, and more have been on the wing to our shores this year than usual. All other nations combined receive much less. The bulk of our illiteracy, unfortunately, can be traced in many parts of the country to the foreign element. In the years from 1870 to 1880, inclusive, the number of immigrants arriving here appears to have been 3,199,394, or a number more than equal to our entire population in 1876 to 1880, to 1870 the property of the property 1776, when we struck for independence. From 1820 to 1870 the number of immigrants was 9,513,867, making a total since 1820 of 12,704,528. Of these more than four million were from Great Britain and Ireland.

These great tidal waves of drifting population will continue to flood our shores as long as men and women are attracted by our free institutions, by free homesteads, by free common schools, and by higher wages. They are all claiming this as their home, for weal or woe, destined to become citizens, and in many of the States they are permitted to exercise the privileges of citizenship about as soon as they are domiciled. Willing to labor, anxious to learn, as should be this adventur-ous host of comparative strangers to American institutions, shall we not plant both common schools and colleges among such a raw and relatively uninstructed multitude wherever it may be ultimately distributed !

Of much smaller magnitude, not, however, so small as to be wholly kept out of sight, is the question as to what shall be done with the various Indian tribes whose reservations appear like blotches on our maps, and which so rudely exclude the culture of so much of our vast domain west of the Mississippi. These scattered representatives of the original occupants of the American continent, as their tribal relations become dissolved, present primary and indiputable theoretical claims to citizenship and their right to participate in political privileges has been in many States already frequently exercised. It may not have the force here of a binding precedent, but the Choctaws were permitted to hold two seats in the confederate.congress—the representation accorded having doubtless been not so much arm in arm with taxation as with martial equivalents. Of the present estimated two hundred and fifty-five thousand Indians in the United States—whether slowly vanishing or slowly increasing—not less than sixty thousand may be called civilized and self-supporting, while the remainder are pushed day by day upon every side by swift-footed frontiersmen, who leave them at last with gameless huntinggrounds, but grounds still coveted by the pitiless march of modern civilization. Under these circumstances they seem destined to be either finally exterminated or absorbed. To exterminate them, in our own estimation, as well as in that of mankind, would be execrable, and to absorb them, wild an 1 untutored, would by no means elevate and to absorb them, who and intuitioned, would by no hears elevate or improve our Anglo-Saxon stock, which has too often shown, through savage border contact, that the tomahawk and scalping-knife are not the only symbols of barbarism.

They are called "wards of the nation," and have subjected us to great annoyance and to some shame. Doubtless they feel that they have suffered more annoyance and not less humiliation. They remember that war and the chase was once their yeartien and labor member that war and the chase was once their vocation, and labor their badge of disgrace, but they find war with the whites a losing business and game is no longer abundant. All desire to live and many are willing to work. The school at Hampton, Virginia, and more that at Carlisle, Pennsylvania, would appear to show that the shildren of the red man can be made to receive instruction and to learn the value of industry as well as of letters. The experiment, beyond all doubt, has been a measurable success. No one here of No one here or elsewhere has objected to the schools, nor to the one hundred and seventy day and boarding schools which have been also established and supported by the nation among the different tribes. Our people in coming ages, when sharply called to give some account of what we have done with "Lo! the poor Indian," cannot deny that we have been his keeper and will not regret that even these few humble

Unless wars with the wild Indians are to go on forever, giving to our little army difficult work and no glory, they must be tamed while young by humane and generous instruction, but that instruction can hardly be required or supported at the sole expense of the separate States or Territories, all of which would probably with more alacrity contribute to the swift expulsion of these native lords of the soil from their borders. They are not wanted, and seem to comber the

The Indian Territory and other reservations containing civilized and half-civilized Indians, as well as blanket savages, will attract many adventurers, both white and black; and the outcome of all the races thus commingled, if ultimately ever to be individually or col-lectively incorporated into our system of self-government, would ap-pear to demand much educational discipline and care from that national source of authority which has had and must hereafter have most to do in guiding their footsteps and in controlling their destiny. But who will say that national duty compels us to educate children of savages and then deny all such duty to children of our own peo-ple? Must the latter become barbarians before we can offer any help?

We have also some four or five million of colored people, just released from the degradation of slavery, suddenly intrusted with all the political power wielded by any equal number of citizens wherever they may be, and equally eligible to the highest positions in offices of trust and honor. Freedmen, by emancipation and the right of suffrage, have reached Aristotle's definition of men, and have become "political animals," but without education their ignorance is likely to be immortal. Can they be expected at once and inflexibly to be immortal. Can they be expected at once and inflexibly to act wisely and always to escape the lead of selfish and designing demagogues? May they not misunderstand their rights or fail to comprehend their duties, and therefore ignorantly compromise the welfare or the honor of their States? Would they be so much exposed to such perils if they possessed merely the education which would enable them to read, and thus to acquire some conception of the public judgment upon measures affecting the interests and the good name of their people?

There is no question that the African race on this continent can by honest labor maintain themselves in comfort without bartering their manhood or their votes at every election. Nor is there any question that they can be taught so much as not to be cheated; but they need to be taught to feel contempt for whatever is base, and how not to cheat themselves. They should be made to comprehend that duties go hand in hand with privileges, and that self-restraint makes liberty possible. They may require our aid to escape from the evils of their previous condition of servitude, and to make their freedom to be hailed as a blessing by themselves and by mankind. They cer-tainly need that education which will fit some portion of their race to be teachers among their own people. The young fellows of promising parts among them should be helped to show "life worth living." They need extensive primary and technical education, in order that they may to a larger extent find employment in many useful branches of industry beyond "the shovel and the hoe," and in the places where

That the prolific colored race, if not exiled or ostracized by relent-less fate, will ultimately make contributions to music, literature, ora-tory, and many of the arts which Americans will not be loth to claim, can hardly be doubted. They assuredly appear more likely to rise in the world than did our rude British ancestors at the time when their home was first invaded by Cæsar's Roman legions. Should the nation ever be involved in a great contest with a hostile power, though such a contest may now seem afar off, the colored race will be expected to bravely contribute to the defense of their country. There is hardly a man of them that would not say,

Let me bear My part of danger with an equal share.

We can afford to be generous, even chivalrous, as well as just, and give them a chance and a home that will win their hearts and open their way to increased usefulness and respectability. They have never had the means, and have not now, to educate themselves. On our part their education is not charity, but a debt overdue.

The great masses of mankind are employed in agriculture and the mechanic arts, and the most enlightened nations are beginning to furnish higher instruction for these long-neglected masses. Much progress has been made within a few years by Great Britain in common-school education. In England and Wales since 1870 the education of children between the ages of five and thirteen has been made com-pulsory, and the number of school children who can be accommo-dated with elementary instruction has been increased from 2.215,235 in 1870, to 4,505,818 in 1878. The annual parliamentary grants to primary schools, which in 1840 amounted to only $150,000, hardly a tithe of the expenditure of one of our smallest States, rose in 1879 to

Our people have to meet a world-wide competition and our most energetic and persistent rivals, bone of our bone and flesh of our flesh, are the people of Great Britain. There, the most aristocratic government in the world is promptly educating their people in order not only to obtain the best results from even a limited suffrage, but to increase their productive power. At the same time many of her indigent and illiterate population, with stomachs even more neglected than their brains, come or are sent here to better their means of subthan their brains, come or are sent here to better their means of subsistence, a process as will be seen which is calculated to elevate the winnowed condition of their people who remain at home as much as it is to depress the average of our own.

In most of the countries of Europe education has become general. The educated citizen is found to be more valuable in Church and State and in all fields of human endeavor than the unlettered barbarian. and in an heids of human endeavor than the unlettered barbarian. Even in Turkey some regard is paid to primary schools, and only perhaps in Russia and Spain can it be said that the major part of the population is without education. In France the schools are now under the control of the government, and are slowly advancing; but the loss of Alsace and Lorraine, the most highly educated portion of France, left in 1872 over 30 per cent. of the French population between the ages of six and sixty unable to even read or write. If that number could be speedily diminished is there any doubt that the stability and career of the present Republic of France would be

Education in Prussia, now the power most to be dreaded by her enemies, is general and compulsory. The higher education afforded by universities is also liberally maintained and administered by the

The whole is conducted under a most comprehensive system, possibly unequaled theoretically elsewhere, though many of its branches, so evidently fruitful, have been and will be here established and mainso evidently fraitful, have been and will be here established and maintained by the colleges proposed to be further slenderly aided by the present bill. It is, perhaps, a marvel that the German people, once described by Tacitus and Cæsar as without cities, to whom the gods had denied silver and gold; who staked their liberties and persons upon the throw of dice; who were mentioned as rude barbarians clothed in the furs of wild beasts, and the same people who, even so lately as in 1805, were crushed by a single battle with Napoleon, should now be able to take the lead among foremost nations in educational institutions. Prussia provides schools, seminaries, colleges, and universities from which none of her people are excluded. By its and universities, from which none of her people are excluded. By its fruits must the system be judged. It was not Bismarck alone—the statesman with the big dog by his side—that welded Germany together and pushed it se prominently before the world in literature and the sciences, in industrial arts and in war, but it was the educated and the sciences, in industrial arts and in war, but it was the educated people, of whom he has been the educated leader, that furnished the forces which made their and his triumphs possible. The emperor rules because the people have had national confidence in his minister and in themselves. There has been no enormous waste and loss of force through illiteracy. Each man has been trained to do his best, and Germany now steps forth a leader among European nations.

A striking contrast is presented by Spain, holding the position of a first-class power two centuries ago, fruitful in heroes and poets, and now of even less importance and less distinction than some of her former colonies. The prestige of her wealth in the precious metals and of her galleons and armadas on the sea has departed; the daring spirit of Columbus and Cortes is dead; no new Cervantes appears; but her illiteracy is rank and robust, and the glory of her bull-fights is perennial and unapproachable. At the last general census, in a population of 16,301,851, only 715,906 women and 2,414,015 men were able to read and write. Is it wonderful that they have small share in modern literature and science, little trade or commerce, few railroads, read and write. Is it wonderful that they have small share in modern literature and science, little trade or commerce, few railroads, meager industrial pursuits, and abundant debts, wars, and revolutions? The proud people of beautiful Spain will some day do much better, and then the harsh critic will not say, "Europe ends at the Pyrenees, and there Africa begins."

The liberal spirit of our institutions and the inherent difficulties of our position, with all the problems of our bustling population, white and black, red and yellow, unsolved, will not permit us to disregard the subject of general education, which is now receiving foremost attention among leading nations, and of all subjects most concerns the life of our people, their self-respect, and their influence upon coming generations of mankind.

It may be said that each State should bear its own proper burdens; and while that may be true, it does not relieve any State from the just obligations arising from the common welfare or from any extrajust obligations arising from the common welfare or from any extraordinary exigencies of the nation. The magnitude of these burdens—large and onerous at any time—has been largely augmented by national action and by national necessities; and States which may now seem to bear an excessive proportion are not exclusively interested in measures of relief. All persons born or naturalized in the United States are now citizens of the United States, and of any State wherein they reside. They may change their residence at will; their privileges and immunities cannot be abridged, nor their right to vote denied, go where they will; they are as much a part of the controlling power of the General Government as of that of the States.

The citizens of all the States furnish judges and other officers of the United States—for Ohio does not furnish them all—and elect Senators and Representatives in Congress to conduct the affoirs of the nation; and the nation therefore becomes directly interested in the intelligence and virtue of the masses who are called upon periodically to determine who shall be intrusted as their Senators and Representatives to guide and support the destinies of our popular form of govatives to guide and support the destinies of our popular form of government. The nation must as much depend for its vitality, progress, and eminence upon the political wisdom and moral integrity of the people as do any of its component parts. The President is an officer of not less dignity and importance than a governor of a State, and the Congress of the United States deserves to be reckoned not less than the equal of State Legislatures, and all are equally dependent upon popular suffrage. That being universal, education must be made co-extensive. The States are not hostile to, but have largely asked for, this measure, and because the National Government is as dear to the common people as any State government. The larger must include the less. must include the less

The perpetuity of our free institutions, as well as the national prosperity and happiness of the people, can be best promoted by promoting the instruction and knowledge of the rising generation. Is it not manifest that of all the world the United States can least afford to neglect the general and thorough culture of its people? stances have made this question at the present moment of the very gravest urgency. If we are in large measure what our fathers have made us, the next generation will be sure to be more or less fashioned by those who to-day provide and direct our systems of education. It is not enough that we have an immense territory or an immense population. bountiful, should be the equal in productive power of any other acre or any other man. It is not enough that, with a population of nearly fifty million, only about twenty-five thousand students annually find their way through any and all of the old literary colleges. It seems obvious that both colleges and common-schools require the earnest attention and the most precious resources of all the States, as well as of the General Government. Without mulartaking the estimates as well as of the General Government. Without undertaking the entire control of the general subject, Congress may yet legitimately make a contribution so emphatic that no State will falter in generous co-operation. The light of the nation, as that of the sun among planetary states, should break forth as the greater morning light to rule the day.

The constitutional power to donate public lands or their proceeds for educational purposes appears to have been long ago well settled by systematic appropriations amounting to more than one hundred and forty million acres to new States, or one-sixteenth part of all the national domain within their boundaries; and many of these States have large permanent funds from this source which now serve to supersede or to diminish local taxation for the support of common-schools and universities. No paternal endowment could be more far-reaching than this common bounty to the new States. The old States have found their compensation for this great liberality, in the general wel-fare and unexampled advancement of the junior States. If we may properly make a contribution to the educational resources of a part of the States, surely its propriety will not be disputed when extended to all.

The Constitution confers upon Congress the sole "power to dispose The Constitution confers upon Congress the sole "power to dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory or other property belonging to the United States." This is not an incidental or implied authority, but a direct and explicit grant of power, and it is barely just and equitable that property belonging to all should be disposed of, after the recognized needs of the new States have been liberally anticipated, for the benefit of all the States. In the deed of cession of lands by Virginia, a State which followed the noble example of New York, it was provided:

That the lands within the territory so coded to the United States and not re-

That the lands within the territory so ceded to the United States, and not reserved for or appropriated to any of the before-mentioned purposes, or disposed of in bounties to the officers and soldiers of the American Army, shall be considered as a common fund for the use and benefit of such of the United States as have become or shall become members of the confederation, or Federal alliance, of the United States (Virginia inclusive) according to their usual respective proportions of the general charge and expenditure, and shall be faithfully and bona fide disposed of for that purpose, and for no other purpose whatever.

If this condition had not been made it would seem like a gross misapplication of funds arising from the public lands, whether acquired by gift, purchase, or conquest, to devote them to any purpose less general than for the use and benefit of all the owners. The Constitution is in strict harmony with the Virginia conditional obligations, and Congress must dispose of the lands and make all needful rules and regulations in strict accordance therewith. In no other way can even Virginia obtain its proportionate share; and that State or any other is not less entitled to be included in the disposal of these lands than inchoate States or Territories, like Utah, Dakota, and

Nor was the subject of education slumbering even in those early days, when Washington and Jefferson were prominent friends of both schools and universities, holding them to be indispensable to the success of our American political institutions. The celebrated ordinance of 1787 proclaimed that "schools and the means of education shall forever be encouraged." This was an ordinance of the whole country, reaffirmed in 1789 by Congress after the adoption of the Constitution, and its obligations must be redeemed by the authority of the whole country, with the proceeds of the territory and property originally dedicated to this high purpose. Schools and the means of education can thus, and only thus, be forever encouraged. Nor was the subject of education slumbering even in those early

By what other instrumentalities can the public welfare be so surely and largely promoted? What better guarantee can be given to the several States of a republican form of government? Where will be found a stronger custodian of public liberty?

There may be some parties who, through technical refinements, would limit the whole operations of government to the punishment of crime, to levying and collecting taxes, to declaring war and raising and supporting armies, and other kindred subjects; but would include nothing which tends to elevate man above the level of useful animals, or above very common automatic machines. That was not the government foreshadowed by the Declaration of Independence, and not the government of the Constitution founded on the will of the people; nor was it the government ordained and established to the people; nor was it the government ordained and established to secure the blessings of liberty, with authority to exercise all the granted and indispensable functions that ordinarily adorn and preserve nations, or that, according to the home-bred understandings of the people, under the letter and spirit of our organic law, belong to their legitimate sovereignty.

For authority to dispose of the public lands for educational purposes we are not, as has been shown, driven to seek any power not expressly granted to Congress. At the same time it may not be improper to show that such a disposal is not in conflict with any part of the Constitution, but is in harmony with the interpretation early and constantly given to it by its founders. The general scope and power of the Constitution comes to us in broad and general terms, not being confined to powers expressly granted, as were those of the old confederation, but upon the completion of its framework vigor and life was implanted into all its parts by the extreme discretion and unlimited supplemental power conferred upon Congress—

To make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution the foregoing powers, and all other powers vested by the Constitution in the Government of the United States, or in any department or officer thereof.

The vested powers, therefore, are not barren but fruitful powers. Among the principles and declared purposes of our Government President Madison enumerated the following:

To promote, by authorized means, improvements friendly to agriculture, to manufactures, and to external as well as internal commerce; to favor in like manner the advancement of science and the diffusion of information as the best aliment to true liberty.

In the farewell address of Washington he urges his countrymen to "promote, then, as an object of primary importance, institutions for the general diffusion of knowledge." The words of Washington and Madison were revered when uttered, and the lapse of time has made them precious as legacies of political gospel.

Shall the great, peerless experiment of man's self-government be tested by a national policy of indifferentism as to whether the voting population shall have the means of improvement and intellectual advancement, or take the chances of remediless illiteracy? Shall we have no institutions to which farmers and mechanics may resort for such scientific and technical knowledge as may be related to their pursuits, and such as gives the silver lining to the clouds of toil?

No one objects to the schools at West Point and Annapolis for the education of our military and naval officers—we are indeed very proud of them; but is that all we can do? After that must we confine national contributions to tree culture and fish culture? I would not underrate the importance of eradicating the cotton-worm or the Colorado beetle; but is it less important to eradicate the unlettered ignorance of millions of freedmen?

A government that aspires to be the high school or model among all free nations should not confess that it has no power, directly or indirectly, to aid in schooling its own children. The Signal Office is not only a great honor, but most useful to the country; but it will not be pretended that daily reports of what the weather is to be can be greater honor or more useful than would be schools and colleges that would give some assurance of what coming generations are to

The question which we have to face is, Shall the republican Government of the United States, alone among the enlightened governments of mankind, in spite of its lofty pretensions, shirk all responsibility as to the education of its people?

The measure before us stands on a noble principle, wholly impregnable, if human self-government rests upon popular intelligence—a principle which neither the republican nor the democratic party will be willing to repudiate so long as each claims to be the champion of self-government and of the common people; and, if the measure is worthy of adoption, it is worthy to be adopted with the least possible delay.

Mr. BROWN

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, I have listened with a great deal of Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, I have listened with a great deal of pleasure to the able and eloquent argument made by the honorable Senator from Vermont [Mr. Morrill] in favor of the passage of the bill now before the Senate. We live under a republican form of government. The stability of that government depends, in my opinion, upon the virtue and intelligence of the people of the United States. We are exposed all the time to tests of the permanency and stability of this form of government. When we had a sparse population of but a few millions scattered over a very large territory, with no large masses of people congregated together in great cities or centers, we were in a condition better adapted to the maintenance of republican government than we shall be when we have a hundred millions of population crowded in the centers and upon the older settled portions of our territory, where large masses can congregate upon short notice. In that condition, if we have large masses of ignorance, understanding nothing about the form or principles of the government, we have little to expect in the future. It becomes, therefore, important that we should educate the mass of the American people if we expect to perpetuate American institutions.

Not only is this true so far as it relates to the Government, but the public interest requires that we have the whole intellect of the people public interest requires that we have the whole intellect of the people developed and cultivated for the purpose of building up and improving society. Neither the intellect of this country nor of any other country is confined to children born of the nobility, the aristocracy, or the wealthy classes. Neither Disraeli nor Gladstone was born of the nobility, and yet to-day the destinies of England and of the British Empire are controlled by the intellect of these two competitors. Though born neither of the nobility nor of the royal family, they say what the Crown shall do, what the nobility shall do, and what the Commons shall do.

So it is in this Government. The intellect of the people of this country is not confined to the sons of the aristocracy or the wealthy classes. George Washington was a surveyor; Benjamin Franklin was a printer; Roger Sherman, I believe, was a shoemaker; Andrew Jackson was a penniless orphan; Henry Clay was a mill-boy; Daniel Webster was the son of poor parentage; Andrew Johnson was a tailor, who when married could neither read nor write; his wife taught him to read; he was self-educated and self-made; General Grant was a tanner; the great commoner, Alexander H. Stephens, was a poor orphan boy; Abraham Lincoln split rails and labored in his youth with his hands for his living; and I believe the President elect, General Garfield, was born of poor parentage.

with his hands for his living; and I believe the President elect, General Garfield, was born of poor parentage.

Then it is true that in this country as well as in every other the intellect of the country is not confined to the sons of the wealthier or the ruling classes; and I maintain that the State has a right to have the intellect of the whole country developed out of the mass of the wealth of the country and brought into action for the protection of society and the building up and development of the country. How can this be done? Only by the education of the children of all classes of society. I have no doubt many a man has lived in the United States of intellect as grand as those I have mentioned who has died unknown to fame. Why so? Because no circumstance has led to the first stage of development that has made the person himself conscious of his own powers. That bright boy has never been sent to scious of his own powers. That bright boy has never been sent to school; he has never been taught even the first rudiments of a common education; he has been confined to labor in the backwoods, in the factory, in the shop, or in the mines, and while he may have been regarded there as one of the most intellectual of his comrades, there has been no development that showed his powers to either him or them or that gave the country the benefit of those powers.

Educate the whole mass of the people and you have the benefit of all this power. Let me illustrate. The honorable Senator who has just taken his seat was too modest to refer to it because he is from New England, but we find a noted example there. When the Puritans, as we term them, landed in this country and located themselves on the bleak shores of New England, they commenced building up society by the organization of churches and the building of houses of worship, and they located the school-house near the church. They established a system of common schools that was intended to embrace the whole population and to give every child an opportunity to have a common education. They commenced early, and laid deep the foundations of their universities and colleges. The result has the foundations of their universities and colleges. The result has been that they have endowed and built up colleges of a very high order, where immense numbers of the young men of this country

Go out through the mighty West and over the Territories to the Pacific Ocean, and what do you find? Where was the member of Congress or the Senator in this Hall educated? Usually at a New England college. Where was the minister of religion, or the village doctor, or the lawyer, or the local politician educated? Most of them in the New England colleges. Thus they carried New England ideas with them all through the West, which have controlled in the organization of society and the legislation of States, and in that way New England may be said to have dictated laws to the continent. Her England may be said to have dictated laws to the continent. ideas, taught to the youths that have gone out West and scattered all over this broad land, have been carried along and ingrafted upon society, and we are obliged to admit that they have done a great deal in controlling the destinies of the country.

It was not only so with New England; but there is another very noted example worthy of our attention. I refer to the Kingdom of Prussia. At the time Napoleon the First led his armies over Europe like an avalanche and swept down kingdoms and empires before him Prussia was a third-class power, devastated by the ravages of war. At the end of the great struggle, in making preparations to build up society, she early took into account the importance of educating the whole mass of her people. She endowed universities liberally; she established a system of public schools throughout the entire kingdom, and she not only by her legislation from time to time made provision for the education of all her children, but she made their education compulsory. She permits no father who has been the means of bringing offspring into society to say, "I will not permit my child to be educated; I will not send him to school." She says, "The State has an interest in it, and it shall be done." The law requires the parent to send the son, and then the State gives him the rudiments of an education. He must have it: the good of society requires it; the law compels it.

How did it work? From a third-rate power Prussia rose rapidly to a second-rate power; and within the last few years the test of strength came between the Kingdom of Prussia and the Empire set up by Napoleon, when his successor, a wise statesman, was upon the throne. What was the result? That little third-rate kingdom, overrun by Napoleon the First, had risen to be a power in Europe, and when the struggle came Prussia swept over France, dethroned and when the struggle came Prussia swept over France, dethroned the monarch, the successor to Napoleon the First, and dictated terms to France upon her own soil. Why was it so? It may be said she had abler generals; that her armies were better handled. There was another reason: she had a better educated people. Her whole people were educated. Every man felt an individuality in what he was doing, and then she had all the best intellects of the kingdom educated to fill the different places where it was necessary to have ability. A government that educates all her brightest intellect has greatly the advantage of one that educates only that portion of her intellect that advantage of one that educates only that portion of her intellect that is born in the wealthier and higher classes of society.

Under the Prussian system, as I understand it, if a boy shows great brightness and is intellectually adapted with proper training to the position of a professor of chemistry, he is carried through the university, and he is fully developed and educated in that department of science. If another shows great talent for the military, he is passed through the military department; and if he has a master mind, he is made a master of the military profession; and so in each department. Therefore, when Prussia called upon her sons to rally under her banner she had her ablest intellects cultivated in their respective positions, and they were ready to step forward and fill each place with a first-class man. This was not so with the French. They have colleges and universities of the highest order; they have education of the highest order; but they have not the whole mass educated as they are in Prussia. There may have been some of the ablest generals by nature and some of the most useful men that the army could have required in other positions who were in the ranks, whose power was required in other positions who were in the ranks, whose power was not known because they had not been developed by education, and therefore the State lost the benefit of their mental powers. I say the State has the right to the aid of all the mental power of its people,

State has the right to the aid of all the mental power of its people, and it can have it in no other way than by the education of all the masses of the people of the State. And this should be done by the aid, as far as necessary, of all the wealth of the State.

Take our own country to-day. In the backwoods, among the mountains, peradventure away out among the Rocky Mountains, or down in the wire-grass of the South, there is many a bright-eyed boy, who has intellect of the highest order, in one of the humblest cottages or cabins of the land. And there if neglected he may stay and work his way through life with no opportunity to show the power he possesses. But send him to the common schools and let the rough he his way through life with no opportunity to show the power he possesses. But send him to the common schools, and let the rough be knocked off that diamond till it begins to glitter, and you cannot then stop him. He will go forward, and the more the diamond is polished the brighter it will sparkle, till it shines out in all its brilliant splendor and magnificence. But this could not have been done without education enough to show what was in the boy. Therefore, without the education of the mass of the people and of the whole people you cannot have the benefit of the whole intellect of the country brought to bear in the building up of society and the development of the resources and power of the state.

But there is another good reason, Mr. President, why those who come from my section of the Union should advocate this measure. The honorable Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] referred to the fact of the large illiteracy of the people of the United States. He did not carry it out and show to what States or sections this illitdid not carry it out and show to what States or sections this illiteracy applies most. I regret to say it is from my own section. There are several reasons why it is so. Under our old system of society we looked more to the education of the ruling class than we did to the education of the whole mass. In other words, we did not, as they did in New England, furnish the money to establish systems of public schools where all the children could be educated, but we educated are children though the means of mixture schools where all the our children through the means of private schools, where only the wealthier classes and those who were well-to-do could send their children. Consequently there was a larger number of illiterate persons other State that had a properly endowed public-school system.

But this was not all. We had there a large slave population, amounting in round numbers to four millions at the time they were emancipated. Under our system as long as we kept and used them as slaves it was regarded unsafe to educate them. Therefore their education was neglected, and it was a very hazardous experiment when they were made citizens without education.

The honorable Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. Burnside] referred to the condition of the Scotch people at a time when they were not educated, and told us how degraded they were and how they were looked down upon, and to the elevation that they afterward attained when by a common-school system they were educated up to a high point.

Let me follow his example and trace something of the history of another race of people. Take the African race, and go back two and a half centuries, and where were they and what were they? They were heathens; they lived on the continent of Africa in a state of the wildest ignorance and most savage harberity. The different tribes wildest ignorance and most savage barbarity. The different tribes engaged from time to time in warfare, and in many instances the rule was indiscriminate slaughter; but if they took prisoners they were spared out of no mercy to the prisoner, but because he was valuable to them to be sold as a slave. At the period when this country was first settled those wars were raging on the continent of Africa, and it was then considered, not only by the tribes themselves but by Old England and New England, that they were proper persons to be made slaves. Companies were organized for the purpose of engaging in the importation and traffic, and it is said that the reigning queen and afterward the kings of England owned stock in those companies. In that day it was believed to be right.

I do not mention this subject now with a view of bringing up any mooted question about slavery, but I am speaking of the history of the negro. All then considered slavery was right. The negroes were imported into this country as slaves and sold into slavery from British vessels and the vessels of New England. They were sold to us in the South. We bought them, we believed it was right to buy them, and they believed it was right to sell them. In a word, at that time the negro was considered as only fit to be a slave, and fit for nothing else, and he occupied a much more degraded position than the Scotch did at the time referred to by the honorable Senator from Rhode Island.

And just here permit me to refer to a chapter in the history of my own State. The original charter of the colony of Georgia made it a free State, and the trustees for a number of years persisted in their refusal to permit negro slavery or rum to be brought into the colony. Finally it was discovered that the adjoining colony of South Carolina and other southern colonies that had adopted slavery were more prosperous than that of Georgia, and the people from the other colonies refused to emigrate to Georgia and stay there unless they were permitted to carry their slaves with them. About that period in our history, John Wesley and George Whitfield, the two great divines who under Providence were the founders of Methodism, and who planted the shape of the same statement of the shape of the same statement of the same st planted the church on our soil, associated themselves with the colony at Savannah, and Whitfield established his orphan asylum, which was intended to be and was in fact a noble charity. After considerable effort to sustain it, he came to the conclusion that it was his true interest to purchase a plantation and slaves in the colony of South Carolina, which he did, and which he declared did much to enable him to maintain his asylum. And this great divine became one of the ablest and most zealous advocates for the establishment of slavery in the colony of Georgia. Finally the pressure upon the trustees became so great that they yielded, and slavery was permitted and soon became an established institution. I simply mention this to show that in my own State slavery was prohibited by law at a time when the people of the mother country and of New England were importing slaves under the sanction of law without a question that the traffic was legitimate.

Slavery was found to be unprofitable in New England and the Middle States, and, like every other traffic, it was carried where the Middle States, and, like every other traffic, it was carried where the commodity was most needed and would pay best. Consequently the slaves were sold by the ancestors of the people of New England and the Middle States to our ancestors in the South, and the money obtained for them was doubtless invested in building up your towns, your factories, and your commerce. At that time, however, neither section believed that the other was doing wrong in engaging in the importation, the traffic, or the use of slaves. Thus matters passed for a long period. Slavery was recognized by all, and the savages imported as slaves were trained here in the practices and ideas of civilization till they were very much elevated in the scale of Christian civilization before slavery was abolished. They were taught not only the principles of civilization but the principles of Christianity.

I well recollect, years ago, before the war between the States, in one of the assemblages of the Presbyterian Church in New York, the Rev. Dr. Stiles used in substance this noted expression, "the south-Rev. Dr. Stiles used in substance this noted expression, "the southern church holds up to the gaze of heaven and earth more converted heathens (referring to our slaves) than can be shown in heathen lands as the result of the labors of all the missionaries of all the Protestant churches combined." Yes, of this four million people we held up a large number who were converted to Christianity and reclaimed to civilization. In other words, Providence seems to have had a great design in this matter. They were brought here as slaves; indeed they were prisoners and slaves at home and sold as such by their own people. We used them as slaves, and we believed we had the right so to do. And while they were going through this long training of slavery they were improving all the time intellectually and morally. But the time came when the same overruling Providence that permitted them to be brought here as slaves determined in His divine decrees that they should no longer be slaves. And who in His divine decrees that they should no longer be slaves. And who can say that it is not the design of Providence that the descendants of those who by the rulers of Africa were sold into slavery, improved and elevated by slavery till they were fit for freedom, may not be the instruments in the hand of God in redeeming Africa from the darkness and thralldom in which she is now shrouded, and in bringing her to the marvelous light of Christian civilization?

But let us notice further the remarkable history of this people.

The two sections of the Union were arrayed in hostility against each other on the subject of slavery. If you of the North had proposed to tax yourselves and pay us for the slaves, in the then temper we would not have agreed to accept it. We would have said, "We have constitutional guarantees that we shall hold them, and you must not interfere." On the other hand, if it had been proposed to tax the people of the United States to pay for them and liberate them the people would have submitted to no such taxation. Therefore that was impossible. The passions and prejudices on both sides of the line were aroused into active play. There was but one way to eradicate slavery, and that was to tear it out by the roots; and as Providence was working out a great problem, we were plunged into the war between the States, and the institution was staked upon the result. Neither side contemplated abolition at the commencement, but as Providence designed it, the termination of the struggle was the abolition of slavery.

Here, then, was another step taken in the wonderful development in connection with this race. From having been prisoners of heads of tribes in Africa and sold by their own people into slavery, and from having gone through a long period of servitude, the time had come when Providence determined they should no longer be slaves. But as our friends of New England and the Northern States had engaged in the importation of them and had sold them to us, and made profit by it, and as we had used slavery and made profit by it, and no section could charge that another was alone responsible, every section and every part of the Union had to bleed for it, and we all had to bear burdens to get rid of it. But we are rid of it.

When the Constitution of the United States was formed slavery

When the Constitution of the United States was formed slavery was not only tolerated and provision made for the surrendering up of fugitive slaves to the owner on requisition, but at that time the States were not ready to cut off the importation; those engaged in the traffic wanted to make more money out of it. They were unwilling to give it up, and it was insisted upon and carried, and incorporated into the Constitution that the importation should not be abolished prior to the year 1808. So guarded were those who framed the Constitution on that point that in making provision for its own amendment, it is expressly provided that that clause shall not be amended prior to 1808. Then negroes were slaves, and slaves were property, and that property was guaranteed to us by the Constitution of the United States.

But when we went into the struggle of 1861 we were well aware that if we failed we hazarded our title to our slaves, and that abolition was a possibility. At the end of the struggle, when we surrendered our armies and the then President of the United States adopted a policy without consulting Congress of reconstructing the Union, he required us to call conventions in the Southern States; and the Congress having submitted to the States the thirteenth constitutional amendment, we adopted it. There was no contest made over it in the South. The Southern States, as well as the Northern and Western States, agreed at the end of the struggle that slavery should be abolished; and we put into the Constitution a provision that forever guaranteed the abolition. Then the negro had taken one more step. From a slave he was a freedman without the rights of a citi-

Then followed a proposition by Congress to the States to adopt the fourteenth amendment. That amendment declared him to be a citizen. In other words, it declared all persons born or naturalized in the United States to be citizens of the United States and of the State wherein they reside. Then the negro had made one more advance step. From being a freedman he was now a citizen. But it was soon found that this was not enough. Very grave questions were raised as to whether a race who had been slaves and thus freed and made citizens were entitled to all the rights of the original citizens of this country; in other words, whether they had the right to vote and hold office; and Congress had to take one more step. That step was to propose the fifteenth constitutional amendment, which guaranteed to the race the right to vote. Then the negro advanced one further step. From being a citizen without rights as to voting and holding office he was made a citizen free and independent, with all the rights of any other citizen of the United States. Of course, I mean legal rights. He was made the legal equal of any and every other citizen of this Union. Social rights must take care of themselves; neither the Congress nor any other governmental power can regulate them. But all his legal rights were guaranteed. Then what was the status? Here are four million persons, formerly slaves, then freedmen, then citizens without all the rights of citzenship, then full-fledged citizens with every right of the citizen, turned loose among us, without education, incorporated into society as part of the citizens of the United States and of the States in which they lived.

citizens without all the rights of citzenship, then full-fledged citizens with every right of the citizen, turned loose among us, without education, incorporated into society as part of the citizens of the United States and of the States in which they lived.

A grave problem arises here for solution. They must be educated; but we are not able to educate them. Why not? We claimed to be a wealthy people before the war. So we were; but we lost, according to the best estimates, about $2,000,000,000 in the value of our slaves. It was that much gold value, our own under the Constitution of the United States, which we lost by the war, and it was gone forever. That impoverished us to that extent, and it was a very heavy draught. Then we had to support the confederate armies for four years, without a dollar of help, out of our substance. True, we issued confederate bonds and notes; they were paid out for our substance, but at the end of the war they were repudiated and they became as ashes in our hands. We lost, then, not only two billions in slaves, but we lost about two billions more in the support of our armies for four years. Then we lost immense amounts in the destruction of property by the armies outside of what was necessary to feed and clothe them.

But that was not all. At the end of the struggle we had to return to the Union and resume our position and take upon ourselves our just proportion, according to our means, of the war debt contracted by the Government in the suppression of what is known as the rebellion. Then, I say, with these draughts upon us we are not able to educate these four millions of people that were turned loose among us. As I have already stated, during the period of slavery it was not our policy to educate them; it was incompatible, as we thought, with the relation existing between the two races. Now that they are citizens we all agree that it is our policy to educate them. As they are citizens, let us make them the best citizens we can. I am glad to see that they show a strong disposition to do everything in their power for the education of their children.

Then I say the provision of the bill that gives for ten years at least the advantage to the States where there is most illiteracy is a just and a wise provision, and I thank the Senators from New England and the other wealthier States for the sense of justice they exhibit in coming forward and showing a willingness to aid in the education of these people. We all agree that it is important that they be educated. You will agree with me that we in the Southern States are not now able to educate them, and our own children. They were set free as a necessity of the Union. You so regarded it. Then it is proper that the Union should come forward, and with its vast resources aid in their education, and I am glad to see a movement made that leads in their education, that looks in that direction.

I confess I have better hopes for the race for the future than I had when emancipation took place. They have shown a capacity to receive education, and a disposition to elevate themselves that is exceedingly gratifying, not only to me, but to every right-thinking southern man; and I wish you to understand that we harbor no hostility to the race in the South. There are many reasons why we should not, no good reasons why we should. They were raised with us; they played with us as children. Under the slavery system the relations were kind. When the war came on it was supposed by many that they would rise in insurrection and soon disband our armies. They at no time ever behaved with more loyalty to us, or with more propriety. Since the end of the war, when, as we thought, you very unwisely gave them the ballot, they have exercised the rights of freemen with a moderation that probably no other race would have done. Therefore I say it is our duty in the South especially, and I think yours in the North as well, to encourage them, and, as they are now citizens, to elevate them and make them the best citizens possible.

But, as I stated a while ago, I have given you a reason why there is such a vast preponderance of illiteracy now in our section. It is not only due to the fact that we did not have the common-school systems in the Southern States prior to emancipation, but that the four millions of freedmen were added to our population as citizens there without education. Then we must appeal to you not only now but in future to be liberal toward the South in aiding in the education of these people. I know there have been complaints that they may have been cheated in some instances at the ballot-box. Ignorance may be cheated anywhere. Doubtless, Senators, you have seen the more ignorant class cheated in your own States. If you would guard against this effectually in the future, educate them; teach them to know their rights, and, knowing them, they will maintain them.

It is necessary to educate them, furthermore, for the reason that they do not now understand, as ignorance does not anywhere understand, the theory and form and spirit of our Government. Education will enable them to understand it. We must give it to them. We must teach them what is the nature of the Government, what are the principles of the Constitution of the United States, and, now that we all agree that it is to be perpetual in future, we must teach them to love the Union and to be ready to stand by and defend it, and I believe the Senators from New England will agree with me when I say we must teach them also that the Union is a union of States, and that we must not destroy the States. When the States are destroyed there is no longer the Union of our fathers. As the Union is to be indissoluble, the States which form the Union, and without which it cannot be maintained, must forever remain indestructible, and they must continue in the exercise of all the reserved rights which they now possess under the Constitution as it stands, with the amendments adopted by the States.

Therefore, it is necessary to teach all citizens, white and colored, and to teach their children, the importance of maintaining republican institutions in the purity in which they originally came from the hands of the framers of our Constitution, and to maintain the ballot-box in its purity also. I announced in my own State to the electors who were to vote on my case the next day, that I was for a free ballot and a fair count. I want to see the day come when that will be so everywhere, not only in Louisiana, South Carolina, Florida, and Georgia, but in New York, Massachusetts, Ohio, and Indiana as well. Let it be so everywhere. Let us educate our people, white and colored, up to the point where they understand the proper use of the ballot; then let it be free to all, and let the ballots be fairly counted when deposited. Having referred to the struggle that brought about the present state of things, I will add that whatever

I may have thought of the terms you dictated to us, I have accepted them, and I have all the while advocated carrying them out in letter and in spirit in good faith, in practice as well as in theory. Whenever the whole mass of the people are educated there is no danger in doing this. Until they are educated there will be impositions practiced upon ignorance in every section of this country, and probably in every State in the Union.

The honorable Senator from Vermont referred to the great good that was being done by the appropriation made in 1862 of portions of the public land to establish agricultural and mechanical colleges in the different States. I can bear testimony that in my own State that appropriation has been most beneficial. It was accepted by our State, the land scrip sold, and the money was delivered to the trustees of the State University, and they connected with our university a college of agriculture and the mechanic arts, which has been well conducted and resulted in great good; but there were certain sections of our State not well content with the centralization of it, as they termed it, in one locality, and it was asked that it be distributed more justly between the different sections of the State. The trustees of the university agreed that they would endow a branch college at Dahlonega in the building of the old United States mint that Con-Dahlonega in the building of the old United States mint that Congress donated for the purpose of a school, and they gave $2,000 a year of the interest derived from the fund toward its support. Since then it has been carried up to $3,500 per annum and we have established three other branches of the university—one at Milledgeville, one at Cuthbert, and one at Thomasville. Those branches are colleges of a lower grade than the university. They educate girls and boys—we have both sexes there educated—up to the point where they can enter college. For instance, a boy who graduates in one of them can enter the junior class of our State University, and we have at this time about eight hundred pupils in those four branch colleges. They are located eight hundred pupils in those four branch colleges. They are located in sections where they can be easily reached by our people generally. There is a cheap mode of board established there. Mess-halls are resorted to, and it is deemed altogether respectable for a young man to board himself as best he can and go into the schools. The amount of good they are doing is incalculable. At Dahlonega the trustees are authorized, on the proper examination of a young man or young lady in the college, to give a certificate authorizing him or her to teach in the public schools of the State, and at the last commencement there were about civity licensed for teachers. They go out all over our eight hundred pupils in those four branch colleges. They are located were about eighty licensed for teachers. They go out all over our country and teach three months' schools during the vacation. In this way they make some money to enable them to go forward again with their studies. And thus there is a very great amount of good done by that college, and I should very gladly see as large an addition as possible made to its endowment.

If we could have two or three other of these branches in different sections of our State we could add greatly to the present advantages.

Doubtless the same may be true in the other States.

The only real regret I have about this matter is that the fund we shall be able to raise from the proceeds of the sales of the public lands and from the Patent Office fees will be too small to meet the demand; but I trust this is the entering-wedge, and that we may see our way clear in the future, if this works well, to do still more for the cause of education.

I know some objection has been raised on the constitutional ques tion. It has been said that the States alone can take charge of this matter; that the Federal Government has nothing to do with the edu-cation of the people. Well, under the strictest rules of construction of the old State-rights school prior to the war possibly that was so; but we do not live under the Constitution that we lived under then. The amendments made at the termination of the struggle have very greatly enlarged the powers of this Government. Again, I think the constitutional objection cannot apply to this bill, for the reason that it is mainly a proposition to dispose of the proceeds of the public lands, and so far as those proceeds are concerned there never has been lands, and so far as those proceeds are concerned there never has been a time when the Government did not have the right to dispose of them. As far back as 1836 there was a law passed for the distribution of the surplus funds in the Treasury, and in 1841 to distribute the net proceeds of public lands, the Congress recognizing the fact that they belonged to the States. Then in the organization of new States and Territories large amounts of the public domain have been set apart for the use of colleges and schools there, recognizing the power of Congress to use a portion of the land for this purpose.

Then, again, the act of 1862, of which I have been sneaking, which

Then, again, the act of 1862, of which I have been speaking, which appropriates a certain amount of the public lands in aid of agricultural colleges, is another use of the public domain for that purpose which has not been objected to. After all that has been done, why which has not been objected to. After all that has been done, why may we not now appropriate the future proceeds of the public lands and the Patent Office to this sacred purpose?

But I believe there is another provision of the Constitution that may have some bearing here. "The United States shall guarantee to every State in this Union a republican form of government" is the language of the Constitution. If I be right in the position I took in the commencement of this argument, that this Government cannot be perpetuated as a republic without the education of the whole mass of the people, then to appropriate money for the education of the of the people, then to appropriate money for the education of the masses of the people would be a better mode of guaranteeing a republican form of government than to undertake to make a guarantee by the use of the Army and the sword.

I do not think really there is any constitutional difficulty in the way of making this disposition of the public lands for this very important purpose, and it seems to me there is no other possible disposition that can be made of this fund in the future which can result in anything like the benefit to the Government and the people of the United States that must result from the appropriation of it to the United States that must result from the appropriation of it to the purposes of education.

A large proportion of our public domain, which is the property of the people, has been appropriated by Congress to railroad corporations and other purposes, looking to the settlement and development of the Territories. And while I am not prepared to say that this may at the time have been an improper use of a portion of the public lands, it seems to me there can be no doubt that it is better to stop such appropriations in future and apply the proceeds of their sale to the sacred purpose of educating the people. We will in this way establish new guarantees for the perpetuation of the Union, the main-tenance of the rights of the States, and the future peace and prosperity of the whole country. Let us give to the whole mass of our people, in all sections of the Union, the benefit of at least a common-school education; and let us provide, as in the Prussian system, for a higher development of the brightest intellects that may be found in the public schools by such legislation and appropriations as will enable them to prosecute their studies till they have made themselves masters of the particular art or calling for which nature seems to have fitted them.

It may be objected that it costs large sums of money to educate our whole people. I admit it; but it is an investment that pays back a heavy rate of interest. Who is most likely to make money, an educated, enlightened people, or an ignorant, degraded people? Contrast the financial condition of New England with that of Mexico, and tell me which accumulates fastest, an educated, scientific people, or a people who do not enjoy the benefits of education or science. The surest way to make money is to invest large sums of money in the education of our people and the development of the whole intellect of the country.

Then let us lay the foundation of a system which shall be improved and built up, until the whole mass of the American people have the benefits that will soon result from it. This is the surest way to maintain and perpetuate our republican system of government, to develop the vast resources of our country, to encourage and protect the accumulation of wealth, and to transmit the blessings of good government to remotest generations.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, I presume there will be no further action on this bill this evening and I would ask that it be temporarily laid aside in order that we may consider case No. 675 on the Calendar that I called up this morning in the morning hour when the Senator from Vermont took the floor. It will only take a few min-

Mr. MORRILL. There is no objection to laying aside the bill tem-porarily if it be left the unfinished business for to-morrow, to be then disposed of.

Mr. COCKRELL. I propose only to lay the bill aside temporarily, it retaining its place for to-morrow.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I hope it will be generally understood that we shall arrive at a vote on this bill to-morrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. GARLAND in the chair.) The bill will be laid aside temporarily.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to make a suggestion before the order is made laying this bill aside, that if the bill goes over indefinitely it will reach a condition where it will not only encounter any opposition from persons who do not approve of it but also will encounter the opposition of Senators who have other measures in charge and who this short session will be struggling very soon for the attention of the Senate. I desire to ask the honorable Senator from Tennessee who has charge of the bill [Mr. BAILEY] if before laying it aside to-night he cannot secure an understanding of the Senate as to a time when it can be woted upon?

Mr. BAILEY. In reply to the Senator from Massachusetts I will say that the Senator from Rhode Island who has charge of the bill, [Mr. BURNSIDE,] I believe, just made a motion to the Senate that the vote should be taken to-morrow or some named day on the passage of the bill.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I hope the vote will be taken to-morrow before the adjournment. There is no objection to now laying aside the bill temporarily if we can have such an understanding.

Mr. BAILEY. Then I will ask—and I believe the Senator from Rhode Island made the same request—that it be understood that the Rhode Island made the same request—that it be understood that the vote shall be taken to-morrow on the passage of the bill.

Mr. BURNSIDE. At four o'clock.

Mr. BAILEY. That will give ample time to every Senator, whatever may be his views in regard to the policy or expediency of this measure, to express himself to the Senate. I imagine every Senator has already decided in his own mind what his action shall be. If there he no objection I ask that that shall be the agreement. Let there be no objection I ask that that shall be the agreement. Let it be understood that the vote shall be taken to-morrow before the adjournment of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there is no objection, the present order of business will be laid aside informally on the suggestion of the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill for the relief of Samuel A. Lowe.

Mr. MORRILL. I suppose it is the general understanding that a vote will be taken to-morrow at four o'clock on the educational bill. The PRESIDING OFFICER. That will be regarded as the understanding if no objection be made. The question now is on the request of the Senator from Missouri, that the Senate take up the bill named by him.

SAMUEL A. LOWE.

By unanimous consent, the bill (S. No. 364) for the relief of Samuel A. Lowe was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides A. Lowe was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for the payment to Samuel A. Lowe of $4,750 for services rendered and moneys expended by him as clerk of the territorial Legislature of Kansas Territory, and for copying, indexing, marginal-noting, and superintending the printing of the laws of that Territory, in the year 1855, under authority of the Legislative Assembly.

Mr. HARRIS. Is there a report in that case?

Mr. HARRIS. There is a report.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. Harris May 19 1880.

RIS May 19, 1880:

The Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. No. 364) for the relief of Samuel A. Lowe, has carefully considered the same, and submits the following of Samuel A. Lowe, has carefully considered the same, and should the following report:

That on the 30th June, 1854, Kansas was organized as a Territory. The first territorial Legislature, which was elected March 30, 1855, convened at Pawnee, about one hundred and fifty miles west of the western boundary of the State of Missouri, under the proclamation of Governor Reeder, and, after organizing, passed an act removing the seat of government temporarily to Shawnee Manual Labor School, in said Territory; that during the sitting of said Legislative Assembly at Shawnee the memorialist, Samuel A. Lowe, was elected by said Assembly one of the assistant clerks, and afterward, by a concurrent resolution of the house and council, was appointed and employed to copy, make marginal notes, and index the laws of the said Territory which should be enacted at said session of said Assembly.

the laws of the said Territory which should be enacted at said session of said Assembly.

Afterward an act was passed, which became a law, at said session of said territorial Assembly, appointing and authorizing the said memorialist to superintend the publication, arrange the order, and examine and correct the proof-sheets, and to cause all clerical and typographical errors to be corrected; all of which services, it fully and satisfactorily appears, the memorialist performed.

It also further appears that the memorialist was obliged to employ considerable assistance in accomplishing said work, and that in doing so he paid for such aid out of his own funds; that the memorialist, in consequence of the unsettled condition of the Territory and the high prices of labor at that early day in the said Territory, was compelled to pay twelve and a half cents per folio for copying and high prices for all other services; that the laws enacted by said territorial Assembly had to be printed at Saint Louis, Missouri, and the memorialist was compelled to remain in Saint Louis during the publication of the same at large expense, and that he has paid in money from his own pocket, in the faithful discharge of his duties as aforesaid, more money than is asked for in the bill referred to this committee for his relief.

he has paid in money from his own pocket, in the faithful discharge of his duties as aforesaid, more money than is asked for in the bill referred to this committee for his relief.

The laws so copied, corrected, and marginal notes prepared, &c., make a volume of ten hundred and fifty nine pages of printed matter, code size; that the said Lowe has never received any pay or compensation whatever from said Territory, or from the United States, or from any others ource whatever for any of said services.

It also appears, by the proper officers of said Legislative Assembly and by the printer of said laws, that said services were well and faithfully performed by said memorialist; and that they were important services and could not be dispensed with your committee think there can be no doubt.

When this work was completed the appropriation made by Congress to defray the legislative expenses of the Territory was exhausted, and therefore the memorialist was not paid.

In 1856 he applied to the proper Department of the Government to be reimbursed for the money expended and paid for his services, but was informed that the Department had no authority to pay him. He then presented his memorial to Congress, where it has been pending since that time without action, until the third session of the Forty-fifth Congress, when the House Committee on Claims submitted a favorable report, and at the present session the House Committee on Claims has made a favorable report, and at the present session the House Committee on Claims has made a favorable report.

The committee is satisfied that the claim is just and should be paid, and therefore reports the bill back with the recommendation that it pass.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, this is an attempt to induce the fore reports the bill back with the recommendation that it pass.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, this is an attempt to induce the Senate of the United States to pay for the compilation of the bogus statutes, the infamous slave code of the Territory of Kansas. In 1855, on the organization of the Territory, the Legislature assembled. They met at Pawnee, and afterward adjourned to the Shawnee Manual Labor School, where they sat for about forty days, and adopted this volume which I now hold in my hand, popularly known as the "bogus statutes" of the Territory of Kansas. They never had any binding or operative force. And as soon as the free-State men, or the people of the Territory who were entitled to govern it, obtained possession of political power, they repealed these statutes in gross, and burned the volume containing them in a bonfire in the city of Lawrence. the volume containing them in a bonfire in the city of Lawrence. This is, without any exception, sir, the most black, the most dam-nable, the most inexcusable, and the most outrageous mass of pretended statutory enactments that was ever attempted to be forced upon a reluctant people—defiled by blacker provisions and passed without the least formality of law—and that never were recognized by our people as having the slightest binding force or effect. They were adopted from the Missouri statutes in bulk, and so hasty, so informal was the action of that infamous Legislature, that in many instances the word "State" was not obliterated from the statutes, and the Legislature was subsequently obliged to pass a healing enactment declaring that wherever the word "State" existed it should be held to mean "Territory," and that the courts should govern themselves accordingly. This man Lowe had no legal right, no competent authority nor power, to make this compilation. The claim for componential that he preferred was so held, so preposterous that he pensation that he preferred was so bald, so preposterous, that no Department of the Government would ever recognize it. As this report says, it has slept from 1856 until the present time, when it was supposed by his friends that a sufficient period had elapsed so that the vigilance of the country would not be aroused and no attention called to the nature of his claim.

I want, Mr. President, in the interest of history to call attention to a few of the provisions of this delectable body of laws that the Senate of the United States in 1880 is called upon to pay Mr. Lowe for his services in compiling and attempting to enforce upon the people. Let me read section 12 of chapter 151, on page 117 of the volume:

If any free person, by speaking or by writing, assert or maintain that persons have not the right to hold slaves in this Territory, or shall introduce into this Territory, print, publish, write, circulate, or cause to be introduced into this Territory, written, printed, published, or circulated in this Territory, any book, paper, magazine, pamphlet, or circular, containing any denial of the right of persons to hold slaves in this Territory, such person shall be deemed guilty of felony, and punished by imprisonment at hard labor for a term of not less than two years.

It is for the compilation of that kind of legislation that the Senate is called upon to pay the sum of $4,000 twenty-six years after the service was rendered. Let me read section 6 of the same chapter:

If any person shall entice, decoy, or carry away out of any State or other Territory of the United States any slave belonging to another, with intent to procure or effect the freedom of such slave, or to deprive the owner thereof of the services of such slave, and shall bring such slave into this Territory, he shall be adjudged guilty of grand larceny, in the same manner as if such slave had been enticed, decoyed, or carried away out of the Territory, and in such case the larceny may be charged to have been committed in any county of this Territory, into or through which such slave shall have been brought by such person, and on conviction thereof the person offending shall suffer death.

One further section is worthy of notice:

SEC. 4. If any person shall entice, decoy, or carry away out of this Territory any slave belonging to another, with intent to deprive the owner thereof of the services of such slave, or with intent to effect or procure the freedom of such slave, he shall be adjudged guilty of grand larceny, and on conviction thereof shall suffer

I repeat, Mr. President, that this body of laws, a few extracts from which I have read, never had any binding sanction, never was legally enacted, and this claimant never had any legal authority from any competent source that was ever recognized by our courts as binding or obligatory, and has no claim whatever upon the Government or any department of it, and never had, for compensation. Chapter 152 of this volume declares that—

Wherever the word "State" occurs in any act of the present Legislative Asmbly or any law of this Territory in such construction as to indicate the locality the operation of such act or laws, the same shall, in every instance, be taken in understood to mean "Territory," and shall apply to the Territory of Kansas.

Now, sir, that pretended Legislature authorized Mr. Samuel A. Lowe to compile this body of laws, and directed him after their adjournment to transcribe and publish them in the city of Saint Louis; and they further declared that it should not be necessary that these statutes to have any binding effect should be signed by the governor of the Territory, or by the presiding officer of either of the two Houses. Therefore this vast volume of ten hundred and thirty-nine pages is to-day simply a compilation, commencing with an enacting clause, and not signed or authenticated by anybody. In pursuance of that assumed authority, he went to Saint Louis and procured the printing of fifteen hundred copies of this volume, and his assumption of a right to payment was regarded as so preposterous that none of the right to payment was regarded as so preposterous that none of the authorities of the Government, although the party in sympathy with him was in power for six years afterward, ever pretended to recognize his right to payment. His claim was repudiated by the territorial authorities, his claim was repudiated by the Department having authority here, it was repudiated by Congress, and it never has been recognized until now, twenty-five years afterward, this bill is reported his relief. There never has been a claim more absolutely devoid of justice or equity than this now presented for the consideration of the Senate.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to ask the Senator from Kansas if the Legislature which met there was not the constitutional, legitimate Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Kansas under the act of Congress creating it?

Mr. INGALLS. I do not think it was.

Mr. COCKRELL. Was it not the first one that met under the act?

Mr. INGALLS. I think it was.

Mr. COCKRELL. Was it not the only one that ever met under the original act, in pursuance of it?

Mr. INGALLS. To the credit of human nature I am bound to say I think it was.

think it was

Mr. COCKRELL. Then this was the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Kansas which came into existence under the act of May 30, 1854, and in pursuance of the terms of that act.

Mr. INGALLS. Does the Senator say this volume of statutes was enacted by that Legislature?
Mr. COCKRELL. No; but that it was the Legislature that came into existence under that act, and those are the laws which they enacted.

Mr. INGALLS. They never enacted them. They were never en-

Mr. INGALLS. They never enacted them. They were never enacted. These laws never went through the formality of enactment. Mr. COCKRELL. Ah, the Senator claims that they never went through the formalities which they should have gone through; but did not that Legislative Assembly claim that they had?

Mr. INGALLS. I think I do the Senator from Missouri no injustice in saying that this volume is an adaptation of the statutes of Missouri in force at that time, with some importations to render them more severe, and more harsh, and more oppressive, in order to carry out the political and social conditions existing there at that time. They were never enacted by any legislative body; they never went through the formalities of legislation; they never had the slightest binding or obligatory effect upon our people, and were never so held by any of the courts of that Territory; and they are a disgrace to human nature besides.

by any of the courts of that Territory; and they are a disgrace to human nature besides.

Mr. COCKRELL. As I understand from the Senator, he admits that this was the first Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Kansas which assembled under the act organizing that Territory, and it was the only one that did assemble, and it employed Mr. Lowe to do this work, and his objection to paying Mr. Lowe is that the Legislative Assembly exceeded its power and passed nauseous, unwholesome laws which the people of that Territory afterward repudiated. Is that the fault of the clerk? Should the State of Kansas have a Legislature assembling this winter which should pass laws obnoxious to the people of that State, and the people at the next election should elect representatives who would repudiate those laws, would the Senator from Kansas say that the officers of the present Legislature should not be paid for their services? I say that this Legislative Assembly met under the authority and sanction of Congress; that they employed the claimant, Lowe; that he performed the services here claimed for and has never been paid for them, and in justice, right, and law is entitled to payment; and he is not amenable or responsible for the extraordinary acts of that Legislative Assembly.

Mr. INGALLS. May I interrupt the Senator right there?

Mr. COCKRELL. Certainly.

Mr. INGALLS. The law organizing the Territories of Kansas and Nebraska provided by Congress for that purpose. The democratic party, which was in sympathy with the movement then made in Kansas, was in power until 1861. Why was it, if this claim of Samuel A. Lowe was a valid, legitimate claim against the Government of the United States, that the officers authorized by Congress to andit such elaims did not allow and pay this?

Mr. COCKRELL. Dol understand the Senator from Kansas to say

United States, that the officers authorized by Congress to audit such claims did not allow and pay this?

Mr. COCKRELL. Do I understand the Senator from Kansas to say that the democratic party was in power until 1861?

Mr. INGALLS. Until the 4th of March, 1861.

Mr. COCKRELL. Do I understand the Senator to say that the House of Representatives was democratic till that time?

Mr. INGALLS. I said that the law provided that the expenses for such objects should be audited and paid by an executive officer of the Government as other territorial expenses are paid. There was an appropriation made in gross for those expenses, out of which accounts itemized were allowed, and this was presented to that officer, and rejected as not being within the contemplation of the law, and not a claim upon the fund out of which it would, if allowable, have been paid.

Mr. COCKRELL. I say it was not presented and rejected, and the Senator from Kansas cannot show it. There is an issue of fact.

I rose to ask the Senator from Kansas upon what authority be stated that the claim for these expenses had been presented to the auditing officer and rejected?

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. Lowe wrote me so himself some years ago, asking me to take charge of this measure.

Mr. HARRIS. No such fact appears in the record, I am very sure, upon a careful examination of it, of any presentation; but the explanation is that this work had not been completed at the time the accounts were audited and the moneys appropriated by Congress had been disbursed in paying the legislative expenses of that Territory. That is the fact that the record discloses, and it is certainly in conflict with the fact that the Senator from Kansas states that these flict with the fact that the Senator from Kansas states, that these accounts had been presented and rejected by the officer empowered to

Mr. INGALLS. "In 1856," the reportsays, "he applied to the proper Department of the Government." This report was made by the Senator from Tennessee, [Mr. HARRIS.]

In 1856 he applied to the proper Department of the Government to be reimbursed for the money expended and paid for his services, but was informed that the Department had no authority to pay him.

It would appear, then, that the application was made, and the Senator from Tennessee so states in his report.

Mr. HARRIS. The Department at that hour, when the appropriation already made to defray the expenses of the territorial government of Kansas had been exhausted, of course had no power to ment of Kansas had been exhausted, of course had no power to adjust, settle, and pay.

Mr. INGALLS. Not power, but "authority to pay;" that is the language used by the report.

Mr. HARRIS. It is substantially the same thing. The point in the case was that the appropriation had been exhausted and there was no appropriation out of which the Department could pay. That was the reason why the Department did not pay.

was the reason why the Department did not pay

Mr. VEST. I am not familiar with the details of this case; but I desire to notice an expression of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS] in which he spoke of "the bogus code" of his State and said that it was imported there from the State of Missouri and copied from the statutes of Missouri. No such statutes as the Senator has read here existed in my State. I have no disposition to go back to the history of that terrible and unfortunate border war. Great outrages were perpetrated by both sides. The original crime cannot be fastened, and never will if the pages of history are just to the living and the dead, upon the people of Missouri. The institution of slavery has ceased to exist, and for myself I have no disposition to palliate or excuse any outrages that may have been connected with it. I deor excuse any durages that may have been connected with it. I desire that the recollection of them shall pass away; but I know, and hundreds now living know, the unparalleled outrages perpetrated upon the people of my State by the men who are claimed to-day to have been martyrs in the cause of liberty and freedom on the soil of

The institution of slavery was with us by no volition of our own, and we were unable to get rid of it by lawful means at that time. Men came from the Eastern States, sent from Plymouth church in the name of God and morality and law to teach the slaves of Missouri that they should rise against those who claimed to be their owners; and to carry out this teaching, efforts were made under the lead of John Brown who afterward suffered death for similar crimes in Virginia Posses were the suffered death for similar crimes in Virginia Control of the suffered death for similar crimes ginia. Poor creatures were taught to assail the men and women of Missouri, and told that to do so was according to the commands of God and law and justice and right. Out of such teachings grew the occasion for the law the Senator from Kansas has read here today; I speak advisedly. Outrage begot outrage. For myself I am willing they should pass into oblivion, but I do not propose that the Senator from Kansas, in discussing this or any other claim, shall put before this country the charge unanswered that the people of Missouri undertook to import their code of laws on Kansas and have him souri undertook to import their code of laws on Kansas and have him read them to the detestation and horror of the civilized world.

As to this claim I know nothing of it myself; but if I understand the report of our committee, Mr. Lowe, a reputable citizen of the State of Missouri, acted simply minsterially. Is he to be responsible for the outrages which the Senator from Kansas to-day has paraded before the American public? Is a page, a messenger, a clerk in this Senate to be held responsible for the legislation that he transcribes? Is that a sentiment of justice and right? This man acted under the government de facto, if not de jure, under the only government then known to the people of Kansas. He was the mere pen that carried out the dictates of a brain that he did not control. Why should he be made the sufferer? He spent his money; he gave his time. Why should he be made the scapegoat for all the historic outrages that are paraded before us?

paraded before us?

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, I do not propose at this period of the nation's history to enter upon any eulogy of John Brown. He was hanged as a traitor by Virginia on the 2d of December, 1859; but the nation took up the banner that he raised at Harper's Ferry and the nation took up the banner that he raised at Harper's Ferry and bore it in triumph through four years of war to Appomattox Court House. John Brown was a few years ahead of his time; it was the nation that was laggard; and it required but a brief space after his decease for the nation to occupy the platform on which he stood.

Neither, sir, do I propose to rehearse the details of the controversy between the people of Missouri and those of the Territory of Kansas. The Senator from Missouri can provoke no issue with me upon that subject. I expressly said when I began that this volume of laws was an adaptation and an importation of the statutes of Missouri; that an adaptation and an importation of the statutes of Missouri; that it had received certain embellishments and decorations, rendered necessary to adapt it more thoroughly to the social and political condition that was supposed to exist there at that time.

But, sir, with regard to the case of this claimant, Samuel A. Lowe, the question is, whether the Senate of the United States, twenty-five years after this work was performed, propose to pay out of the national Treasury several thousand dollars for the compilation of this infamous code that was made without authority of law, and that never was recognized by any department of this Government, and that never was held binding upon that Territory or its people.

The Senator from Tennessee has stated that the reason why this claim was not paid in 1855 was because there was no money to pay it; in other words, that the appropriation was exhausted. If that is the case, the language of the report is singularly unfortunate; it is an unhappy use of terms. If a claim is not paid because the appropriation is exhausted, it is not common to say that the reason why it was not paid was because the officer had no authority to pay it. leave the Senator from Tennessee to reconcile, as far as he can, the contradiction between the terms he has employed and the usual phraseology in use upon such occasions.

Mr. HARRIS. Will the Senator allow me to say that I may have been very unhappy in the selection of my language? But if he will direct his attention to the paragraph immediately preceding, it may aid him in excusing me somewhat for being so uncautious and unfortunate in the selection of language. That paragraph is:

When this work was completed the appropriation made by Congress to defray the legislative expenses of the Territory was exhausted, and therefore the memorialist was not paid.

There being no appropriation for that purpose, it was not within the authority of any Department of this Government to have undertaken to settle and pay that account until Congress appropriated the money with which to pay it.

Mr. INGALLS. The Senator is again unfortunate, Mr. President.

He calls my attention to the previous paragraph of the report, but unfortunately for him it appears that the period named in that paragraph is considerably anterior to the one named in the following.

This work was completed on the 1st of November, 1855, in Saint Louis Missouri as appears from the prefetors chapter of the logges. Louis, Missouri, as appears from the prefatory chapter of the bogus

When this work was completed-

That is to say, in 1855, the report states-the appropriation made by Congress to defray the expenses of the Territory was exhausted, and therefore the memorialist was not paid.

But in 1856, a year subsequently-

He applied to the proper Department of the Government to be reimbursed for the money expended and paid for his service, but was informed that the Depart-ment had no authority to pay him.

Now, if the Senator thinks he has reconciled the difficulty in this case by quoting the previous paragraph, I beg to suggest to him that the two paragraphs refer to two entirely distinct periods of time, and that they refer also to two entirely different conditions of affairs. that they refer also to two entirely different conditions of affairs. When he first applied there was no money, and when he subsequently applied, a year afterward, he was informed by the executive officer that there was no authority to pay him. The facts had been then disclosed that this was an illegal enactment attempted enactment. Here was a great body of laws adopted with such indecent haste, with so much disregard of ordinary formality, that they were compelled to pass a subsequent statutory enactment in order to declare that wherever the word "State" was used it should be held to mean "Territory." Such was the haste, such was the indecorous informality of the whole proceeding that they did not even extirpate the necessary words to make the statute appropriate to a community in necessary words to make the statute appropriate to a community in a territorial condition.

Now, sir, if it can be shown that there was any authority of law Now, sir, it can be shown that there was any authority of law on the part of this bogus Legislature, that never met where they were authorized to meet, and that never legally passed these laws, but authorized Samuel A. Lowe to make a compilation in the city of Saint Louis, then I shall be glad to hear it, and I should be glad, further, to know why it is that this claim has been allowed to sleep, in the language of the report, for twenty-five years before an active effort is made to secure its navment here in Courses.

is made to secure its payment here in Congress.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I certainly have no feeling or interest in this matter. As a member of the committee, it being referred to me, I examined carefully the record in the case. The facts are to me, I examined carefully the record in the case. The facts are briefly these: In 1854 Congress passed an act organizing the Territory of Kansas. In March, 1855, a territorial Legislature was elected. The Legislature assembled. As to the character of the laws they passed I did not feel it any part of my duty to look to that, and I certainly did not do so, but it passed a number of enactments. The code that the Senator from Kansas has held up before the Senate purports to have been passed by that Legislature. Among other things, that Legislature employed, by joint resolution, the claimant here to perform certain duties in respect to the codification of those laws. The proof is clear and overwhelming that he was employed by that Legislature; that he performed the duty assigned to him; that he did it effectually and efficiently and well; that at the time he completed it the money appropriated by Congress to pay the legislative expenses of the Territory was exhausted, and therefore he could islative expenses of the Territory was exhausted, and therefore he could not be paid. I believe the Senator is right as to the fact that the work was completed in the latter part of November, 1855. In 1856 he applied to the proper Department of the Government here, demanding payment, and was answered that they could not settle with him. The Senator from Kansas, I imagine, will not insist that any Department of the Government here could have paid the account without an appropriation from Congress of the means necessary to pay it. No Department could have had the authority to settle the account

The Senator asks why the claim has been allowed to remain here for twenty-five years. The report states all the facts that were in the possession of the committee as to why it has been permitted to remain. He appealed to Congress at the time specified in the report. There had been, I believe, two reports in favor of paying this claim before, but the bill had not passed the two Houses; indeed I do not believe the bill had passed either House during that period; but on each occasion when the claim has been examined, when it has been reported upon, there has always been a favorable report, a report developing the same facts substantially that this report develops; and the claim is presented here of a man who was employed to perform certain services by the territorial Legislature of Kansas; he did perform those services; they are worth fully the amount of money specified in the bill, as the proof shows; he is entitled to that amount for the services actually rendered, but the Senator from Kansas says that the action of that Legislature was very unwise in the character of the laws it passed.

I care nothing as to the wisdom or unwisdom of the laws the Legislature passed. The plain case is that the Legislature by its authority employed this man to perform certain services; he performed them; they are worth, fully and amply worth, the amount of money specified in this bill; and the only question for the Senate is as to whether or not be shall be paid for the services so performed. He certainly was not in any sense responsible for the wisdom or want of wisdom of the legislation that the territorial Legislature enacted.

I know nothing of the claimant; I know nothing of the case except what the record develops, and I believe I have indicated substantially the facts as developed by the record.

stantially the facts as developed by the record.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I begin to be rather interested in the discussion myself since John Brown has come into it, although nothing that can be said of him in this Senate, good or evil, will mar the brightness of that fame which will go down as the type of an honest, though it may be misguided, love of liberty. His "body lies moldering in the grave, but his soul," thank God, "is marching on."

Now I will leave John Brown and come to this bill; and the thing that I want to know from my honorable friend from Tennessee is what he has to say to this act of Congress of 1854 establishing the Territory of Kansas and providing for its legislative expenditures; he will find the clause to which I refer in the tenth volume of the Statutes at Large on the two hundred and eighty-eighth page:

these at Large on the two hundred and eighty-eighth page:

There shall be appropriated annually the usual sum, to be expended by the governor, to defray the contingent expenses of the Territory, including the salary of a clerk of the executive department; and there shall also be appropriated annually a sufficient sum, to be expended by the secretary of the Territory, and upon an estimate to be be made by the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States, to defray the expenses of the Legislative Assembly, the printing of the laws, and other incidental expenses; and the governor and secretary of the Territory shall, in the disbursement of all moneys intrusted to them, be governed solely by the instructions of the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States, and shall semi-annually account to the said Secretary for the manner in which the aforesaid moneys shall have been expended; and no expenditure shall be made by said Legislative Assembly for objects not specially authorized by the acts of Congress making the appropriations, nor beyond the sums thus appropriated for such objects.

Now, if Legislative Assembly of products and appropriated for such objects.

Now, if I am capable of understanding the English language-and I sometimes think I am not—it appears to me that the Congress of the United States had told the people of that Territory and its Legislative Assembly that beyond what Congress chose to appropriate on an estimate of the Secretary of the Treasury for the legislative expenses of that Territory, no expenditure or obligation should be incurred. That was the object of the law, that the territorial Assembly should not be allowed to go beyond the sums that Congress had appropriated. In the same volume if you turn to the supportation propriated. In the same volume, if you turn to the appropriation bill for that period, you will find that Congress did appropriate, and I have no doubt on the estimate of the Secretary of the Treasury, the sum of $20,000 for the legislative expenses of Kansas Territhe sum of $20,000 for the legislative expenses of Kansas Territory. If this work was done within the authority of law there was an appropriation to pay it, with the qualification that it was impossible for the Legislative Assembly to incur obligations beyond what Congress had provided. So that, as the report of the committee states, the officers of the Treasury, when in 1856 this matter was presented to them, replied, "We have no authority to settle and allow this account." I think if we had the letters—I do not know how full they would be a weakly find that they would be weakly they would be a weakly find that they would be a weakly find that they would be weakly they would be we full they would be-we should find that there was very good reason for that in what I have read from the statute which says that no ex-pense shall be incurred beyond the sum that Congress should have previously appropriated to carry on the expenses of the Legislative Assembly.

The Legislative Assembly, on the theory of the committee (my friend from Kansas doubts that, but I take it for granted for this purpose) chose to incur expenses which the law said they could not purpose) chose to incur expenses which the law said they could not incur; that is to say beyond the appropriation of $20,000. What claim, then, has this gentleman upon us or upon the people of the United States to pay this money? I am unable to see that he has any.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, one word in answer to the Senator from Vermont in regard to the expenses exceeding the appropriation. If the distinguished Senator will turn to the Statutes at Large he will find a dozen laws passed since he has been a distinguished member of this body providing for the erection of public buildings, which positively prohibited, in unmistakable terms, the cost of those buildings exceeding a certain amount, and each one of those buildings to-day is costing five to ten times the amount specified in the law. So he will find hundreds of other acts of Congress field in the law. So he will find hundreds of other acts of Congress that limit the expenditures to a certain amount, and every year or so our appropriation bills and our deficiency bills give additional amounts to the Territory of Montana, to the Territory of Dakota, and other places to make up the deficiency the amount expended by the Territory was over and above the amount appropriated and to which it was restricted by law.

Now, Mr. President, the acts to which the Senator from Kausas re-ferred are the acts of that territorial Legislature, sent to the Library of Congress, and the volume is deposited in the archives of that Ter-titory. "Statutes of Kansas Territory, 1855." These are the laws that the claimant Lowe compiled in pursuance of the authority of that that the claimant Lowe compiled in pursuance of the authority of that Legislative Assembly, and for which he has never been paid, and for which he now asks compensation. That the bill may have been pending here a number of years is very true. There is pending before the Committee on Claims now a claim originating prior to 1777, and it has been pending ever since, and Congress has never acted upon it. So there are many other things pending before Congress. I know nothing of the transactions out of which this claim arose. Here are nothing of the transactions out of which this claim arose. Here are the laws he compiled; here is his name to them. He compiled them; he did the service. He has not been paid for it. The fact that that Legislative Assembly may not have passed laws congenial to the prople of that Territory he had nothing to do with. It is often the case that our Legislative Assemblies pass laws that are afterward repealed and repudiated, but that is not the fault of the clerk.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

ANNOUNCEMENT OF A PAIR.

Mr. WARD. Mr. Speaker, in the proceedings of yesterday upon the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan, in reference to the election of a Postmaster of the House, I find that I am recorded as having voted. I desire to say that I was paired with the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. AIKEN] and voted inadvertently. I ask, therefore, to withdraw the vote and correct in that way the permanent RECORD

The SPEAKER. The Chair presumes that the object the gentle-man from Pennsylvania has in view is accomplished by the mere announcement. The Chair does not see now how the vote can be with-

MAJOR-GENERAL LEWIS WALLACE.

Mr. NEW, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 6615) relating to quartermaster's stores furnished to the forces of Major-General Lewis Wallace during the Morgan raid through Indiana and Ohio; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

POST-ROADS.

Mr. BEALE, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 6616) to declare roads between all life-saving stations post-roads; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

RETIREMENT OF SMALL LEGAL-TENDER NOTES.

Mr. BELFORD, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 6617) for the retirement of small legal-tender notes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and ordered to be printed.

INDIAN DEPREDATION CLAIMS.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, aid before the House letters from the Secretary of the Interior, relative to certain Indian depredation claims; which were referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

LANDING CERTIFICATES.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury in regard to landing certificates of goods exported from the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Ways and Means.

DEFICIENCIES IN APPROPRIATIONS FOR POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Postmaster-General, relative to certain deficiencies in the appropriations for the Post-Office Department for the current fiscal year; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

BOUNDARY LINES BETWEEN NEW YORK AND CONNECTICUT.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. Speaker, I desire at this time to make a privileged report from the Committee on the Judiciary, in reference to House bill No. 6514, entitled a bill concerning settlement of boundary lines between the States of New York and Connecticut, and ask that the accompanying bill be put upon its passage.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill concerning settlement of boundary lines between New York and Connecticut,

Whereas commissioners duly appointed on the part of the State of New York, and commissioners duly appointed on the part of the State of Connecticut, for the purpose of settling the boundary line between said States, did execute an agreement in the words following, to wit:

"Memorandum of agreement by and between the subscribers, commissioners of the States of New York and Connecticut, respectively, to settle the question of the boundaries between said States, being thereunto authorized by the resolutions of said States, respectively, passed by them as hereunto annexed. That is to say, we, Allen C. Beach, secretary of state, Augustus Schoommaker, attorney-general, and Horatio Seymour, jr., State engineer and surveyor, commissioners of the State of New York; and we, Origen S. Seymour, Lafayette S. Foster, and William T. Minor, commissioners of the State of Connecticut, have agreed, and do hereby agree, to fix, determine, and establish the boundaries between our respective States, subject to the approval and ratification of the Legislatures of our respective States, in the following manner: We agree that the boundary on the land constituting the western boundary of Connecticut and the eastern boundary of the State of New York shall be, and is, as the same was defined by monuments erected by commissioners appointed by the Legislature of the State of New York, and completed in the year 1866; the said boundary line extending from Byram Point (formerly called Lyons Point) on the south to the line of the State of Massachusetts on the north.

We further agree that the boundary on the sound shall be, and is, as follows: Beginning at a point in the center of the channel about six hundred feet south of the extreme rocks of Byram Point, marked No. 0 on appended United States Coast Survey chart; thence running in a true southeast course three and one-quarter statute miles; thence in a straight line (the arc of a great circle) northeasterly to a point four statute miles true south of New London light-house; thence northeasterly to a point marked No. 1 on the annexed United States Coast Survey chart of Fisher's Ialand Sound, which point is on the long east three-quarters north sailing course drawn on said map, and is about one thousand feet northerly from the Hammock or N. Dumpling light-house; thence following the said east three-quarters north sailing course as Isid down on said map, easterly to a point marked No. 2 on said map; thence southeasterly toward a point marked No. 3 on said map; so far as said States are conterminous: Provided, however, Thatnothing in the foregoing agreement centained shall be construed to affect existing titles to property, corporeal or incorporeal, held under grants heretofore made by either of said States, nor to affect existing rights which said States, or either of them, or which the citizens of either of said States, may have by grant, letters-patent, or prescription of fishing in the waters of said sound, whether for shell or floating fish, irrespective of the boundary line hereby established, it not being the purpose of this agreement to define, limit, or interfere with any such right, rights, or privileges, whatever the same may be. "In witness whereof we have hereunto set our hand to this instrument, and to a duplicate thereof, December 8, 1879.

And whereas said agreement has been confirmed by the Legislatures of said States of New York and Connecticut, respectively: Therefore,

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the consent of the Congress of the United States be, and hereby is, given to said agreement, and to each and every part thereof; and the boundaries established by said agreement are hereby approved: Provided, however, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to impair or in any manner to affect any right of the United States or jurisdiction of its courts in and over the islands or waters which form the subject of said agreement.

The SPEAKER. The report accompanying the bill will be read. The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred House bill No. 6514, concerning settlement of boundary-lines between New York and Connecticut, have had the same under consideration, and report as follows:

The boundary-lines between the two States have long been in dispute, and to effect a settlement commissioners were chosen by each State, authorized to examine into the subjects of difference and to enter into an agreement that would plainly define the line of division. The commissioners executed the agreement which is set forth in the bill, and the States have confirmed the same by their Legislatures.

The existing titles and rights held by individuals being fully protected and the rights and jurisdiction of the United States not being affected, the committee recommend that the consent and approval of the United States be given by the

J. J. PURMAN.

Mr. WISE. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Private Calendar for consideration at this time the bill (S. No. 148) granting an increase of pension to J. J. Purman. I will state that a bill for this purpose passed the House at its last session. The Senate also passed this bill, which is the same as the House bill, except that the arrears of pension were stricken out. I ask the House to concur with the Senate in giving the increase of pension without arrears. The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That J. Jackson Purman, late first lieutenant in the One hundred and fortieth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, be, and he is hereby, granted and allowed, from and after the passage of this act, a pension at the rate of $30 per month: and the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place the name of said J. Jackson Purman on the pension-roll at said rate, in lieu of the pension now paid him.

There being no objection, the bill was taken from the Private Calendar, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WISE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the

The latter motion was agreed to.

MRS. JULIA GARDNER TYLER.

Mr. GOODE. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table for present consideration the bill (S. No. 992) granting a pension to Mrs. Julia Gardner Tyler, widow of ex-President Tyler.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mrs. Julia Gardner Tyler, widow of ex-President John Tyler, and to pay her a pension of $100 per month from and after the passage of this act.

There being no objection, the bill was taken from the Speaker's table, read three times, and passed.

Mr. GOODE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the

The latter motion was agreed to.

BRIDGE OVER SAINT MARY'S RIVER.

Mr. NICHOLLS. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table for present consideration the bill (S. No. 1814) to authorize the construction of a fixed bridge over the Saint Mary's River, and for other purposes.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. After this is disposed of I will ask for the regular order. The bill was read

Mr. CONGER. I think that bill should go to the Committee on Commerce. I do not know any precedent for declaring what rivers in the United States are navigable or where the head of navigation should be

Mr. NICHOLLS. I will state to the gentleman that this bill was considered by the Committee on Commerce in the Senate, and that considered by the Committee on Commerce in the Senate, and that it has the recommendation of the Secretary of War. The Secretary of War wrote a letter to the committee in reply to one from Senator Brown, who introduced the bill, recommending its passage. I will also state for the information of the gentleman, for I am well acquainted with the locality, which is in my district, that the river is only navigable for rafts above the point mentioned in the bill. Steamers never run above that point; and a fixed bridge with one span will make the river easily navigable for rafts.

Mr. CONGER. The bill does not give the width of the snave.

Mr. CONGER. The bill does not give the width of the span. With reference to the bridging of all navigable rivers—
Mr. NICHOLLS. The river is only one hundred and fifty feet wide at that point; it is not there navigable.

Mr. REAGAN. How far is this above the mouth of the Saint Mary's River?

Mr. NICHOLLS. The distance by river is one hundred and fifty miles; by land about forty miles.

Mr. CONGER. There has been no bill passed authorizing the bridging of any river which is navigable or which may be improved by appropriations of Congress without requiring the bridge to be built in accordance with specifications submitted to the Secretary of War or to the Engineer Department.

Mr. SPARKS. At this point the river is not navigable. It is only about one hundred and fifty feet wide, and is not navigable.

Mr. CONGER. That is about as wide as the Tennessee or the Cum-

Mr. NICHOLLS. There was a letter, as I have stated, from the Secretary of War to the Senate committee recommending the passage of this bill.

Mr. CONGER. I think the very reference the gentleman has made to the origin of the bill shows that it ought to be considered by the Committee on Commerce.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan objects to the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. NICHOLLS. Then let it go to the Committee on Commerce.

The bill was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I now demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order being demanded, the morning hour begins at twenty-seven minutes to one o'clock, and reports of committees are in order.

Mr. FINLEY. I move to dispense with the regular order.
The motion to dispense with the morning hour was agreed to, twothirds being in favor thereof.
Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of resuming the consideration of the funding bill.

Mr. BAKER rose.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BAKER] has indicated his purpose to ask the House to resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering an appropriation

Mr. BAKER. I desire to report back from the Committee on Appropriations the fortifications bill, under instructions from that committee, in order that I may antagonize with it the bill in charge of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. Do I understand the gentleman from Indiana proposes to go on with the fortifications bill at this time?

Mr. BAKER. That is the intention I had, if the House will con-

The SPEAKER. The agreement made in the House, to which the gentleman from New York acceded, was that when appropriation bills were ready to be acted on he would not antagonize them with the funding bill.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I so understand it, and of course will not press my motion pending the consideration of this bill. But I express the hope that the Committee on Appropriations will allow me to-day and to-morrow, because I have promised to dispose entirely of the funding bill within these two days, if the House will give me the opportunity.

Mr. BAKER. I desire to say, on behalf of the Committee on Appropriations, that we have now four appropriation bills reported to the House. We consider it of very great public importance that at least four if not more of the appropriation bills shall be considered before the holiday adjournment, and I do not believe that can be done unless the House gives us an opportunity to take up one of these bills

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands the gentleman from New York does not antagonize the appropriation bills Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I do not.

FORTIFICATIONS APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BAKER, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported back the bill (H. R. No. 6529) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, and for the armament thereof, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, and for other purposes, and moved that it be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. BLOUNT. I reserve all points of order.

The motion of Mr. Baker was agreed to.

Mr. BAKER. I now move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The motion was agreed to.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. Converse in the chair.)

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering the bill (H. R. No. 6529) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, and for the armament thereof, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, and for other purposes.

Mr. BAKER. I move that the first and formal reading of this bill in Committee of the Whole be dispensed with.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. BAKER. I hope that the consideration and disposition of thisbill will not occupy more than an hour or two of the time of the House. I desire to make a brief explanation of the terms of this bill, and of the reasons which have actuated the Committee on Appropriations in reporting it in the form in which it is now presented to the

With a single exception, to be hereafter noted, the appropriation bill that is now before the Committee of the Whole is identical with bill that is now before the Committee of the Whole is identical with the appropriation bill for the same purpose as finally agreed upon at the last session of Congress and which has become a law. The Chief Engineer of the Army, in his estimates of appropriations for the fortifications of the country, submitted in his report to the Secretary of War, recommends the appropriation of the sum of $4,111,500. The Secretary of War has reduced that amount by $3,611,500, leaving the amount recommended by the Secretary of War at $500,000.

The bill now under consideration appropriates the sum of $100,000, in accordance with the practice that has obtained for the last five years for the protection, preservation, and repair of the fortifications.

years, for the protection, preservation, and repair of the fortifications of the country. The number of forts and batteries that are esti-of the country. The number of forts and batteries that are esti-mated for is sixty.

The question as to whether or not it is wise at this time to appropriate so large a sum as is recommended for the prosecution of the work of fortifying our seaboard cities is one that deserves the careful consideration of the House and of the country. It is a matter that must be entirely familiar to every member of this House, as well as to every intelligent reader in the country, that our seaboard fortifications are at the present time in a most deplorable condition. I am satisfied that there is no military man who would not admit without controversy that we have no fortifications along our seaboard that are at all adequate to meet the exigencies of foreign war. They that are at all indequate to meet the exigencies of foreign war. They are utterly inefficient as a means of defense against the assaults of any one of the military or naval powers of the world.

With the immense ordnance that is now carried on ships of war, hurling projectiles weighing from fifteen hundred to two thousand pounds each, and having an effective range of from six to eight miles, there is not a single seaboard city that might not be laid waste by the fleets belonging to a third or fourth rate nation. A single vessel thus armed could lay off beyond the reach of any guns mounted in our forts and levy contributions mon or destroy any one of the great. in our forts and levy contributions upon or destroy any one of the great mercantile seaboard cities of the country.

In my judgment, this condition of things is not creditable to the legislators of the country. Having this conviction firmly impressed upon my mind, the question might be asked, Why is it that the Committee on Appropriations has not reported a larger sum for the purpose of fortifications and heavy rifles? There is an immediate and pose of fortifications and heavy rifles? There is an immediate and pressing duty resting upon Congress to settle upon plans for the fortifications of the country. Congress ought also to determine upon the kinds of heavy ordnance required to be used upon those fortifications. I believe these subjects ought to receive the early and the careful consideration of Congress and of the country, with a view to the development of a system of fortifications and armament that shall be permanent. This system should look to such a complete and perfect fortification and armament of our great cities along the seaboard as shall place us in a position where we will be invincible. board as shall place us in a position where we will be invincible against the attacks of our enemies.

But while I thus believe that, I believe on the other hand that it is unwise that we should undertake such a great system of fortifications and armaments as I have indicated, and which mustrum through a long period of years, hastily and without full consideration of the plan that ought to be finally agreed upon and adopted.

The work of constructing a fortification, fitted to resist modern heavy rifled guns, and of the armament of it is one that must run through a great number of years. And with more than one hundred forts and batteries, which will be needed for our sea-coast defense, it would require a period of not less than twenty or twenty-five years, even with liberal appropriations, to place our fortifications and their armament in such a condition as would be creditable to a great people such as we are.

ple such as we are.

It was in consequence of the fact that we are now in the expiring hours of this Congress and of this administration that we felt that there was not time, even if there had been a disposition, to investigate these subjects and mature plans and report them in time for Congress to act upon them, so that we might intelligently and understandingly enter upon the prosecution of a work which I believe is of as great necessity as any that can demand the public attention.

That is the reason why we have for the present reported the sum of $100,000 only, which is all that is needful to continue our works in the condition in which they now are, leaving this important subject as a legacy to the next Congress, which, if it is wise, will devise and mature plans that will be acceptable to Congress and to the country, and which will look to the prosecution through a series of years of this great public interest. great public interest.

We have already commenced the manufacture of large guns, though only upon a moderate scale. We have now converted about one hundred and ten or fifteen smooth-bore Rodman guns of ten-inch caliber into eight-inch rified guns. We have also converted about fifteen smooth-bore guns of fifteen-inch caliber into twelve-inch rified guns. And, in pursuance of an appropriation bill passed at the last session of Congress, a contract has been made with the South Boston Foundery for the manufacture of four twelve-inch rified guns. These are enormous guns: their weight is fifty-two tons each. They are conery for the manufacture of four twelve-inch rifled guns. These are enormous guns; their weight is fifty-two tons each. They are constructed of cast-iron, with a wrought-iron tube of three inches thickness inserted in the bore made in the casting. It is believed that those guns will prove efficient. The contract price for which they are to be constructed is $46,000 each.

Mr. McCOOK. I think it is $44,000.

Mr. BAKER. The gentleman behind me says that the price is $44,000. It is $46,000 each. To construct these guns in accordance with the contract will take periods of sixteen, eighteen, twenty, and twenty-two months, so that the fiscal year for which we are now about to two months, so that the fiscal year for which we are now about to appropriate will be within two months of its expiration before the contractor will be enabled to deliver the last of these large guns contractor will be enabled to deliver the last of these large guns already provided for. In the present bill, Mr. Chairman, we provide for the construction during the next fiscal year of four more of these large guns. Without very great additions to the facilities now existing in this country (and they exist only at one establishment) it will be impossible to complete the other four guns provided for in this bill inside of two years from the passage of the bill.

Mr. ELLIS. The gentleman will allow me to ask why will it require two years to complete the guns already contracted for I ask for information.

Mr. BAKER. The reason is this: We have never heretofore manufactured in this country so large a gun, with one single exception, as the guns now ordered. To prepare for the manufacture of these guns the South Boston Foundery found it necessary to invest a large sum of money in the purchase and importation of plant for the prosecution of the work. The carrying on of this work more rapidly than this establishment is able to do it now would involve the necessity of a very large additional expenditure and a very large increase of

As I was saying, the cost of one of these large guns is $45,000. Under this contract it costs us, within $500, the same amount of money to cast one of these large guns, to insert a wrought-iron tube, and to prepare it for use, that it would cost to purchase a steel gun from the Krupp factory at Essen, a gun constructed of steel throughout. There is a practical question presenting itself to the House and to the country when we come to consider the propriety of any considerable increase, involving a large expenditure of money on the part of a single private establishment to enable it to manufacture these large guns. There being only one establishment in this country capable of manufacturing these guns, that establishment is of course a monopoly; and if there is to be simply a single appropriation looking to the expenditure of a large sum of money, no prudent manufacturer in the United States would venture to invest his means for the purpose of purchasing and putting in place the machinery and plant necessary in order to enable him to compete with the single foundery now engaged in the manufacture of these guns. Before there can be force. now engaged in the manufacture of these guns. Before there can be competition among private establishments Congress must settle down upon a defined policy which shall run through a long period of time.

It would seem that the price we are compelled to pay for these

It would seem that the price we are compelled to pay for these guns that we now order is largely in excess of what we ought to pay for iron guns. I do not see, however, how we can expect better rates until we shall convince business men who may feel disposed to enter upon the manufacture of guns that they can do so with a reasonable prospect of having work for a long time. We ought to be able to manufacture in this country a steel gun substantially as cheaply as such guns are manufactured in Europe. There is no reason, so far as I can see, why we should not construct guns as good and as cheaply here as they can be made elsewhere.

Now, Mr. Chairman, if we should appropriate the whole amount asked for by the Chief of Ordnance, it would involve a determination by the House in advance of two questions. The first question is whether the House will now determine upon a permanent policy of having guns constructed at a single private armory. The other question (it is possibly the same question in another form) is whether or not the Government, when it shall have determined to enter upon the construction of its large ordnance, will prosecute the work through its own establishments in the same manner as it manufactures its small arms. It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that this question, involving as it must the construction of all the guns demanded by exigencies of our public defense, requires mature deliberation. I had hoped that the Committee on Military Affairs would mature some plan looking to the construction of guns and of fortifications, and would have reported such a plan to the House in order that the House and the country might settle upon a definite policy in reference to se large a subject. It seems to me, however, that in these expiring hours of the present Congress and the present Administration it would be unwise, by making a larger appropriation than that recommended by unwise, by making a larger appropriation than that recommended by the committee, to commit Congress, even in a quasi manner, to the policy of constructing these gans at a single manufacturing establishment. Such a policy, it must be apparent to any one upon reflection, amounts to giving a monopoly which would enable this single firm to command its own prices. We should decide to manufactured gans in our own establishments; or, if they are to be manufactured by private establishments, we should adopt such a policy as will satisfy prudent business men that they can make an investment without peril in consequence of some sudden change of policy.

While I believe that I would go as far and as rapidly as any man on this subject, I feel that it is too large a one, one that runs too far into the future, one that involves questions of policy of too grave consequence to justify this House at this late hour, without mature consideration, to project any policy which would look to the foreclosure of the full consideration of this question by a new House and a new administration coming up fresh from the people.

I confess, Mr. Chairman, that I have never been more gratified than

I confess, Mr. Chairman, that I have never been more gratified than I have been to-day by one effect which is now apparent resulting from the late presidential election. The interest which 'see evinced among my democratic friends in favor of the fortification and armament of our seaboard satisfies me that the recent election has convinced them at last that this is a nation, and that, being a nation, it is entitled to be defended. I think, however, that the subject of defense at this time cannot be pridently settled and that it had better be left to the next Congress. I believe there is a wide-spread feeling over the country which will compel the next Congress to report some settled plan looking to the accomplishment of the object I have stated.

Mr. Chairman, there are only one or two other features in the bill. It embraces only four topics: First, the item for the protection, preservation, and repair of the fortifications of the country; secondly, the armament of these fortifications; thirdly, an appropriation of $50,000 for torpedoes; and lastly the authority given to the Secretary of War in his discretion either to sell or to exchange the unserviceable and unsuitable powder and projectiles now on hand.

We have at this time over fifteen thousand barrels of damaged and unserviceable analysis stored principally at Saint Louis and in the unserviceable powder stored principally at Saint Louis and in the vicinity of New York. It is strange with the attention of Congress called to this subject as it was in 1873, and as it had been in former years, that until last year no attempt was made on the part of the Government to construct a suitable building for the preservation and protection of our powder.

We have on hand at this time also over ten thousand tons of projectiles which have become unserviceable. The Secretary of War asked of our committee that he might be permitted to sell or exchange the damaged and unserviceable powder and unserviceable projectiles and, with the proceeds arising therefrom, purchase new powder and projectiles for the necessary use of the Army. I find, sir, in the year 1873, in consequence of a like condition of things having been brought to the attention of Congress, on the 3d of March, 1873, provision was made in an appropriation bill substantially in the words of the one hade in an appropriation of it subscantiarly in the words of the one here reported, authorizing the exchange of unserviceable powder then on hand for powder that was fit for use.

I have, Mr. Chairman, I believe, now said all I desire to say in the presentation of this subject to the consideration of the Committee of the Whole House. If there is any gentleman who desires to speak in my time, I shall be happy to yield to him.

Mr. BRAGG. I desire to ask the gentleman from Indiana a question

Mr. BAKER. I will yield for that purpose.

Mr. BRAGG. I see on the second page of this bill, grouped together in one paragraph:

For the armament of sea-coast fortifications, including heavy guns and howitzers for flank defense, carriages, projectiles, fuses, powder, and implements, their trial and proof, and all necessary expenses incident thereto, and for machine guns, including the conversion of smooth-bore cannon into rifles, and the masufacture of four improved breech-loading twelve-inch rifled guns, $100,000.

I desire to inquire whether the officers in charge of the Department in making their estimates have not specified the sums for each one of the items in that paragraph?

Mr. BAKER. In answer to the gentleman from Wisconsin, I will say if he will turn to page 80 of the Book of Estimates he will see that the recommendation of the Department is divided into four different topics; namely, $500,000 for the conversion and manufacture of heavy ordnance—so that the conversion and manufacture of heavy ordnance is placed in one item; carriages, projectiles and powder for heavy ordnance, $250,000; for proving grounds and proving cannon, carriages, projectiles, fuses, &c., $20,000; and for the further and complete testing of experimental guns, $117,600. They are thus embraced in four different topics in the Book of Estimates.

Mr. BRAGG. The object of my inquiry, if the gentleman from Indiana will permit me, is to know why, then, in this appropriation bill, for each class of improvement recommended by the Chief of Ordnance a sum specified for that class is not recommended rather than for the whole in lump, $400,000.

I will state now the reason of my inquiry. Upon a discussion of this question with other members of the Military Committee, there was manifest disposition on the part at least of some members of that was manifest disposition on the part at least of some members of that committee to recommend a large and liberal appropriation for the manufacture of heavy guns. But we desired to limit our recommendation, if we should make such a one, to the construction of heavy guns, their trial, carriages and things appertaining to them, and them alone. We were entirely at a loss to know what recommendation we should make in that regard, under the phraseology of this bill, if the committee when the matter was submitted to them should direct any member of that committee to make such recommendation to this bill. For, sir, here we have four improved breech-loading twelve-inch rifled guns recommended, without any expense to be at-tached to them. If the Committee on Military Affairs should be distached to them. If the Committee on Military Affairs should be disposed to recommend eight or ten or twelve guns, and increase the appropriation accordingly in order that the work might be going on for the purpose of supplying our fortifications with the needed artillery, we have no means under the manner in which this bill is drawn to make that recommendation understandingly and prevent its being appropriated to any other purpose than that for which we should choose to recommend it.

Mr. BAKER. I desire to say in reply to the gentleman's inquiry that I am not responsible, neither are the present members of the Committee on Appropriations, for the form in which this paragraph stands. The practice of putting it in this shape was one which original.

Committee on Appropriations, for the form in which this paragraph stands. The practice of putting it in this shape was one which originated many years ago. It originated, Mr. Chairman, out of this consideration: The Department preferred in the event there was no considerable sum to be appropriated for each of these specific objects that the amount for the whole should be grouped together in order to enable the Ordnance Department to meet the necessities of the service as they might arise during the fiscal year. There were some of these objects, for instance, for powder, fuses, projectiles, and the like, which are of such prime necessity, and the amount which might be called for is so uncertain, that it was the request of the Ordnance Department if we did not appropriate substantially the amount asked for, then it should be grouped together in the way in which it is in this bill. And I desire to say that if the whole appropriation remains as small as it now is, it seems to me there will be danger of crippling the Ordnance Department in some of its essential operations if we should undertake to distribute by law the particular sums out of this $400,000 which should be used, for instance, in the purchase of powder, fuses, projectiles, and like articles, and another specific and definite sum for the manufacture of guns.

Mr. PRACG Wonli it confront another specific and definite sum for conversion, and still another specific and definite sum for the manufacture of guns.

Mr. BRAGG. Would it confuse to frame the bill in accordance with the specifications they themselves make recommendation for? Mr. BAKER. Certainly not if Congress is disposed to appropriate the amounts recommended in the estimates. Otherwise it would.

Mr. McCOOK. How much of this will be consumed in the manufacture of breech-loading rifle guns? If the gentleman is able to give the information, I would like to know. Or can anybody give it?

Mr. BAKER. I desire to say, in response to the sollo roce exclamation of my friend from Wisconsin, that I apprehend there is somebody that knows how much will be consumed for that purpose. I take it the Chief of Ordnance ought to know, and I hold in my hand a dispatch which I have received from him, which I think will convey the information desired.

wey the information desired.

Mr. BRAGG. I beg to remark to the gentleman from Indiana that it was not I that made the remark to which he has just alluded.

Mr. BAKER. I beg the gentleman's pardon, then. I will respond to the gentleman from New York, who made the inquiry. The dispatch which I hold in my hand specifies:

For new guns-four twelve-inch breech-loading rifles, $46,000 each.

I desire to say, Mr. Chairman, before reading this telegram, which is in response to an inquiry which I sent to the Department as to the distribution of the appropriation of $400,000 contained in the bill for the current fiscal year, that this gives in detail the manner in which that fund is to be expended. It is as follows:

New guns-four twelve-inch breech-loading rifles, $46,000 each.

The following are for converting:

For converting two eleven-inch breech-loading rifles from fifteen-inch smooth-bores, each $17,0.0; and five eight-inch breech-loading rifles—

Converted from ten-inch Rodmans-each $7,000; one twelve-inch breech-loading mortar, $16,400; one twelve-inch gun, iron carriage, $15,000; making a total of $342 000 out of $400,000 appropriated in the bill that is to be used in the construction of guns or for their conversion for the current fiscal year.

I repeat, Mr. Chairman, and ask the attention of the committee to what I said, that in answer to a letter of inquiry addressed to the Chief of Ordnance as to the method in which this appropriation of $400,000 in the last appropriation bill was to be expended, or proposed to be expended, he sent me this dispatch showing that it was being expended in the construction of four new breech-loading rifles; in the conversion of two eleven-inch rifles; in the conversion of five eight-inch rifles; in the manufacture of one twelve-inch mortar, and in the construction of one gun-carriage for a twelve-inch rifle, making a total expenditure, out of that sum of $400,000, of $342,000.

I apprehend that if we continue the appropriation for the next fiscal year on the basis of $400,000, the Chief of Ordnance will be enabled to expend a like amount and to convert a like number of guns or to manufacture a like number of new guns; and I desire to guns or to manufacture a like number of new guns; and I desire to say, Mr. Chairman, in my judgment, unless we are prepared to-day to enter upon the experiment and settle it for the future of placing the construction of these large guns entirely in the hands of one corporation, that the amount of money now being used is all that can be wisely used until we have settled upon some plan such as I have suggested.

It is apparent, Mr. Chairman, when it will require from sixteen to It is apparent, Mr. Chairman, when it will require from sixteen to twenty-two months for the completion of these four guns, that it is entirely idle for us to make appropriation of a vastly larger sum than is provided for in our bill with the hope or the expectation of any speedy completion of them without we can get establishments—private manufacturing establishments—of such magnitude as will be able to manufacture guns in four or six months, instead of sixteen and twenty-two as now, or else establish by the Government a manufactory where they can do the work for themselves.

Mr. McCOOK. Do I understand the gentleman from Indiana to say that the capacity of this establishment in South Boston, Massachusetts, is limited to the construction of one gun every sixteen or chusetts, is limited to the construction of one gun every sixteen or eighteen or twenty-two months?

Mr. BAKER. No, I do not say that.

Mr. McCOOK. I understood the gentleman to say that contract was made for the delivery of one of these guns in sixteen months, one in eighteen, and one in twenty-two.

Mr. BAKER. No, I have stated that the contract required the construction of one gun in sixteen months, another in eighteen months, another in twenty months, and another in twenty-two months; and, although I have not made the specific inquiry, I apprehend that the Chief of Ordnance, acting upon the manifest intention of Congress for the speedy construction of some of these large guns, of Congress for the speedy construction of some of these large guns, made the very best contract he could in reference to their delivery—

Mr. McCOOK. Nobody questions that.
Mr. BAKER. And also as to their cost and the time of completion.
Mr. McCOOK. Nobody questions that the best contract was made that could have been made. I have no doubt of it. My question, however, is, suppose the committee were to increase this appropriation so that the Chief of Ordnance was authorized to construct eight or twelve or a larger number of breech-loading guns, in what time, from your view of the matter, would it be practicable to obtain them, or how long would it take for their construction?
Mr. BAKER. My judgment is, from the inquiry I have already made, that if eight guns were ordered the Forty-seventh Congress will have expired before they are completed.
Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) What would you use them for after they were made?

Mr. BAKER. I desire to say to my distinguished friend from Pennsylvania I would suggest the use of some of them to protect the harbor of New York and the city of Philadelphia, which he in part so worthily represents worthly represents.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) The very moment it appeared anybody had a thought of attacking the harbor of New York no one would be quicker than I would to appropriate money for its defense from the public Treasury. But I do not think the gentleman's grand-children will see anybody attacking the harbor of New York.

Mr. McCOOK. If the gentleman from Indiana will permit me, I will remind the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania that since 1776 this country has been at war either with itself or with forsince 1776 this country has been at war either with itself or with foreign powers sixteen years out of the hundred; in other words, that during one year in every six we have been at war. When you take into consideration the Indian wars, the fact is we have been perpetually at war since the organization of the Government. And the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania, while both of us are men of peace, I apprehend has no special privilege to inform this committee that our grandchildren, if we have any, will never see war. We have no assurance that within twelve or twenty-four months we may not be at war with some of the great maritime powers of the world. In that event, as the gentleman from Indiana has stated, the harbors of our country would be practically defenseless, and the great harbor of New York would be at the mercy of a third or fourth rate power if its fleet was led by such a plucky and courageous man as Admiral Farragut.

Mr. BAKER. I desire to say to the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania that the expenditure of money in this direction, even the lavish expenditure of money whenever danger shall actually confront us, will be entirely valueless. I affirm here from some considerable investigation of this subject that if we were involved in war with any nation, not alone a first-class nation, but with even a third or fourth rate nation, it would be utterly impossible to put any one of our large commercial cities on the seaboard into anything like an adequate condition of defense against either destruction by bom-bardment or being put under tribute in order to avoid that ter-rible calamity—it would be utterly impossible to do it inside of two

These fortifications, Mr. Chairman, even if they are made of iron, have got to be of immense thickness. A two-thousand-pound shot—and there are many guns belonging to nations that are not first-class have got to be of immense thickness. A two-thousand-pound shot—and there are many guns belonging to nations that are not first-class that hurl a shot of a ton weight, and are effective at a distance of five or six miles—will plow through an earthwork, when fresh and loose, more than thirty feet; and even when compacted it ought to be of not less than forty feet in thickness.

And, let me say, the manufacture of these guns even in such an establishment as the Boston one I have referred to is a work that requires time. But I am not urging to-day, Mr. Chairman, (but am combating the feeling that I find quite strong on the democratic side of the House,) the policy in these expiring hours of this Congress and this Administration of entering wildly into a large expenditure of money for this object that I believe is so important and so desirable.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) Or increasing appropriations this session for any other object.

Mr. BAKER. I think the appropriations ought to remain substantially as they are, and I have been endeavoring to show why they ought not to be increased at this time; and, at the risk of being a little tedious, I desire to repeat again that if we shall enter upon the construction, as suggested by my friend from New York, of eight of these immense guns, we settle first the policy that instead of using the steel gun, such as European experience has demonstrated to be the best, we shall use the cast-iron gun with only a wrought-iron tube of three inches in thickness inside of the cast gun. It would settle that policy; because when we have not additional money necessaries. tube of three inches in thickness inside of the cast gun. It would settle that policy; because when we have once induced a single private establishment to invest the large sum of additional money necessary to procure plant from Europe, so that it shall put a large additional force of men at work to construct these guns, we would be committed, not only to the form of gun, but in addition to that we would be prompted to continue, for a series of years, our appropriations; because these parties would come here and, with justice, too, would say that on the faith that they reposed in the American Congress they invested their money, and were entitled to fair treatment at the hands of this Congress and of its successors.

For that reason, Mr. Chairman, I would not involve the country in that experiment now; but I do affirm, and my conviction is fixed, that one of the highest duties of statesmanship, in my judgment, is to put this country in such a position of defense both as respects to put this country in such a position of defense both as respects guns and fortifications as that no petty foreign power shall be able to ravage our coasts and to lay the commerce of our cities under

One thing further, and then I believe I shall have done. There is recommended a sum of $117,600 for testing and trying five experimental guns that were manufactured some years ago. We have not recommended a sum of $117,600 for testing and trying five experimental guns that were manufactured some years ago. We have not appropriated for that purpose. Although it may properly come into this bill, it really belongs in the Army bill. And I am opposed to reporting it for this reason: Congress, whether wisely or unwisely, has forced upon the Ordnance Department of the Government the construction of certain classes of guns. For instance, they have adopted these twelve-inch guns, weighing fifty-two tons each and having a bore of seventeen feet in length, and instead of making them of steel make them of cast-iron with a wrought-iron tube inside; and I confess I can see no reason why we should appropriate money for the purpose of testing these five experimental guns until we have determined that we will bring forward and consider this whole subject of guns in something like a systematic and statesmanlike manner.

I now yield to my friend from Maine, [Mr. REED.]
Mr. REED. How much time is there left of the gentleman's hour?

The CHAIRMAN. Fifteen minutes.

Mr. BAKER. If my friend prefers, I will consider my hour closed and let him take the floor in his own right.

Mr. REED. Either way would satisfy me; though fifteen minutes will probably cover all the time I desire to occupy.

will probably cover all the time I desire to occupy.

Mr. BAKER. Very well.

Mr. REED. If the matter to be discussed by this House to-day were contained in the bill now before the House, I should not trouble gentlemen by any observation of mine. I am informed, however, that the Committee on Military Affairs, or individual members of it, propose to move two amendments to this bill which, in my judgment, will give some life and some point to it.

The first is an amendment to appropriate $500,000 for building fortifications, and a similar or a larger sum for furnishing the same with fications, and a similar or a larger sum for furnishing the same with ordnance. As the matter now stands this country is in a condition as to its sea-coast defenses which, taking into account its financial condition, is disgraceful in the extreme. As long as we were struggling with a situation that might show a deficit in our revenues as compared with our expenditures, we could perhaps neglect a duty which seems to me to be obvious, the duty of providing for the defense of the country. But now, with a large surplus revenue, we can afford to look our situation fairly in the face.

Our sea-coast from one end to the other cannot now be defended against the navies of second and third rate European powers. To-day our best defended harbors can be entered by the war ships of Europe, safely to themselves and with the utmost injury to us.

For the defense of the city in which I live there are three forts, four or five even, including the outworks, which are in various stages of completion. Those which are the nearest completion are probably the most useless. One of them, situated in the inner harbor, is built upon the plan of Fort Samter, and against a well-equipped iron-clad ship is to-day useless. The others, which are also somewhat near completion, would be unable to take care of a ship of the class to which I refer. And beyond that, such has been the increase of range of modern guns that a ship of war of the first class could lie beyond the reach of the guns of any one of those forts and shell the city and capture it in due time. Now, it is proposed to construct forts (and they have been laid out and work begun upon them) whose guns will reach vessels stationed in such a position as I have indicated. But for the last four years Congress has declined to appropriate for the fortifications of this country money enough to even keep them in their present dilapidated condition.

It seems to me that we must meet the possibility of war happening within the life-time of persons now living. But even, as our Speaker has suggested, if it is going to happen only in the time of our grand-children, yet taking into consideration the possibility that it may happen during the period extending from now until the time of our grand-children, it is worth while for us to face the question of the danger if we are to meet it. If the chance be but one in fifty, and we can meet the chance of the destruction of hundreds and thousands of millions of dollars by the expenditure of five or six millions then we can meet the chance of the destruction of hundreds and thousands of millions of dollars by the expenditure of five or six millions, then by that expenditure we will fairly meet the chances against us.

Mr. BAKER. Will the gentleman allow me a moment?

Mr. REED. Certainly.

Mr. BAKER. Is not the gentleman aware that any adequate fortification and armament would involve perhaps six times the amount be engagets?

he suggests?
Mr. REED. Six times four millions?

Mr. BAKER. Yes.
Mr. REED. I have no doubt of it. And when I come to that point in the regular order of my remarks I propose to say something about it.

I desire now to say that our present condition is defenseless, and the question comes up how we shall meet it? There are various ways that have been suggested. In the first place, it may be said that a foreign nation can land troops at a distance from our fortifications and in that way capture the cities those fortifications are intended to defend. But all that takes time, and we can meet a land force with a land force. We cannot watch a navel force with an army of observation; or even if we could it would require in a single year the expenditure of as much money as my friend from Indiana [Mr. Baker] says will be necessary for the construction of the necessary fortifications. fortifications.

Can we meet that difficulty with a navy? The first answer, which is conclusive for the present, is that we have not got any navy. And for the future it will cost more to provide a navy such as we need to meet such an emergency than it will cost for fortifications.

But no navy can be ubiquitous. Every nation that depends entirely upon its navy, especially with a coast extending thousands of miles, must take the chance of the enemy's navy not meeting theirs.

So we have but one way in which to meet this question, and that is by the construction of forts. Modern science in the matter of fortifications has kept pace with modern science in the matter of ordnance. To-day forts can be built that will be impervious to any ordnance that can be brought against them upon war ships, because forts can be casemated with iron in the same way that ships can be, with this tremendous advantage, that you cannot sink a fort as you can a ship by the weight of its armor.

We are brought down, then, to the question what we shall do now.

What we must do ultimately seems to me clear beyond doubt or peradventure. What shall we do now I I confess that I am convinced by the argument of the gentleman from Indiana that we ought to go to work at once. If it will take a great while to do these things, the sooner we begin the sooner the work will be accomplished. And for my part, although I accept, as a possible member of the next Congress, the touching tribute which he has paid to their probable wisdom, I think that in all probability we are just as wise to-day as those gentlemen who are to succeed us in the future; and I think the Engineer Corps is just as capable to-day of meeting this question as it is going to be after the first Monday of next December. I think also that, in view of the length of time it always takes to get the people stirred up to a necessity like this, the sooner we commence the better for us and the better for the nation that we represent.

For tide the better for the nation that we represent.

Fortifications for the defense of our principal cities will render them impregnable, and will put us in such a position that we shall be likely to be preserved from war with foreign countries, so that not even our grandchildren may have to suffer from that danger. Everybody knows in the experience of life that being prepared is the greatest protection in the world, and, I have no doubt, there are some gentlemen before me who have had the experience of keeping out of difficulties simply because they were supposed to be equal to them if they got into them.

Mr. Chairman, this matter seems to me plain; it seems to me to be in a nut-shell. We can for a sum of money which compared with the resources of this nation is trifling put ourselves in a condition of defense, a condition of safety; and although the chances of war are small, (nobody wishes them smaller than Ido,) nevertheless such are the passions of mankind that we are liable to war, and liable to it just when we are thinking that nobody but our descendants are going to suffer in that way. I submit that we ought to seize the opportunity of our large revenues to accomplish this most desirable, useful, and valuable work. and valuable work.

Mr. ELLIS. Mr. Chairman, that I represent a seaboard city, or one which can be easily reached from the sea and is utterly defenseless, must be my apology for intruding upon the House what I have now

It has been admitted by the gentleman in charge of this bill [Mr. Baken] that our sea-coasts are absolutely defenseless. Fifteen thousand miles of sea-coast, embracing great cities, commencing with Bangor and Portland on the Atlantic coast, and ending with San Fran-sand miles of sea-coast, embracing great citates, commencing with bancisco on the Pacific, are absolutely and utterly defenseless.

The Chief of Ordnance, General Benét, told me on Saturday that the largest gun in position in New York Harbor is a twenty-inch smooth-bore gun, incapable of penetrating ten inches of iron armor; and I have before me a carefully prepared list of the vessels of foreign navies, showing that there are over seventy vessels of war which are plated with more than ten inches of iron, and that in case of war which are plated with more than ten inches of iron, and that in case of war with either of these nations—Austria, Brazil, Denmark, England, France, Germany, Italy, Norway, Sweden, Russia, Spain, or Turkey—a man-of-war from either of them could ride safely into New York Harbor without being injured at all by a single gun now placed there, and could levy upon that city a contribution one hundred times as great as the Chief of Ordnance asks for the making of great guns to defend that and other important positions.

But the gentleman in charge of this bill says that now is no time to consider this question; that this is an expiring Congress; that a new Administration is coming in, and if any change of policy is needed it can be inaugurated under that new Administration. Why, Mr. Chairman, when will the time come for the consideration of this important measure? Every warning of experience, every voice of hisportant measure? Every warning of experience, every voice of history tells us that in time of peace we should prepare for war, and that the best ambassadors for peace are coasts perfectly defended, an army in perfect condition, and a navy capable of competing with the navies of the world. When will the time come when we can consider this question? The Appropriations Committee need not have reported this bill now. If they needed more time for deliberation, they could have withheld it until January or even February. This is a very important question; and there is time for consideration. Will they wait until war comes? Will they wait until the peace of our skies is disturbed by the tempest of war? Will they wait until some foreign man-of-war in New York Bay or Boston Harbor, or in the turgid waters of the Mississippi, or in some other bay or river fronting our great cities, shall levy tribute on those cities or burn them down? I ask any man representing a seaport city whether he could face his people in that hour when they were gathering their money and their jewels and doing what they might to save their city from desolation? I ask this Appropriations Committee how they would face the people in such an emergency. [Mr. Sparks made a portant measure? Every warning of experience, every voice of hiswould face the people in such an emergency. [Mr. Sparks made a remark in his seat.] I ask this gentleman who interrupts me, and who securely dwells in the bosom of Illinois, more than a thousand miles from the sea-coast, I ask him how he would account to the country for his position upon this question?

Mr. SPARKS. I beg the gentleman's pardon. I did not interrupt him. My remark was addressed to another gentleman.

Mr. ELLIS. I beg the gentleman's pardon. I thought it was a

Mr. ELLIS. I beg the gentleman's pardon. I thought it was a hostile interruption.

Mr. BARBER. Has the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ELLIS] had his attention called to the newspaper accounts of a torpedo-gun lately perfected by Captain Ericsson, which promises to revolutionize the whole system of coast defenses?

Mr. ELLIS. I have seen some account of a new torpedo that has been invented by him, but as high authority as General Benét and as distinguished authority as General Gillmore, in charge of the Atlantic defenses, have declared that a torpedo is no defense at all unless defenses, have declared that a torpedo is no defense at all unless there be guns in position to protect it, because a vessel of war simply comes up and removes the torpedo unless it is protected by such guns.

Mr. COX. I hope my friend from Louisiana if he has General Gillmore's letter will have it printed in the RECORD as part of his speech.

Mr. ELLIS. I have it here, and, with the consent of the House, will insert it in my remarks.

Mr. ELLIS. I have to here, and, with the consent of the House, will insert it in my remarks.

Mr. COX. It is absolutely irrefragable.

Mr. ELLIS. I ask permission to print the letter of General Gillmore as a part of my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection.

The letter is as follows:

HABBOR DEFENSE—THE REQUIREMENTS OF ADEQUATE PROTECTION—CAPTAIN ERICSSON'S NEW WRAPON AND ITS LIMITATIONS—PERMANENT FORTS SUPPLEMENTED BY CHANNEL TORPEDOES THE ONLY PERFECT SAFEGUARD.

To the Editor of the Tribune :

Six: Some newspaper criticisms upon the method of harbor defense advocated by the Chief of Engineers of the Army have recently appeared which are deemed to be so essentially illogical and unsound as to demand notice. It is asserted: (1) That some authorities would place their whole dependence upon lines of channel torpedees; (2) that others would trust to nothing but hastily constructed earthworks to meet an expected naval attack, and that our late was settled the fact that such works are better than fortifications of iron and stone; (3) and that still others regard an iron-clad navy as the only sure and safe defense. These several points will be briefly discussed in the order named.

First, the requirements of a good defense are determined by the character and magnitude of the attack. This is especially the case in artillery combats between shore batteries and fleets. If an enemy brings heavy cannon against us we must protect our guns from heavy shot or they will soon be destroyed. And if his vessels also carry thick defensive armor we are forced to use heavy projectiles or our defense is worthless, for, where a large gun is needed to deliver a crushing blow, no possible accumulation of smaller guns will answer instead. Cumulative force implies unity of mass and impact. A thousand pounds of grape-shot, even if fired as one volley, can be stopped by a one-inch steel plate, but if sent as a single bolt it will shatter the best twelve-inch armor.

Having the heavy guns so mounted as to be suitably protected from destruction by the enemy's fire, let us add another condition, that these guns shall have time to do their proper work; that is, that the hostile flest cannot run past them without stopping, but will be arrested by torpedees or some other channel obstruction, and we have the whole theory and practice of modern harbor defense by fortifications and their accessories. It is a popular error, supported by no experience and by no authority either military or naval, which assumes that a defense by torpedoes however perfect in itself, can stand alone. To be of any use the torpodoes must be protected from removal by the enemy, the best and cheapes; protection yet deviaes the protected from removal by the enemy, the best and cheapes; protection yet deviaes the protection of the cannot be protected from the protection of the than ever before, were supplied with iros shutters to stop grape, canister, and riffe bullets. General Totten, late Chief of Engineers, deemed this precaution necessary in order that the cannoniers, even in casemates, might be able to stand to their guns.

The lessons of our civil war, and of all modern wars, so far from justifying a recourse to earthwork for channel defense, all point the other way. At Fort Royal our fleet, although composed of wooden vessels only, drove the garrisons precipitately from their works on both sides of the harbor. In the operations before Charleston it was no uncommon sight to see the New Ironsides alone allence the fire of Fort Wagner (a very strong earthwork) so that the work in the trenches could proceed unmolested; and on our western waters running a battery became almost an every-day occurrence, the important question in such cases being whether the channel itself was free from obstruction. A good defense, therefore, against armored vessels of modern type requires that the batteries shall be armed with heavy guns, that the guns shall be protected from the enemy's fire, and that the auxiliary defense by channel torpedoes shall be of such magnitude that no vessel can actempt to run the gauntlet through them without incurring the most imminent risk of destruction. A defense of this potential character—a defense designed quite as much to prevent an attack as to defeat it—is a most powerful conservator of the national peace. Indeed, the true office of permanent defenses is to avert war. They are the guardians rather than the champions of the public good, and of the lives and substance of the people.

Third. The idea that an "iron-clad navy" alone will furnish a sure defense is both attractive and popular; but it is one which finds no practical existence even among naval powers. Its truth as a theory is freely admitted, because a barbor fleet, if as powerful as the enemy's, would be expected to make, and no doubt would make, a good defense. But a the very best in that case the chan

These maxims exclude a defense by naval means wherever shore batteries are applicable, and point to the necessity of depending mainly upon those agencies, exclusively our own, which are always able to keep the enemy at a disadvantage, to wit, permanent forts, which he cannot mainly with him, and channel torpedoes, which he cannot employ.

The auxiliary use at important localities of torpedo boats, rams, submarine artillery, and other forms of naval power, will not be discussed here at any length. It may be said, however, that these forces being affoat may be largely neutralized by others of like nature from beyond the seas. The main reliance, after all, must therefore beupon shore batteries and channel torpedoes, and the combined strength of these must be as great as if no auxiliary aid were employed. Otherwise, when the auxiliaries fail—as they would if we possessed less strength affoat than the enemy—no adequate defense would remain and the position would be lost.

Army Building, New York, November 22, 1880.

ARMY BUILDING, NEW YORK, November 22, 1880.

Mr. ELLIS. Now, Mr. Chairman, such being the condition of our sea-coasts, what is our duty as Representatives here? We have an intelligent corps of engineers, we have intelligent ordnance officers who have charge of the defenses of the country, or of organizing the defense of the country, and it is our duty to support them and to give them the money which is necessary to completely arm our coasts. Now is the time to begin, and I for one shall give my voice and my vote and my influence for supporting and maintaining the engineer and ordnance corps of the United States so as perfectly to protect all our coasts and all our great cities.

My friend from Indiana, [Mr. Baker,] in charge of this bill, declares that we may commence this work some time in the future, and yet we are told that it requires sixteen months to make a single twelve-inch rifled gun to penetrate twenty-five inches of armor. Why,

Mr. Chairman, the more reason we should increase this appropriation, for it is impossible to tell when war will break out.

Mr. BAKER. The gentleman from Louisiana will pardon me, but did he say I spoke of a twelve-inch rifled gun capable of penetrating twenty-five inches of armor?

Mr. ELLIS. I am informed by General Benét that the twelve-inch rifled gun now under contract, and the first one of which is to be delivered in about sixteen months, will penetrate twenty-five inches of iron armor.

Mr. BAKER. Iron armor?
Mr. ELLIS. Yes, sir. Now, if it requires sixteen months to make these guns, I see the more and the greater reason why we should increase this appropriation, because it is in the infrequency and uncertainty if the property of the pr tainty of these appropriations that is found the great delay in making the guns—because no institution in the United States can afford to import the plant and construct the machinery necessary to make these great guns from the infrequency and uncertainty of these appropriations.

We ought to have, whether under the auspices of the Government or conducted by private enterprise and capital, in the United States works complete in every department, keeping pace with the constant improvements in the machinery of war, and capable of turning out all the guns and all the ordnance stores we need for the purpose of our defense. I would not only vote to increase this appropriation, but I would go further; I would vote to make it a permanent appropriation, in order that the conductors of these private enterprises or the Government itself might erect great workshops, with every means and appliance, so that all the materials for the defense of the country could be rapidly perfected as they are needed.

In regard to the condition of our fortifications, listen to what the Chief of Engineers has to say. First, in regard to Fort Schuyler, on the East River in New York, in charge of Lieutenant-Colonel H. L.

Abbot, Corps of Engineers, he says:

The sum asked ($150,000) is urgently needed to complete the extension of the barbette tier of the main work and other modifications designed to give room for a modern armament, and to complete the exterior earthen battery. Time is essential to this work and if left until the breaking out of war the position could not be preperly defended.

Again, he says in regard to the fort on Willets Point, eastern entrance to New York Harbor, in charge of Lieutenant-Colonel H. L. Abbot, Corps of Engineers:

Abbot, Corps of Engineers:

The military necessity of resuming work at once at this locality cannot too strongly be urged. The steady improvement of the channel through Hell Gate, the rapid extension of the city of New York toward the upper end of the island, bringing property of immense value within range of bombardment by any fleet passing the lime defended by Fort Schuyler and the fort on Willets Point, and the fact that these batteries are in a state to render a great increase of strength possible with comparatively small expenditures, should make this channel perhaps the first in the United States to receive attention. It will be a fatal mistake to suppose either that the work can be done promptly at the beginning of a war or that the channel can be effectively closed by torpedoes in the present state of the forts. Since the site is contracted, only a limited force can work to advantage; the gun platforms should rest on concrete, which will require time to harden, and which cannot be safely laid in freezing weather. Time for preparation is therefore a necessity.

Whose voice shall we heed if we do not heed his voice who is

Whose voice shall we heed if we do not heed his voice who is

Whose voice shall we heed if we do not heed his voice who is charged with completing and perfecting these works of defense? The same is the case in regard to our fortifications for the protection of other great cities and other great interests of the United States.

But we are told by my distinguished friend, the Speaker of the House, we have no war and that it is likely we will not get into a war. Why, what man can say we will not be involved in war within the next week? We are reminded of the remark made by the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. McCook] that we have been engaged in a war every six months within the history of our national life. Although we are not involved in any complication at present ourselves, yet the skies are not clear and cloudless. There a speck of war between the two great nations of Northern Europe There is Russia and Germany—which may burst forth at any moment. Ireland, poor old Ireland, is about to be made again to writhe in anguish upon the scalpel-board of British policy and British experiment. There is a fierce and stubborn war now waging between two of our sister republics of South America, and Cuba, the dependent of Spain, fires upon our commerce every two months with impunity.

I hope when the new Administration comes in it will cease to listen to apologies, and inaugurate a policy that will teach the nations of the earth that it will protect American commerce and American sea-men wherever its flag floats.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have said about all I desire to say upon this question. I earnestly press it upon the attention of members of this House generally, upon every Representative here who has among his constituency a city the walls of which are washed by the waters of constituency a city the waits of which are washed by the waters of the ocean or the rivers that flow into the sea. I now yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Texas, [Mr. Reagan.] Mr. REAGAN. Mr. Chairman, as I desire, when the proper line of this bill is reached, to offer an amendment which I may not be able to explain satisfactorily within the five minutes allowed for debate, I avail myself of the present opportunity to offer it, and also at this time to make a few comments upon it. It is to provide for the commencement of the construction of batteries for the protection of the harbor of Galveston, Texas, the sum of $50,000.

I desire to call the attention of the members of this House to this case. In the first place, Mr. Chairman, I observe that there is no city within my knowledge in the Union with such a commerce, population, and business, and situated immediately upon the sea-coast as this is,

which is so entirely without any means of defense.

For the fiscal year ending 30th of June, 1879, the commerce of that city, its exports and imports, amounted to over $50,000,000. While I have not the statement of the commerce for the year ending 30th of June, 1880, I am furnished with a statement from the office of the collector of customs showing that the customs duties within that year have increased about 800 per cent. over what they were for the year I have just named. Galveston is a point upon the sea where a system of three thousand miles of railroad, or about three thousand miles, converges from all points in the interior toward the sea-coast. It is the chief entrepot of a territory in that State alone, leaving out the bordering States of New Mexico, the Indian Territory, and Kansas, and limiting the statement to the State of Texas alone, it is the chief entrepôt of a territory as large as the six New England States, the States of New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Delaware, Ohio, and a part of Indiana. It is the chief entrepôt for a population shown by the late census to be in the neighborhood of one million six hundred thousand inhabitants; and yet, sir, there is not a battery or a gun to protect its commerce.

The city of Galveston is located immediately upon the Gulf of Mexico, on an island in the gulf, and might, by any vessel of war, be burned at any time in its present defenseless condition.

It is said, and very truly, that we are not at war. It is to be hoped, Mr. Chairman, that we are not likely to be engaged in war; but when we remember that the commerce and intercourse of the American people is growing in its importance, and in its complications, too, day by day, and year after year, and that throughout the commercial world questions are continually arising which might involve us in difficulties with foreign powers, is it not the part of wisdom and prudence to be prepared for an emergency? The part of wisdom, if we are governed by the experience of our fathers, is to be prepared in advance for a contingency that might arise, and for such a contingency as a foreign war.

The item I have enumerated contemplates an appropriation of $50,000 to commence the construction of earthen batteries for mountng a few guns to give at least temporary protection in cases of trouble. It is not contemplated to enter upon the construction by the Engineer Bureau of expensive fortifications upon the old plan, but only to commence the construction of a few earth-batteries, to mount guns of smitable caliber upon them, and to prepare them to meet the naval armaments as they are now improved by other powers as well as our own. I ought to say, too, in this connection that by the 1st of January a year, and perhaps sooner, the Southern Pacific and the Texas Pacific Railroads will effect their junction at El Paso on the Rio Grande River, and a new line of railroad temporatation as well as a new artery River, and a new line of railroad transportation as well as a new artery of commerce will be established across the continent. The neares point at which ocean navigation can be found will be on the gulf coast of Texas. It is proper and fair to assume that the completion of these two important roads, their junction, and others being rapidly constructed, will very largely increase the commerce and commercial importance of that city.

In addition to that, active movements are on foot looking to the construction of an interoceanic canal across the Isthmus. That may or may not be accomplished. It may be accomplished at an earlier or a later day. But if it should be accomplished, the probabilities or a later day. But it is should be accomplished, the probabilities are it would work very considerable revolutions in the world's commerce; and in any event it is likely it will bring responsibilities upon the American people in reference to protecting that line of transit and protecting American interests and commerce that we have not heretofore encountered. I look myself upon it as a measure which requires the most thoughtful consideration by our people and the most secure guarantees for the command of that line by us if it is entered into. But I merely mention it as one of the possible things that may render our connections with the foreign powers of the world more complicated than they have been in the past. I wish now to repeat what I said at the outset, that there is no other city in the Union, so far as I know, with a similar amount of commerce and population and wealth, that has not some measure of protection. The appropriations in the bill look to the preservation and improvement of works already in existence, and not to the construction of any new work. In view of the facts I have stated, is it the policy of the House to refuse absolutely to aid in furnishing batteries—earthen batteries—for the protection of that city and its commerce? Remembering that from the mouth of the Mississippi to the mouth of the Rio Grande the sea coast for a distance of eight or nine hundred miles is without a single fort for its protection and defense, a country rapidly growing in population, in wealth, and in general importance, it is these facts that I desire to call to the attention of the House, to see if they will not make this at least an exception to the general policy of refusing to commence any new work for our defense

It is suggested by the gentleman who presents the bill on behalf of the committee that this is not the time in the expiring term of an Administration to commence works of this kind. Mr. Chairman, I do not understand the philosophy of that remark. Congress represents the people, and is bound to look to the promotion of their interests and the defense of their rights. When a thing is necessary to be done I do not see that one Congress or one session of a Congress may not as well do it as another, whether it is an outgoing session of a Congress or a first session of a new Administration. I do not see how that consideration should control our action if there is a plain, palpable necessity for action. And I ask the House if in their judgment that is so, when we reach the point for offering this amendment, to aid me in securing its adoption.

Mr. ELLIS. I now yield to my colleague from Louisiana, [Mr.

KING.

Mr. KING. In addressing a few words to the committee I am actuated simply by the wish to raise my voice and the voice of the people I represent in the advocacy of a measure to provide a more secure protection to our cities on the sea-coast and the cities in the interior. Our coast is utterly undefended. As regards the city of New Orleans alone a single iron-clad could levy tribute on that city more than tenfold or a hundred-fold the sum asked by the Secretary of War for the purposes indicated.

The fortifications at the mouth of the Mississippi River have no guns greater than ten-inch smooth-bores. Sir, a Mexican schooner, iron plated, could pass those fortifications and levy tribute not only upon the city of New Orleans, but upon the cities of Vicksburgh, Memphis, Saint Louis, ay, and Cincinnati. But our Government as good as tells us there is no measure in contemplation for the protection of

You have a Pacific coast extending over eighteen hundred miles. One of the ships of the power to-day at war with an antagonistic nation on the lower end of the Pacific coast of this hemisphere could enter the bay of San Francisco and could go into Portland, Oregon, without opposition. Yet we are assured that we are extravagant in asking for $400,000 to institute means by which protection shall be afforded against such dangers as may occur. I am not only willing to vote more, but I am willing to increase the appropriation that I understand will be asked for to double the amount.

I do not think because we are at peace that we should feel over-secure. Only a few months ago Spanish vessels fired into our mer-chantmen in the Caribbean Sea. Had the Government of Spain de-termined at that time upon war her ships could have entered the ports of the cities of Norfolk and Charleston; yes, and come up to the wharves of Philadelphia. Under these circumstances, sir, I think the appropriation that the committee recommend is inadequate.

The CHAIRMAN. If other gentlemen do not desire to continue the general debate the Chair will now ask the Clerk to read the bill by clauses for amendment.

The Clerk read the first clause of the bill, as follows:

That the sum of $100,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the protection, preservation, and repair of fortifications and other works of defense, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 18-2, the same to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War; also, the following for the armament of fortifications, namely.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I am instructed by the Committee on Military Affairs to offer an amendment to the section which has just been read. I send the amendment to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 3 strike out "1" and insert "5;" in line 5, before the word "protection," insert the word "modification;" in line 9, after the word "war," insert "at the most important and exposed harbor;" so that the clause will read:

"That the sum of $500,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the modification, protection, preservation, and repair of fortifications and other works of defense, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1829, the sum to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War, at the most important and exposed harbors; also, the following for the armament of fortifications, namely."

Mr. BLOUNT. I raise the question of order on a portion of this amendment; on the insertion of the word "modification" in line 5, as changing existing law.

Mr. REAGAN. I cannot understand the basis on which the point of order is made from the bare statement of it.

Mr. BLOUNT. All the appropriations for fortifications are made

Mr. BLOUNT. All the appropriations for fortifications are made in pursuance of existing law, and there is no law providing for the modification of such fortifications. The point of order that this is without authority of law is made under the twenty-first rule.

Mr. REAGAN. I understand that appropriations cannot be made without authority of law. But it will be seen that this amendment provides the sum of $500,000 for the modification, protection, and repair of fortifications and other works of defense, and is therefore merely for continuing existing works. That seems to me to meet the objection that this amendment relates to works not provided for by law. The rule would seem to cover the modification and improvement of such works. Aside from that, however, this is called a bill ment of such works. Aside from that, however, this is called a bill making appropriations for fortifications, and the item here proposed corresponds with the estimate submitted by the War Department for this purpose. It seems to me that on both grounds the point of order is not well taken.

Mr. BLOUNT. It is not necessary for me to add any more.

Mr. McCOOK. I would like the gentleman to do something more than to merely state his point of order. I would like to have him give some reason for it.

Mr. BLOUNT. I have already stated, and I will restate it, that Mr. BLOUNT. I have already stated, and I will restate it, that the construction of fortifications must be authorized by law before the Committee on Appropriations, under the twenty-first rule of this House, can report any appropriation for that purpose.

Mr. McCOOK. Very well; suppose that I concede that.

Mr. BLOUNT. As the gentleman has requested, I will again state that the amendment now proposed to this bill is not for the repair of fortifications, but for their modification, to change the construction previously authorized by law. To illustrate: we might make appropriations for repairs upon this Capitol. But suppose there was a purpose to change the structure, to modify the plan of the Capitol; that would be a very different proposition. So it is with regard to fortifications. If you attempt to modify them, you will go beyond the idea of repairs and adapt them to different purposes and to different idea of repairs and adapt them to different purposes and to different circumstances. It will be practically making an entirely new struct-

Mr. McCOOK. I have no disposition to attempt to argue this point of order. But it seems to me it is a forced and arbitrary construction of that portion of Rule XXI, when the gentleman says that "modification" means "construction."

Now let me illustrate for one moment. Suppose that in one of the forts in the harbor of New York, placed there primarily and solely for the defense of that harbor, but of interest not only to the people of New York but of the whole nation—suppose there had been a faulty construction of a portion of the fort, as determined clearly by a board construction of a portion of the fort, as determined clearly by a board of engineers. It would be the duty of that board of engineers to remedy that faulty construction by modifying it so as to make the fort answer the purpose for which it was originally intended.

Are we to understand that an appropriation to be used for the modification of the faulty construction of a necessary fort in the harbor of New York is to be ruled out upon a point of order in this technical way.

nical way? As I have already said, I do not pretend to know much about the rules of this House; but I certainly want to know less if they are to be abused, as in my judgment they will be abused, by ruling out in this way an amendment considered necessary by a committee of this House. For that reason I do not believe that the point of order is well taken.

Mr. ACKLEN. Clause 3 of Rule XXI reads:

No appropriation shall be reported in any general appropriation bill, or be in order as an amendment thereto, for any expenditure not previously authorized by law, unless in continuation of appropriations for such public works and objects as are already in progress. Nor shall any provision in any such bill or amendment thereto changing existing law be in order.

The word "modification" in this proposed amendment, I take it, looks to some change not contemplated in any existing law. I am not advised as to whether it is intended by the insertion of the word "modification" to give to the Secretary of War the right to change the construction of the present existing cannon that are used in the fortifications of our harbor defenses. It occurs to me that he would not, unless this word should be inserted in this bill, be authorized, for instance, to contract for the changing of our smooth-bore cannon into rifled cannon. On that point the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Johnston] who reports this amendment can probably advise the House. If that is the idea in view, in my opinion the point of order raised by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Blount] is very well

Mr. JOHNSTON. In reference to the force which the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] gives to the word "modification," I think I can in three or four words explain to the House what it means in this connection.

Every one knows what casemates are, and what are the embrosures of those casemates, through which the guns are pointed to be fired. This appropriation will be mainly to enlarge those casemates. Every one knows that our forts were constructed at times when artillery had not a quarter of its present dimensions. The largest guns were then very much smaller than the smallest that are now called heavy ordnance, and the embrasures were of course proportioned to the size of the guns. The forts that we have now along our whole coasts all have embrasure batteries, and there is not one of those embrasures through which guns of proper size can be pointed. The object of inserting this word "modification" in this clause is to enable the Engineer Corps to do more than merely to prevent the destruction of forts, mainly by the action of sea-water encroaching upon their founda-

Mr. ACKLEN. Is it in contemplation to change any cannon in any

Mr. JOHNSTON. This clause refers entirely to the Engineer Department; act to the Ordnance Department.

Mr. ACKLEN. I understand that. But I desire to inquire, if the proposed change is made in this paragraph, whether the Secretary of War would be authorized to change smooth-bores into rifled cannon?

Mr. JOHNSTON. Not at all, because this paragraph does not refer in any way to ordnance. It is the next paragraph that refers to ord-

Mr. REAGAN. I desire to call attention, in connection with the point of order, to these words in the third clause of Rule XXI:

Unless in continuation of appropriations for such public works and objects as are already in progress.

Those words, in my opinion, settle the point of order so far as this amendment is concerned.

Mr. BRAGG. It seems to me that the point of order upon the word "modification" is not well taken. It is assumed that by the use of the word modification we violate that provision of Rule XXI which allows only such amendments to be made as are for the purpose of continuing some public work, and that by the use of the word "modiwe will authorize the construction of some public work not fication" we will authorize the construction of some public work not yet authorized by law.

The reason I say that the point is not well taken is that the word "modification," as I think, implies no such meaning as is given to it by the gentleman who makes the point of order. When by law we authorize a fortification to be made, we do not, in the bill making the appropriation, provide how many casemates it shall have, nor their size and proportion, nor what the thickness of its walls shall be; but we authorize, at a given point, a fortification to be constructed, under the direction of the Secretary of War, upon a plan made by the board of engineers. And when a modification of that plan is made there is no change whatever in the law authorizing the construction of the work; there is simply a change in the method of plan is made there is no change whatever in the law authorizing the construction of the work; there is simply a change in the method of construction—the plan of the work. When the law authorizes the construction of a fortification, a discretion as to the method of construction, the plan, is vested in the War Department and its bureaus, which are possibly designated for that purpose. So when we authorize in this bill an appropriation for the modification of the work, we make no law authorize a pay work; but we authorize a continu make no law authorizing a new work; but we authorize a continuance of the old work, and by special provision extend a discretion to the engineer to use the money in making a change of the plan of the work so as to make it more effective. This we do without authorizing any new work whatever.

As suggested by the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. Johnston,] the necessity of the term "modification" here is because the other terms have received by construction a certain significance. works means simply to put them in such a condition of preservation as to protect them against the inroads of water or of weather. But the term "modification" reaches the changes proposed by the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia, an amendment reported by direction of the Military Committee, and seeking to change the form of the casemates so as to fit them for receiving the new guns now being constructed by the Government to be placed in those identical forti-

Mr. BLOUNT. The gentleman from New York [Mr. McCook] objects to the rules, if they are such as I claim them to be, because of their technicality; because they obstruct public improvements. Sir, I think that the gentleman, if he will consider for one moment, will, instead of condemning the rule in question, approve the wisdom of instead of condemning the rule in question, approve the wisdom of the House in adopting it.

I say that no committee of this House, that no body charged with the appropriation of $175,000,000 to $200,000,000 ought to be allowed to recommend any other appropriations than those authorized by law. This very rule excludes from your committee-room all methods of jobbery; it excludes the discussion of all sorts of devices for expending the public treasure, and leaves the committee to act in accordance with the legislation of the country.

Mr. ELLIS. Are not all these fortifications authorized by law?

Mr. BLOUNT. I hope the gentleman will allow me to proceed.

Mr. ELLIS. I would like an answer to that question.

Mr. BLOUNT. I will answer it in due time. The question for us now to decide is simply whether or not there is authority at this time, under existing law, for the accomplishment of the purposes contemplated by this amendment. My friend from Texas [Mr. Rea-Gan] cites the provision of the rule—

GAN | cites the provision of the rule

No appropriation shall be reported in any general appropriation bill, or be in order as an amendment thereto, for any expenditure not previously authorized by law, unless in continuation of appropriations for such public works and objects as are already in progress.

This he considers conclusive of the question, although the very terms of the rule restrict us to works in progress, works incomplete. So far is his conclusion from being true that the very opposite is the Mr. REAGAN. Will the gentleman allow me? Mr. BLOUNT. I hope I shall not be interrupted.

Mr. REAGAN. I simply went upon the hypothesis that this amendment does not refer to the commencement of any work, but refers altogether to the continuance of existing works.

Mr. BLOUNT. My friend will have ample time to occupy the

Mr. REAGAN. I hope the gentleman merely wants to get at the truth. I simply called attention to the fact, upon which he has taken issue, that this is not a provision for new work. I ask the Chair, when he comes to rule upon the question, to look at the bill and see whether it is for any new work or not.

Mr. BLOUNT. Of course I am, like my friend from Texas, anxious to get at the truth; but when I am making a statement I like to conclude it; and when I have made my point I am willing for my friend to put in his view of the truth. I shall not object to any legitimate interruption.

Now, the gentleman says that he assumes all these works are already in progress. This amendment, as stated by the gentleman who offered it, is directed not to works in progress but to works completed, in reference to which there is a desire to enlarge casemates on account of the improvements in methods of warfare. The very gentleman who proposes the amendment states to the committee that such Therefore in my judgment there is no issue at all on is its purpose.

The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Bragg] says the original authorization of the work does not prescribe the method of its construc-tion. Conceding that, what does it amount to? If the work is completed the act authorizing its construction has exhausted itself; the work stands complete; and under the rule of this House an attempt to touch a work that is finished is just as much unauthorized in an appropriation bill as the authorization of a new work.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. Chairman, I very seldom engage in the discussion of points of order. It seems to me, however, that this question can be presented in a nutshell, and I desire to make that presentation. Either that word has some operation or effect, or it has not. If it was not intended to have any effect, it ought not to be there; and it is not fair for the Chair to give such an interpretation to the amendment as would make it nugatory. Now, if it is intended to have effect and operation, it must have that effect and operation by reason of the fact that it is intended to change that which now is authorized by law. If, already under the law as it exists, touching these fortifications, the War Department has the power, not simply to go on with the completion of these buildings, but to modify them unlimitedly in its discretion, then this amendment is not needed. But if, in order to give power to the War Department to make these radical changes in the construction of works now existing, it requires radical changes in the construction of works now calculate, there shall be a law, then the adoption of this would change existing law, thereby taking away a law now in existence or giving a new law which authorizes something which is not now authorized.

This word "modification," if the Chair pleases, would authorize the entire demolition of our works of fortification; the whole amount wight be available to a constitution in order they might be ready to the entire demolition of our works of fortification; the whole amount might be expended in the demolition in order they might be ready to go on with their modified fortifications. In a word, it seems to me the Chair must construe that word "modification" as intended to have effect. If it does have any effect, and does clothe the War Department with any power which now it has not, it is by virtue of the fact that it does change the law as it now exists.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will cause the third clause of Rule

XXI to be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

No appropriation shall be reported in any general appropriation bill, or be in order as an amendment thereto, for any expenditure not previously authorized by law, unless in continuation of appropriations for such public works and objects as are already in progress.

The CHAIRMAN. With the explanation made by the gentleman from Virginia as to the change of casemates, the Chair is somewhat in doubt as to how this point of order ought to be ruled. "It is the opinion that the Secretary of War has authority of law now to make such modifications as are indicated by the gentleman from Virginia. The Chair will give the benefit of the doubt to the amendment, and therefore, rule it in order. But the Chair will suggest to the gentleman from Georgia that the amendment might be further limited by an amendment to the amendment if there he any doubt about the an amendment to the amendment, if there be any doubt about the construction of the word which has been commented on.

Mr. JOHNSTON. It seems to me that the word "modification" is absolutely necessary to make it clear. The additional appropriation asked for would be entirely unnecessary without that word. There are certain slight alterations necessary to be made in our forts for harbor defense, to enable the heavy guns which have been introduced of late years to be placed in the casemates, and pointed through the embrasures, as the embrasures are now too small to admit those guns.

Mr. BAKER. I should like to ask the gentleman from Virginia a further question on that subject, and that is whether in his judgment the word he proposes to incorporate in that section would not authorize the Ordnance Department of the Army—

Mr. JOHNSTON. This is not ordnance.

Mr. BAKER. That is so—whether it would not authorize the Engineer Department not only to enlarge the embrasures but also to furnish iron or steel for the casemates of these fortifications?

Mr. JOHNSTON. It authorizes a change of the face—
Mr. BAKER. In other words, would it not authorize them to incorporate the policy of applying plates of steel or of iron.
Mr. JOHNSTON. Yes, sir.
Mr. BAKER. In a word, then, this word "modification" would be broad enough to authorize any change they thought fit to make?
Mr. JOHNSTON. No. sir. Mr. JOHNSTON. No, sir.

Mr. JOHNSTON. No, sir.

Mr. BAKER. Or to commence a system of change which may entirely revolutionize the structures now up?

Mr. JOHNSTON. If they are not revolutionized the hundreds of millions they have cost the country will be thrown away.

Mr. REAGAN. The gentleman from Virginia yields to let me say a word on that point. The point just made by the gentleman from Indiana, and which has been made on the word "modification," may be brought to attention very strikingly in this way. The authorization of the construction of forts is generally done under this bill, and, if it is assumed the law must precede the appropriation for a fort, would it be contended by gentlemen of the Appropriations Committee, or any member in the House familiar with the course of proceeding, that the law should specify, for instance, the casemate or embrasure, or any other detail. All we would do at the most would be to provide for the construction of a fortification and leave it then to the skill of the War Department.

the skill of the War Department.

Mr. JOHNSTON. That has been the practice of the Government for more than forty years.

Mr. BRAGG. Let me ask a question. Is there a single fortification in the United States in which can be mounted the four guns which the Appropriations Committee have already in process of con-

Mr. JOHNSTON. I am safe in saying not one.
Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) Mr. Chairman, under the cover of a fancied apprehension that this country is likely to be engaged in war with some foreign power, this House is asked to find justification for increase of expenditure on one of the regular appropriation bills.
The sincerity of that apprehension can be measured by the insignificance of the amount asked for, if there was any real belief that such apprehension existed.

Since I have occupied a seat in this House I have had some experience in reference to this question of armament. The suggested amendment in reference to ordnance may be found in the near future to provide for what may prove to be entirely useless in our forts and an unnecessary waste of the public money. The guns that I was asked to vote appropriations for ten years ago (and the same argument was then used that we have heard here to-day) are now considered by scientific men to be useless as weapons of defense. Nay, more, the experience of war has shown to us that the defenses as they were prior to the war are now and were during the war useless as a means of defense; and I can tell a remarkable instance of that in the case of Fort Sumter. Fort Sumter, after being battered, and battered, and fense; and I can tell a remarkable instance of that in the case of Fort Sumter. Fort Sumter, after being battered, and battered, and battered, was in a better condition of defense at the end of that assault than it was when the first gun was fired. Science travels so fast in our day that these very appropriations that are now asked for may become in a few years entirely useless even for purposes intended; and I want to say a little further that I had hoped the policy, not of this or of that side of the House, but that the policy of the whole House at this session of Congress would be to put its face sternly against any increase of appropriations for any nurpose. Both paragainst any increase of appropriations for any purpose. Both parties vied with each other in the recent contest in declaring to the people and endeavoring to instill it into the minds of their constitupeople and endeavoring to instill it into the minds of their constituents that it was the purpose of all those seeking to represent them in the Halls of Congress that the appropriations of money should not be increased. I know it is quite natural that defeat and disappointment on the one side and exultation and confidence of a new lease of power on the other should slacken the purposes of the Representatives as to the expenditures of the public money; but it should not be so, nor is there excuse for such action. This is the first appropriation bill of the session, and the policy of the House in a great measure may be indicated from this bill as to what may be expected on all the other appropriation hills. If we are not to pursue that nolicy the other appropriation bills. If we are not to pursue that policy of retrenchment and economy which we promised the people, we will, in my judgment, fail to come up to the agreement made when we sought re-election to this body.

Here is a proposition asking that we shall double nearly the amount Here is a proposition asking that we shall double nearly the amount the Committee on Appropriations recommend, and asking it for purposes that are not necessary. I repeat now what I said a few moments ago, that there is no danger from any direction of a foreign war. I would rather rely upon diplomacy. One gentleman tells us that Spain has recently committed an assault upon American vessels. Why, Mr. Chairman, Spain has made a full and ample apology therefor. Reference has also been made to the construction of a canal correct the Letherms of Paragraphy. across the Isthmus of Panama. Does the gentleman not know that the European financiers and European governments have refused to take any steps in reference to this canal unless it has the domination and sanction of the American people or Government? And do they not know that the European governments, in respect to the war now in progress in South America, have sought that the United States shall take the initiative step to bring about peace between Peru, Chili, and Bolivia. These governments in these respects have acknowledged practically the Monroe doctrine, and instead of undertaking to make peace themselves have first conferred officially with us, and have asked that this Government become the arbitrator beus, and have asked that this Government become the arbitrator between those countries, placing themselves thereby in the background. Mr. Chairman, I maintain that the apprehension which is claimed to exist here that we are to have a foreign war, and that thereby appropriations should be made that are not essential, and which will render a large increase in expenditures if the policy is persisted in, is not wise; and I appeal to this House without reference to party, because it should not be a party suggestion to meet this attempt to inis not wise; and I appeal to this House without reference to party, because it should not be a party question, to meet this attempt to increase the appropriations at the threshold of our action upon the appropriation bills. I appeal to the representatives of the people to prevent this policy from being inaugurated as the policy of this expiring House. If you want to increase the appropriations and the expenditures of the Government, let it rest with those who come with renewed confidence from the people. Moreover, the policy of this Government is to diminish the burdens of our present debt rather than to build up unnecessary armaments. Our policy should be to take off all taxation that we can take off, modify our revenue and our internal taxation laws, and relieve the people, instead of taking steps which will increase the burdens. I think by such a course we will all commend ourselves to the further confidence of our constituents.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that this debate has been carried on by consent, and there being no objection the Chair has not heretofore enforced the five-minute rule. Unless there be objection to continuing the debate the Chair will allow it to proceed.

Mr. REED. I think it unfortunate, Mr. Chairman, for the House and the country—

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. Chairman, I wish to make an objection to continuing this debate longer except under the five-minute rule.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. Chairman, I understood that I had a few minutes when this debate should come up under the amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia is entitled to occupy five minutes. If he desires, he can occupy the five minutes now, for or against the amendment.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I do not think I will occupy that much time.

Mr. REED. Then I will yield and follow the gentleman from Virginia.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Reagan] makes the point of order that the debate is to be conducted under the five-minute rule.

Mr. PAGE. I hope that objection will not be made until the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] has an opportunity of replying to the remarks of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. ELLIS. I hope the objection will not be pressed.

Mr. REAGAN. I doubt very much if the gentleman from Pennsylvania occupied more than five minutes. I will not withdraw the objection.

Mr. SPARKS. If the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] withdraws it I give notice that I, myself, will renew it.

Mr. REAGAN. We do not want any political debate on this bill.

Mr. REED. I want it distinctly understood that I do not want to engage in any political debate as suggested by the gentleman from will proceed.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Johnston]

Mr. JOHNSTON. The amendment in question was proposed by Mr. JOHNSTON. The amendment in question was proposed by the Military Committee on account of the very small sum proposed by the Committee on Appropriations for the works of fortification. It has been very well said by my friend from Louisiana and my friend from New York that our seaports are utterly without defense. I believe there is not one on the coast of either ocean that the naval vessels of a small European power could not enter with impunity. I believe that a small squadron could enter the harbor of New York without damage and in a few hours levy contributions amounting to more than ten times the sum that the engineers will expend in such improvements of our existing works as will make them fit to cope with European iron-clad ships of war. It is for that reason the Military Committee propose that the engineers shall receive money sufficient not only to repair and protect the existing works but also to cient not only to repair and protect the existing works but also to make such modifications as will be necessary to make them able to cope with ships of war.

It is very well known that all of those forts were constructed at a time when ordnance was in a very different condition. They were sufficient for their objects when made, and with slight additional appropriations they can now be made perfectly adequate to the de-

The Military Committee propose to inaugurate that system of modifications, and propose this amount—$400,000—in addition to the sum named by the Committee on Appropriations. That sum we understood had been suggested by the Secretary of War. I have no official knowledge of that, but have heard it in such a way that I regard it as true.

Mr. BAKER. That is the amount—$500,000.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Thank you, sir. Now, to enable us to place adequate artillery in these forts, such as can put holes through the sides of European iron-clads, the casemates and embrasures of these forts must be enlarged; and then there are many appendages to these works, there are many outworks, which with a little modification might bear these heavy guns also.

This will give a general idea of the scheme of the Engineer Corps, for which they have asked an appropriation year after year. This year I believe their estimates amount to several millions.

I cannot agree with the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania that, because we have no immediate apprehensions of war, war is never to come. The wisest of our statesmen have always maintained that in peace we must prepare for war, and this is the universal principle of government. I hold that the spectacle that our harbor defenses offer now is absolutely disgraceful to the great, powerful nation to which they belong, and which has left them in a condition of neglect for twelve or fifteen years. I hope that members of this House will agree with me and make this appropriation and that Congress will continue to make such appropriations as may be adequate till our sea-coast and harbors shall be properly defended, with the great property contained in them.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on the amendment is exhausted.

Mr. REED. I move to strike out the last word of the amendment.

It is the nature of strong minds to be pertinacious. It is the nature also of men who have won or thought they have won distinction in a particular direction to keep at it. Now, the Speaker of this House has addressed the House very often in past times; but almost always, if not quite, the burden of his discourse has been economy. Surely there cannot be any higher subject to engage a man's attention. Nevertheless all virtues may degenerate into vices by excess. Economy may become parsimony and penuriousness.

If the gentleman from Pennsylvania had given to this House reasons why this expenditure should not take place, his arguments ought to have availed. But the sole ground on which he puts his arguments is that of economy in a broad and general sense. Now I say it is not economy for a country that has property, for a country that has revenues, for a country that has property, for a country that has revenues, for a country that is not burdened by taxation, to refuse to make expenditures for its necessities. And among the prime necessities which have been recognized in all ages and in all countries is the necessity of that insurance from war which defense always gives.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania says he has voted or has seen others vote for appropriations for guns which are to-day useless, and that the progress of military science may be such in future time that that the progress of military science may be such in future time that in ten years the guns which are manufactured to-day will be useless. That is just as if a man who had been insured as to his life should after the lapse of ten years declare all the past payments had been utterly useless. Why, the past payments pay for the insurance. The money which England has expended—and it is simply enormous—for her coast and naval defenses was paid for, every pound of it, in the preservation of the country from the possible desolation of war.

My friend from Pennsylvania sees no war in the clouds. Are there to be no lightning reds excepted until the records see the lightning.

to be no lightning-rods erected until the people see the lightning? Why, sir, the principal object, the very necessity of coast defenses is that they be erected before the war comes. When the war comes you cannot erect them. Gentlemen talk about hasty earthworks being thrown up. I should like to see a man throw up some earthworks ing thrown up. I should like to see a man throw up some earthworks in the State of Maine during this month.

My friend says, too, that Fort Sumter was in a better condition after it was battered down than it was before. I do not know what military men may say about that, but I should be sorry to trust our defenses to forts which had to be battered down before they became of any use. And I submit to the House this question ought not to be determined by any generalization arising from the recollection of past political speeches in which we have not all of us participated. I submit it should be determined on the reason and sound sense of this matter. this matter.

It is no use for a man to say that because we are going to make a necessary appropriation on the first bill which we come to consider

It is no use for a man to say that because we are going to make a necessary appropriation on the first bill which we come to consider therefore we are going to be extravagant hereafter. That reminds me of that housewifely lady who got up on Monday morning and said, "To-day is Monday, and to-morrow is Tuesday, and the next day will be Wednesday; and there is half the week gone and nothing yet done." [Laughter.]

Let us take things as they come; let us meet the world as it meets us; let us meet legislation as we find it, and not get behind glittering generalities for defense. The truth is, these are works that ought to be accomplished; no man doubts that. It is no party question, nor ought party be suggested or be thought of in connection with it. If we are going to be economical, in Heaven's name let us be wisely economical, and not penny wise and pound foolish.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) In my action here on the subject of expenditure of public money, I have always been guided by one thought; that I had no right to be either liberal or extravagant with other people's money. The gentleman may differ with me in that respect. But I say that when we come to be liberal it ought to be with that which belongs to us, and we ought not to exhibit our intense liberality at the expense of the people of this country. I say that so far as this appropriation is concerned it is needless to increase it now. This is not the time to enter upon a general defense of the coast of the United States. And if it was the time, it would not be any such sum as this that I would vote for that purpose.

Science has not indicated the guns, for the making of which this increased appropriation is proposed, are such as can be placed in the forts now in existence. If any member of this House chooses to vote for increased appropriations, the responsibility rests with that individual member, and not with me at all, and yet I feel that I should warn the House against such a course.

I have not sought to make any appeal to the House in a partisan sense. On the contrary, I consider it the duty of a republican Representative quite as much as it is of a democratic Representative to see that not a dollar is unduly and unnecessarily taken out of the public Treasury. And I am glad to believe that there are many members, perhaps the great body of the members of the republican party in this House, who generally agree with me on that subject, and vote in harmony with that suggestion.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted upon the amendment to the

Mr. REED. I will withdraw the amendment to the amendment.
Mr. BLOUNT. I renew it. The proposition now under consideration is to multiply fivefold the amount recommended by the Committee on Appropriations; instead of appropriating $100,000 to appropriate $500,000. The Secretary of War in his own recommendation to this House simply asks for $150,000 for this purpose.

It is made the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to send to Congress suggestions as to the needs of the Government. In his estimates for the next year he has asked for $25,000,000 more than we appropriated for the present year. Yet, notwithstanding that large increase in the estimates, the War Department asked for only $50,000 more than the Committee on Appropriations propose for this partic-

The opinion of General Benét is brought forward here. Now, he, as an engineer officer, discusses this subject just as the Military Committee has done, on the supposition that there was existing a state of actual hostilities; that many of the powers of Europe were preparing for an assault upon our coasts. Now, that is an absurdity. In our history, extending a little over a hundred years, with the exception of the war of 1812 and the trouble we had with Mexico, we have not been called upon to meet any enemies outside of our own limits.

not been called upon to meet any enemies outside of our own limits. Gentlemen say that in time of peace we must prepare for war. I concede that. But there is other preparation than the expenditure of money. In 1812 we were but eighteen States and seven millions of people; to-day we are thirty-eight States and fifty millions of people. By a proper administration of the Government we have increased our wealth and resources and our comparative strength among the nations of the earth.

When the nations come to consider the question of levying tribute upon the city of New York, they will not stoop to that narrow issue, but will measure the strength of the arm with which they will be called upon to contend. Like the Speaker of this House, I feel that we may have confidence in the peace which our power secures to us.

I say there is no danger of foreign trouble; there is no occasion for it. The progress of civilization has given rise to questions in England which will demand her amplest resources to meet. The standing armies of the great nations of Europe signal their apprehensions in regard to perhaps their very existence.

Where is the danger to us to come from? The War Department where is the danger to us to come from 1. The war Department does not seem to see any; and I apprehend there is not in the mind of any one here any fear upon that subject. The situation is fully appreciated by ourselves; our experience tells its own story.

I cannot understand why we should seek to give three times the appropriation which the Department is asking for. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. Reed] says let us consider this thing by itself; that because we increase it elsewhere. I have heard that remark before on we will increase it elsewhere. we will increase it elsewhere. I have heard that remark before on different appropriation bills, but the very gentlemen who made it never found a place to reduce expenditures.

Mr. SCALES. How much is the estimate beyond the appropria-

Mr. BLOUNT. The estimates ask for $150,000 for this purpose.
Mr. ELLIS. Will the gentleman look at page 133 of the Estimates.
Mr. BLOUNT. The gentleman has the book before him, and can refer to it. We gave $100,000 last year for this purpose; we propose to give the same now. The appropriations for fortifications have been increased. In 1878, they were $225,000; in 1879, $275,000; in 1880, $325,000; in 1881, $550,000; and we propose to make the amount the same for the next fiscal year. Among all the reductions which have been made during the past years, the least has been in relation to our fortifications.

to our fortifications.

[Here the hammer fell.] Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I hope that this House will not appro-Mr. HILL. Mr. Charman, I hope that this House will not appropriate a single dollar more than is asked for by any Department of the Government. I do not recognize the logic of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. Reed] that because lightning does not strike everywhere every year, we should put up lightning-rods everywhere. Lightning strikes from natural causes. War never comes from natural causes. I undertake to say further that the Government of the United States has never gone into any war prepared for it. We have whipped Great Britain twice without any fortifications at all. When we went into the war with Mexico we had no preparation; and it is claimed by the other side of the House that when the war of the rebellion broke out the Government of the United States was not prepared. So that we have gone through four wars in the history of our Government. increased appropriation is proposed, are such as can be placed in the forts now in existence. If any member of this House chooses to vote for increased appropriations, the responsibility rests with that indion the other. Four hundred thousand dollars to put this country on a war footing corresponding with that of European governments would be about as good as four hundred mills; $400,000 or $500,000 will not fortify the mouth of the Mississippi River alone. Can any military man on this floor tell me where forts, except earthworks, have ever been successfully defended against gunboats and their projectiles? Never! Fort Sumter could not be so defended; no other fort made by man ever has been.

The idea of expending half a million dollars for putting the whole sea-coast of the Atlantic and Pacific, embracing more than five thousand miles, in a state of defense to resist incursions of foreign powers sand miles, in a state of defense to resist incursions of foreign powers is the most absurd thing that was ever mooted in the American Congress. I say that half a million dollars will not protect New York City; half a million dollars will not protect Norfolk; half a million dollars will not protect New Orleans. There is no port of entry from one end of the country to the other that can be protected against foreign ships with an appropriation of $500,000. Yet, from what I have heard and read I very much doubt whether there is in Europe a vessel fitted up for the purpose of conveying men and guns that could cross the Atlantic the purpose of conveying men and guns that could cross the Atlantic on an ordinary sea without sinking before she was half-way here.

The United States of America are always prepared for war—prepared by the genius of our Constitution and laws; by the spirit of our institutions; by the inborn patriotism of our people. An appropriation of $500,000 to carry out jobs and give contractors a chance to make money will not add to the patriotism which has carried this country successfully through every trial to which it has been sub-

I hope, sir, that this money asked for in excess of the estimate of the Department will not be wasted by the Forty-sixth Congress in its expiring hours. As the Speaker of the House has so well said, let its expiring hours. As the Speaker of the House has so well said, let those who come here with so much renewed confidence take the responsibility, if they dare, to undertake to put this country upon a warfooting with the nations of Europe. How much money will itake? How many millions of men will you want in your army? How many gunboats and ships will you want? How many forts will you have to build? Sir, we are not in the same situation as European governments. We need no "balance of power" here to preserve the integrity of our institutions. We are planted upon a different footing; we are sustained by different laws, by different institutions, by a different civilization, by a different patriotism, and by loftier inspirations. We are a free people. We are spurred to defend our country from sources and motives within and without, by a patriotic devotion to our Constitution and laws which have made America "the tion to our Constitution and laws which have made America "the

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on the amendment is exhausted.

Mr. BLOUNT. I withdraw my formal amendment.

Mr. MCCOOK. I renew it.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Will my friend allow me to make a reference simply to some figures which have been brought in question. I understood the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] to say that the Secretary of War himself had proposed an expenditure of $150,000 only. I stated that the Secretary of War proposed an appropriation of $500,000; and this, as I said, was the reason the Military Committee proposed an addition of $400,000 to the appropriation in the bill.
Here are the figures, and I will be obliged to the gentleman from Georgia if he will read them. [Handing a book to Mr. BLOUNT.]

Mr. BLOUNT. The gentleman wants me to read. I will read; but I will read more than he points out.

Mr. MCCOOK. I do not wish to interrupt the gentleman from Georgia, but I am on the floor and have but five minutes.

Mr. BLOUNT. The gentleman from Virginia wants me to read something.

something.

Mr. McCOOK. I prefer to go on.

Mr. Chairman, the Speaker of this Honse, after questioning the sincerity of gentlemen who differed with him, made a broad assertion that this proposed amendment was needless. That, I apprehend, is the very question at issue before this committee.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) I did not question the sincerity of gentlemen in any offensive way.

Mr. McCOOK. And I do not refer to it in any offensive way.

Against the opinion of the Speaker, as a member of this House and as a military man as to the necessity of an appropriation of this character, I will put, first, the action of the Committee on Military Affairs; and I call attention especially to the fact that the gentleman who prepared this amendment and who acts as the mouth-piece of the committee in presenting it has a reputation for knowledge of military matters second perhaps to no man in the United States. I will in addition call attention to the fact that this appropriation is recommended by a committee many of whose members have had some experience in military affairs, a committee who, as I understand, are unanimous, with one exception—I except the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. Dibrell]—in instructing the gentleman from Virginia to submit the amendment.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) Do I understand the gentleman to say that the committee are unanimous?

Mr. McCOOK. I understand that they are, with the exception of the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. SPARKS. I will state that I consented to the proposition, though I did not like it.

Mr. McCOOK. I think I do not misstate the fact; I have excepted

Mr. MCCOOK. I think I do not misstate the fact; I have excepted the gentleman from Tennessee.

In addition to that, I call especial attention to the fact that the gentleman from the Committee on Appropriations who has this bill in charge [Mr. Baker] has in the present debate admitted the necessity for some action in this direction, and simply questions whether it is wise to take this action in the expiring hours of the Forty-sixth Congress. Therefore I say we have all of that to justify those of us who assume the attitude we do, that there is an overpowering necessity for some action being taken at once to put the fortifications of sity for some action being taken at once to put the fortifications of our harbors in a condition to resist a hostile attack.

I do not propose, Mr. Chairman, to enter into that limitless discussion of the probabilities of a foreign war, but I do call the attention of the gentlemen of this House to the fact that within the last three or four years we were on the verge of a war with Spain, and that one of the great iron-clads of that nation, the Arapiles, then in the harbor of New York—if newspaper reports are to be relied on—was detained in the dock by a trick. In other words, she was, under the comity existing among nations, undergoing repairs—an iron-clad so formidable, in my judgment, as to be able to sink half a dozen of the frigates. able, in my judgment, as to be able to sink half a dozen of the frigates of our Navy; and yet, in some mysterious way, a coal-barge was sunk in front of the dock so that it was impossible for that powerful Spanish war vessel to get out of the dock for many days. I refer to that, sir, to show that three or four years ago at least—

Mr. ROBESON. The gentleman is mistaken. That coal-barge-sprang a leak, and its sinking was according to the philosophy of nature, as well as the fitness of things [Laughter.]

Mr. McCOOK. It did it at an opportune time and place, but I think the general sentiment of the country was that it was an unfortunate, if not peculiar, accident to occur at that time.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. CALKINS. Mr. Chairman, I am sorry to disagree with the Committee on Military Affairs in its recommendation in regard to this bill, and for once I stand in line with the Speaker, who, in my judgment, is entirely right in opposing this expenditure of money at this time. I call the attention of the House to the fact that we are now burdened with a public debt of many millions, and that the first thing we should do is to reduce that public debt by the faithful ap-plication of all surplus revenues thereto. In the next place, we should relieve the people of some of the onerous burdens of taxation still resting upon their shoulders, and from burdens growing out of what we call war taxation.

As the gentleman from New York has said, I have little fear of any war with foreign nations; but if we should become complicated in awar with any foreign nation, I believe the inventive genius of the American people is such they would be able to meet the emergency whenever it arises.

Again, sir, the experience this nation has had in the last war has shown conclusively that wherever we were threatened with any improved war vessel or by any army, the genius, vigor, and capacity of the American people were always ready for the occasion. When we were assaulted with the Merrimac we met it with the Monitor. So in all naval conflicts and battles recently fought our people have

So in all naval conflicts and battles recently fought our people have been equal to the emergency.

As to our coast and harbor defenses, the torpedo system now is sufficient to protect all of our cities against any successful attack or bombardment from any fleet. The gentleman from New York need not fear for his beloved city, for I believe the genius of Americans in bringing forward the torpedo and other new modes of land and naval wastern is sufficient for its defense.

The time, too, is past and gone when we shall ever see on the high seas again that naval warfare which once challenged the admiration of the world.

In the next place, I call the attention of members to the fact that no foreign nation during this generation will attempt to land any army on the shores of this country for purposes of invasion. If this was undertaken the sound of the bugle in the South and in the North would bring together an army of veterans able to cope with the combined armies of the world. This ought to dispel all fears and do away with the haste with which this measure now seems to be pushed.

I know gentlemen who live on the coast are desirous of having this appropriation of money made now. But it should not be forgotten that the money is to be drawn from the people of the entire country, and unless these gentlemen can give us some reason why there is danger, I do not believe in the expenditure of this vast sum of money danger, I do not believe in the expenditure of this vast sum of money at the present time.

Finally, if you appropriate this money it will be but a drop in the bucket to that which will come after in the way of further burdens upon the taxpayers. This will be but the commencement. Can any one say where it will end? Who can tell us how much it will take to complete this vast system of coast defenses, of which this item now proposed is the forerunner? If passed it will be the entering-wedge in the Treasury which may deplete it. We should make haste slowly, it seems to no. it seems to me.

Appropriate this sum of money now, and next year, when the republicans come into power, we will be met with the request on the part of these men to increase it, and then to still further increase it.

This will not be a good way to start out in the new administration. Therefore it is I call upon the House now to stop this leak at the threshold, so that we may commence, if we are ever going to do so, the new era just coming in by the practice of sound economy.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. McCOOK. I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. KEIFER. I renew it and yield my time to the gentleman

Mr. KEIFER. I renew it and yield my time to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. McCook.]

Mr. McCook. Mr. Chairman, when the inevitable gavel fell I was about to say something on the merits of the case, as near as I could, but my friend from Indiana has given me a new text. He seems to be laboring under the impression that the people of the State of New York are alone interested in the defense of the harbor of New York. I call his attention to the fact that every blow struck. at the commerce and prosperity of that great city is a blow struck at the commerce and prosperity of Indiana, of Iowa, and of Kan-It is the terminus in one sense of the word of the great sas as well. It is the terminus in one sense of the word of the great railways of the country. It is the pathway to the ocean, and through its harbor floats the great bulk of our commerce, and, to say nothing of the mortified pride of the American people at any interference with our harbors by a foreign foe, if we look at this question in York, or Boston, or New Orleans, or Baltimore is one felt through-out the interior as well as by those living on the coast.

Now, he and other gentlemen seek to place reliance upon torpedoes as a means of defense for the harbors of this country. No engineer whom I have ever read after ever pretended to say that a torpedo was anything else than a mere obstruction. It is a mere auxiliary defense of a harbor, and the torpedo must itself be defended, and it can only be defended by an intelligent system of fortifications under the charge of men who understand their business as engineers. Again, we have been told that our Navy is amply sufficient to protect our harbors; but, Mr. Chairman, no man who has any pride in the American name or the American Navy would ever wish to see that Navy or any portion of it sealed up in a harbor of our country, unable to make its way out to the ocean except by consent of some foreign navy.

I believe this is a proper commencement of an intelligent and in the end an economical system by which we will not only enlarge the fortifications of our country but provide the necessary means to defend ourselves against armored vessels and large guns of long range and great power. This is neither the time nor the place to enter into any discussion of the relative merits of attack or defense of our harbors. But, Mr. Chairman, it is absolutely necessary that some steps should be taken, and taken at once, to commence this system by which the harbors of the country can be protected. It is the time now, sir, to begin. It is a work of importance that should not be neglected, and in my judgment we will not be true to our duties if we fail to provide the means.

Mr. SPEER. Mr. Chairman, such high authority as General Grant, in one of his last messages while President, declared that an appropriation was necessary not so much for the purpose of adding to our fortifications as for the purpose of increasing the power of their armaments. Modern experience has demonstrated the fact that earthworks, properly armed, constitute the most effective means of defen-sive warfare. It was not the masenry of Fort Sumter that pro-tected Charleston Harbor from the powerful iron-clads of the Union, but the impregnable system of earthworks, armed with heavy artil-lery, that constituted that defense, and the same results may be lery, that constituted that detense, and the same results may be reached in future wars by appropriations for the manufacture of artillery of great range and weight of metal rather better than by adding to, or increasing the number of, our permanent fortifications.

The genius of the American people is very great, but that genius is possibly not sufficient to provide extensive parks of artillery on very short notice. But we can with spade and mattock always provide sufficient defenses for the protection of that artillery and those vide sufficient defenses for the protection of that artillery and those who man it. I would, sir, with great pleasure have a liberal appropriation for the purpose of improving our ordnance; but if the view which I take of this question is the proper one, as I believe it to be, I shall feel it my duty to vote against the amendment now offered.

Mr. BAKER. If there is a disposition manifested to discuss this question for more than five minutes longer I shall feel it incumbent upon me to move that the committee rise to limit debate upon it. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"] But if the committee is ready for the question I shall not press the motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment suggested by the gentleman

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment suggested by the gentleman from Ohio being withdrawn, the question is on the pending amendment of the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. WARNER. I understand that to be the committee's amendment. The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The proposed amendment was again read.

The committee divided; and there were-ayes 58, noes 90. So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. REAGAN. I offer an amendment to that paragraph, to come in after the word "war" in line 9, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

To commence the construction of batteries for the defense of the entrance to Galveston Harbor, Texas, $50,000, mr. REAGAN. It is possible that the gentleman is right as to the point of order. I can only say, however, that if the circumstances should arise when our city is approached by a foreign foe and burned to the ground, and its commerce destroyed, he will have the satisfaction of knowing that it was done in accordance with the rules of the House of Representatives.

Mr. SPARKS. Exactly; rules which the gentleman from Texas himself voted for, and I voted against.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order having been raised, the Chair bound to decide that the amendment is not in order.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the armament of sea-coast fortifications, including heavy guns and howitzers for flank defense, carriages, projectiles, fuses, powder, and implements, their trial and proof, and all necessary expenses incident thereto, and for machine guns, including the conversion of smooth-bore cannon into rifles, and the manufacture of four improved breech-loading twelve-inch rifled guns, §400,000.

Mr. BRAGG. The reason of my offering that amendment is that the last vote has shown the sense of this House against any change in our system of fortifications or against the inauguration of any sys tem of improvements of our fortifications at this time. I favored the amendment from the Committee on Military Affairs. I did so because the same Committee on Appropriations which opposed it have heretofore made appropriations for the manufacture of these great guns, and, as the United States have no place where those guns could be put for use, I was favorable to the proposition for putting our fortifica-tions in a condition to utilize the guns constructed upon the recom-mendation of the economical Committee on Appropriations. That same committee in this same bill recommend the construction of four more of those guns, and have increased the appropriation to $400,000 that they may be constructed. But at the voice of that committee the House have refused to authorize the erection of fortifications where those guns could be used.

I therefore move to amend by striking out all that part of the clause

I therefore move to amend by striking out all that part of the clause which authorizes the construction of four great breech-loading twelveinch rifled guns, and which makes the appropriation, including the price of their construction, $400,000, and inserting, after the word "rifles," the sum of $200,000, which will be in full for the guns required under the estimate, after you deduct the estimate for the four useless guns which the committee will not consent to have mounted after they are built.

Mr. BAKER. I hope this amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BRAGG] will not be agreed to. If it required from sixteen months to two years in order to prepare an earthwork for the reception of one of these large guns, I could then understand why it would be unnecessary to go on with the construction of any of them unless we went on simultaneously with the construction of the earthworks. But, Mr. Chairman, such earthworks as will receive these guns can be constructed in the course of a month at the outside if necessary, while we cannot possibly construct one of these guns innecessary, while we cannot possibly construct one of these guns inside of sixteen months; and if we allow the only establishment in this country that has the necessary machinery and implements for the construction of these guns to go down, as it would of necessity go down, we would find ourselves in such a condition in case of war, if the threatened war came, that there would be no establishment in facture one of these guns as it does to improvise fortifications in which they can be used. The amount recommended is a very moderate one and I hope the amendment will not prevail.

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. FORT. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the paragraph and insert the following:

"For the erection of suitable founderies and forges and providing machinery and implements for the construction of heavy and improved ordnance for the armament of sea-coast fortifications, and projectics for same, and for altering smooth-bore cannon into rifled guns, $250,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary."

Mr. BLOUNT and Mr. BAKER reserved points of order.

Mr. FORT. I do not presume in the present temper of the House that the amendment will be adopted. I have no fear of the recurrence of another war, myself, very soon. I certainly hope there will not be. I do not wish to see another war while I live. Yet war may not be. I do not wish to see another war while I live. come. When war does come, however, we will have to depend then, as we have depended in the past, on improvised arms and upon improvised fortifications. We will have to depend upon the shoulder that bears the musket for our defense. We will have to depend upon the volunteer, not upon the regular Army. And in fortifications we will have to depend upon the sand-pits and upon the improvised earthworks, and not upon the masonry that will be erected in New York

In order that we may be able to arm these earthworks, I for one To commence the construction of batteries for the defense of the entrance to alveston Harbor, Texas, $50,000,

Mr. SPARKS. Mr. Chairman I make the point of order on that get them constructed they will be superseded by something that is better; but it occurs to me that it would be wisdom to be prepared to construct heavy ordnance. Private enterprise will not be prepared to do it. It takes a long time to erect the forges and furnaces with which to construct a large gun; perhaps longer than it takes to construct a gun after the forges are constructed. A gentleman near me says it will take a year to construct the forges and appliances to handle this heavy mass of metal.

It seems to me, then, to be the wise course for the Government to have a large machine-shop, in which it could, when needed, construct the ordnance and the kind of ordnance that then would be desirable, and not now to engage in the business of constructing this expensive ordnance, because, as I have said, by the time you get it constructed it may be superseded by something far better. It will not do to leave it to private enterprise. When war comes, if it does come, the contract would first have to be made with the private individual; then the private individual would have to construct his forges and furnaces, and then to construct his guns. Then why not let the Government go to work and be prepared itself to do anything of this sort, that it must of necessity do when the time comes, if it ever does come, and God forbid that it should.

Mr. BAKER. I must press the point of order, in order that there may be no further discussion if the point of order is well taken. The point I make is, that there is no law previding for the construction of an establishment for the manufacture of large guns, and that it of an establishment for the manufacture of large guns, and that it is new legislation and not in the line of retrenchment and economy. Mr. FORT. I think the gentleman's construction of the rule is forced. If we have the power to construct a gun we certainly have the power to construct a forge with which to make that gun. The very fact that the gentleman claims that his own appropriation is in order would make the amendment in order. He provides by his bill for the construction of a gun; but it is impossible to construct a gun without first providing the establishment to do so. Now, when it is in order to do both things why is it not in order to do the one which must be first done? must be first done?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Baker] insist upon his point of order?

insist upon his point of order?

Mr. BAKER. I do.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion that the point of order is well taken, and therefore rules the amendment out of order.

Mr. ELLIS. I move to amend the pending paragraph by striking out "$400,000" and inserting in lieu thereof "$887,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The paragraph will be read as proposed to be amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the armament of sea-coast fortifications, including heavy guns and howitzers for flank defense, carriages, projectiles, fuses, powder, and implements, their trial and proof, and all necessary expenses incident thereto, and for machine guns, including the conversion of smooth-bore cannon into rifles and the manufacture of four improved breech-loading twelve-inch rifled guns, $887,000.

Mr. ELLIS. This is the amount estimated for by the Chief of Engineers, and is to be applied principally to the making of these heavy guns and the conversion of twelve and fifteen inch smooth-bores into eight and ten inch rifles. I have no argument to make further than to read the words which I find on pages 11 and 12 of the report of General Rendy.

General Benét:

The want of certain portions of plant to enable the founderies to undertake the manufacture of guns larger than any heretofore made in this country, and the necessity that the Department should supply a portion of it in aid of the enterprise, the long and tedious examinations and calculations to reach the exact cost that would pay the founderies a fair profit for their labor and risk, delayed the placing of contracts for some time. All this has, however, been satisfactorily settled, and the work will be pushed to completion as rapidly as possible.

No stronger argument in favor of large annual appropriations can be stated than the fact that the first of these four guns will be completed and delivered to us in sixteen months, the second in eighteen months, the third in twenty months, and the fourth in twenty-two months, or about two years after the passage of the bill making the appropriation.

The money that may be expected from year to year is so uncertain as to quantity that the founderies are not justified in running the risk of making such ample preparation of plant as the increased size of modern ordnance requires to inure a large yearly product. Two years to complete four guns is the very best that can be done by the founderies with all the assistance this Department can render. May I not ask that it be recommended to Congress to increase the appropriation of last syear, make it a permanent one, if possible, that the existing condition of hings may be so far improved by congressional encouragement as to enable our founderies to perfect their establishment so as to do the largest amount of work in the shortest possible time. Liberal appropriations for the armament of our forts are of the first importance, and cannot be too strongly urged.

Mr. BAKER. I hope this amendment will not be agreed to. It

Mr. BAKER. I hope this amendment will not be agreed to. It proposes to appropriate $117,600 more than is estimated for by the Ordnance Department. It is also the mere motion of an individual member of the House.

Mr. ELLIS. Does the gentleman say that this amount is not estimated for ?

Mr. BAKER. That is what I said.

Mr. ELLIS. On page 80 of the Book of Estimates I find the total of the amount estimated for under this head to be $887,600.

Mr. RANDALL, (the SPEAKER.) I would like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs [Mr. SPARKS] if he is prepared to answer the question whether the Committee on Military Affairs recommend any increase in regard to this item of this appropriation o answer the question whether the Committee on Military Affairs Colerick, commend any increase in regard to this item of this appropriation ill?

Mr. SPARKS. The Committee on Military Affairs make no recommendation one way or the other. They say nothing on the subject. If they had recommended it, as a matter of course the amendment would have been moved by the committee.

Mr. BAKER. It is true that in the Book of Estimates there are five Mr. BAKER. It is true that in the Book of Estimates there are nve items aggregating the sum of $857,600. But, as I explained when I first addressed the committee on this bill, one of those items, recommending the appropriation of $117,600, is not incorporated in this bill at all; and if it is to be appropriated by Congress it properly belongs to the Army appropriation bill. Therefore the amendment now proposed for the purpose of constructing guns and manufacturing projectiles in $117,600 more than the aggregate of the estimates by the posed for the purpose of constructing guins and mandacturing projectiles is $117,600 more than the aggregate of the estimates by the Department. I hope the amendment will not prevail.

The amendment of Mr. Ellis was not agreed to.

The Clerk began the reading of the next paragraph of the bill.

Mr. FORT. Is it not necessary to vote upon passing this paragraph? Mr. FORT. Is it not necessary to vote upon passing this paragraph? The CHAIRMAN. It is not necessary to take a vote upon agreeing to each separate paragraph.

Mr. FORT. I move to strike out the paragraph.

Mr. BLOUNT. Is it not too late to make that motion? The Clerk had began the reading of the next paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the right of the gentleman from Illinois to move to strike out the second paragraph of the bill. The motion to strike out was not agreed to.

The Clerk read the remainder of the bill, as follows:

For torpedoes for harbor defenses, and the preservation of the same, and for torpedo experiments in their application to harbor and land defense, and for instruction of engineer battalion in their preparation and application, $50,000: Provided. That the money herein appropriated for torpedoes shall only be used in the establishment and maintenance of torpedoes to be operated from shore stations for the destruction of an enemy's vessel approaching the shore or entering the channels and fairways of harbors.

And the Secretary of War is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to exchange the unserviceable and unsuitable powder and shot on hand for new powder and projectiles, or to sell the same and purchase similar articles with the proceeds of the sales.

Mr. BAKER. I move that the committee now rise and report this bill to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CONVERSE reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the bill (H. R. No. 6529] making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, and for the armament thereof, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, and for other purposes, and had directed him to report the same back to the House without amendment, and to recommend that the bill be passed.

the same back to the House without amendment, and to recommend that the bill be passed.

Mr. BAKER. I call the previous question on the bill.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and it was accordingly read the third time.

The question was upon the passage of the bill.

The SPEAKER. On the passage of this bill the rule requires the vote to be taken by yeas and nays, and the Clerk will now call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 189, nays 1, not voting 101, as follows:

The result of the vote was announced as above stated.

Mr. BAKER moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LYDIA DWINEL.

Mr. MURCH, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 6618) granting a pension to Lydia Dwinel; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and erdered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Burch, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had passed a bill (S. No. 1139) for the relief of Fitz-John Porter, late major-general of the United States Volunteers and colonel of the Army; in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

ASSISTANT CLERK TO COMMITTEE ON ELECTIONS,

Mr. O'CONNOR, from the Committee on Accounts, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Elections be, and they are hereby, authorized to continue J. R. Christy in the office of assistant clerk to the said committee for such time during the present session as the committee may require his services, and that he be paid out of the contingent fund of the House at the rate of $6 per diem for the time he is actually employed.

The SPEAKER. The report accompanying this resolution will be

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Accounts, to whom was referred the resolution authorizing the Committee on Elections to continue John R. Christy in their employ as assistant clerk during the present session of Congress, at a compensation of $6 per diem while actually employed, having considered the same, respectfully report:

That the nature and amount of the business still pending before the Committee on Elections render the continuance of this additional clerical aid very essential to the committee, and they therefore recommend the passage of the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

IMPROVEMENT OF MISSISSIPPI RIVER.

Mr. GIBSON. I am instructed by the Committee on Levees and Improvements of the Mississippi River to report the bill which I send to the desk, and to move that it be recommitted and printed. together with the reports of the committee and of the commission. It also give notice that when the bill heretofore reported from that committee, and now on the Calendar shall come up, I will offer this committee, and now on the Calendar shall come up, I will offer thisbill as a substitute, under the instruction of the committee.

The motion of Mr. GIBSON was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 6619) appropriating $1,800,000 for the improvement of the Mississippi River, to be expended by and under the direction of the Secretary of War, in accordance with the recommendations, plans, specifications, and estimates, and under the advisory supervision of the Mississippi River commission, was read a first and second time, recommitted, and ordered to be printed, together with the reports of the committee and the commission upon the subject.

BREAKWATER ON SAINT CROIX RIVER.

Mr. FRYE. I desire unanimous consent to have adopted, without reference to a committee, a resolution asking information of the Secretary of War in regard to a Government breakwater which, unless some action be speedily taken, is likely to be destroyed by ice.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, That the honorable Secretary of War be requested to inform the House of the present condition of the breakwater about four miles southerly from the city of Calais, on the Saint Croix River, the necessity of its immediate repair to prevent its destruction, and the probable cost thereof.

There being no objection, the resolution was considered and adopted.

BRIDGE OVER SAINT MARY'S RIVER.

Mr. NICHOLLS. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Commerce be discharged from the consideration of Senate bill No. 1814, to authorize the construction of a fixed bridge over the Saint Mary's River, and for other purposes, and that the bill be returned to the Speaker's table, from which it was taken this morning.

There being no objection, the bill was returned to the Speaker's table.

CLERK FOR COMMITTEE ON PENSIONS.

Mr. HENRY. I am directed by the Committee on Accounts to re-port a substitute for a resolution referred to that committee, authorizing the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions and War of 1812 to employ a clerk.

The substitute was read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Pensions be, and they are hereby, authorized to employ a clerk during the remainder of this Congress, who shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House at the rate of §6 per diem.

The SPEAKER. The report accompanying the resolution will be

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Accounts, to whom was referred on the 23d of April, 1879, a resolution authorizing "the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions and War of 1812" to employ a separate clerk, having carefully considered the same from time to time, respectfully report:

That the new rules adopted by the House changed the name of this committee to the "Committee on Pensions," and gave it jurisdiction over all "subjects relating to the pensions of all the wars of the United States other than the civil war." This action vastly increased the scope of the committee's jurisdiction and its labors. Under these circumstances the services of a separate clerk seem to be essential to the prompt and satisfactory discharge of its duties; and the adoption of the substitute for the resolution is therefore unanimously recommended.

Mr. FORT. Allow me to ask the gentleman how many clerks the committees of the House now have

Mr. HENRY. This committee has no clerk.

Mr. FORT. I understand this committee has charge of bills proposing pensions based upon services in all other wars than the last—the war of the rebellion. They probably have ten or fifteen bills before them.

Mr. HENRY. We were informed by that committee that they have a great many bills before them for consideration.

Mr. FORT. What has been the increase in the number of clerks at this over the preceding Congress?

Mr. HENRY. I will state, Mr. Speaker, that at the beginning it was our object to have the same number of clerks appointed during the last Congress. Some additional clerks have been allowed by direct vote of the House to the Committee on Invalid Pensions without reference of the question to the Committee on Accounts. That action, it seems, was rendered necessary by reason of the large number of pension cases which had accumulated before that committee for consideration and action. for consideration and action.

When the clerks were distributed to the various committees of the House one clerk was allowed to the Committee on Expenditures in the War Department and this Committee on Pensions. We are now informed by the Committee on Pensions that it is absolutely necessary they should have a separate clerk, in order there may be some one in the committee-room to keep it open and answer inquiries constantly made of them by applicants and others, as the business of that committee has been greatly ingreased by the applicants distributed in the committee has been greatly ingreased by the applicants. committee has been greatly increased by the enlarged jurisdiction accorded to it under the new rules adopted at the last session.

Mr. FORT. But the gentleman does not answer my inquiry, what increase there has been in this Congress over the last Congress?

Mr. HENRY. I am not prepared to answer at present, because some clerks have been allowed by direct vote of the House without the reference of the subject to the Committee on Accounts.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks there has been an increase of two, but is not certain.

The substitute was agreed to, and the resolution, as amended, was educated.

Mr. HENRY moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LIST OF PRIVATE CLAIMS.

Mr. CONVERSE, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Accounts:

Resqived, That the Clerk of the House be directed to have completed the digested summary and alphabetical list of the private claims presented to the House of Representatives from the Forty-second to the Forty-sixth Congress, inclusive, and the expense for performing said work shall, under the direction of the Committee on Accounts, be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

BRIDGE OVER THE PECOS RIVER.

The SPEAKER, by unanimons consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, relative to a military bridge over the Pecos River, in Texas; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted in the following cases:

To Mr. Kelley, from Friday until the close of the Christmas vacation.

To Mr. WILBER, until January 2.

To Mr. Murch, for fifteen days from to-morrow.

And then, on motion of Mr. WARNER, (at four o'clock and twentyeight minutes p. m.,) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and other papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rale, and referred as follows, viz:

Mr. ANDERSON: The petition of citizens of Manhattan, Kansas, that efficient measures be at once taken for the suppression of cattle diseases—to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. VANCE: A bill to provide for the continuation of the work of improving the French Broad River in North Carolina—to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. WALTER A. WOOD: The petitions of Alexander J. Brown, of Stephentown; of Lenas L. Robinson, of Argyle; and of John Hunt, of Johnsonville, New York, that soldiers of the late war discharged on account of disease be granted the same bounty as those discharged for wounds—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

IN SENATE.

THURSDAY, December 16, 1880.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. J. BULLOCK, D. D. The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting to the Senate copies of papers received from the Quartermaster-General showing the necessity pers received from the Quartermaster-General showing the necessity for a bridge for military purposes across the Pecos River in Texas; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, in reply to a resolution of the Senate of the 13th instant, a special report on the subject of trichinæ in American meat by the late Assistant Surgeon W. C. W. Glazier, of the Marine-Hospital Service; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture, and ordered to be printed.

AGRICULTURAL REPORT OF 1879.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Public Printer, in reply to the resolution of the 13th instant, calling for information as to why the Agricultural Report of 1879 is not ready for distribution.

On motion of Mr. JOHNSTON, the letter was referred to the Committee on Agriculture, and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, presented the petition of John Johnson, of Portage, Columbia County, Wisconsin, formerly a private in the United States detachment of cavalry at the West Point Military Academy, praying that he be granted arrears of pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PLUMB. I present the petition of Dermott Bishop, N. Mayer, Joseph J. Valentine, John T. Carroll, and Charles Schmidt, foremen at the Leavenworth military prison, praying that certain arrears of wages be paid to them. I desire to call the attention of the Committee on Appropriations especially to this case. In 1878, by inadvertence, I have no doubt, the amount which was necessary to pay these persons the wages which had been agreed upon—$100 a month—was reduced by the appropriation bill to $75 per month. The Secretary of War was so well satisfied of the fact of this being an inadvertence that he paid them out of the earnings of the military prison about six months' wages, and about that much is still left due. I call the special attention of the Appropriations Committee to this because it is a matter that has remained a long time unsettled, and is a matter of very great hardship to these persons. I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WHYTE presented the petition of Louisa Gassaway, of Annapolis, Maryland, praying that she be granted a pension on account of the services of her father in the Revolutionary war; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

ferred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. SLATER presented the petition of Jacob Fritz and certain citizens of The Dalles, Oregon, praying Congress to grant him two acres of land off the northeast corner of The Dalles military reservation; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. HOAR. I present the petition of the American Woman's Suffrage Association, praying for equality of suffrage in the Territories, and move its reference to the Committee on Territories. This petition is signed by various persons, ladies and others, of the very highest standing in literature and in social life, surpassed by no other persons in those particulars in this country. They have stated reasons of the gravest, and, to my mind, of the most persuasive character in of the gravest, and, to my mind, of the most persuasive character in behalf of the petition which they make—reasons which, as they have stated them, have never yet received from any quarter an answer which seems to me to deserve to be characterized as a respectable argument. I move the reference of the petition to the Committee on Territories

Mr. GARLAND. Before the reference is made I wish to state to the Senator from Massachusetts, if he does not know the fact already, that day before yesterday the Senator from Wisconsin, who is not now in his seat, [Mr. CARPENTER,] presented a petition praying for an amendment to the Constitution, (broader, to be sure, than this petition is, but covering the same subject,) which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. I have no objection to the reference to the Committee on Territories of the petition of the Senator from Massachusetts, but I state this fact because the two committees will have the same subject, to a certain extent, under consideration.

Mr. HOAR. The proposition for an amendment to the Constitution which relates to the right of suffrage in the whole country properly belongs to the Committee on the Judiciary. This is an application for such a provision relating only to the Territories, and it is supported by reasons which apply only to the Territories, in part by the experience of one of the Territories, the Territory of Wyoming, with which the Committee on Territories of course have made themselves familiary and it account that familiar; and it seems to the petitioners (and as I understand the chairman of the Committee on Territories raises no objection) desirable that they should be heard by a committee familiar with the interests and conditions of the Territories.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The petition will be referred to the Committee on Territories, if there be no objection.

REPORT OF A COMMITTEE.

Mr. MORRILL, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1888) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase land adjacent to the custom-house in the city of Providence, Rhode Island, reported it without amendment.

REFERENCE OF A BILL.

On motion of Mr. JONAS, the joint resolution (H. R. No. 333) to pay the officers and employés of the House of Representatives borne on the annual roll one month's extra pay was taken from the table and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

DISTRICT ADVERTISING.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives upon the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 2658) to regulate the award of and compensation for public advertisements in the District of Columbia.

On motion of Mr. WHYTE, it was Resolved, That the Senate insist upon its amendment disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and agree to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

By unanimous consent, it was

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BAYARD. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to allow Mr. BAYARD. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to allow me to take up and have passed the bill (S. No. 1669) for the relief of Abbie N. Condron. It is simply a bill to give the sum of $438.32 to the widow of a chaplain in the Army who was prevented from collecting it in the year 1861 by a mere informality growing out of his want of knowledge of the details of the service at that time. The bill was considered by the Committee on Military Affairs, and received the unanimous report of that committee, and I believe it to be an act of justice and of great benefit to this unfortunate lady.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Delaware asks that the Anthony rule be informally laid aside for a moment in order that the Senate may consider the bill he has named.

Mr. HARRIS. While I do not intend to object to the consideration of the measure suggested by the Senator from Delaware, I desire to appeal to that Senator to allow the Senate, if it chooses to do so, to proceed to the consideration of a bill that was under consideration at the adjournment last evening. I am quite sure, at least I feel confident, that it cannot take ten minutes to complete the consideration and finally dispose of the bill that was being considered when the Senate adjourned yesterday; and I desire very much that it should be disposed of in whatever manner the Senate sees proper to dispose of it. I hope the Senator will not press his request.

Mr. BAYARD. I have not the slightest intention of antagonizing any bill, but this is one of those exceptional cases to which I believe there will not be a particle of objection, and by which an act of instance.

any bill, but this is one of those exceptional cases to which I believe there will not be a particle of objection, and by which an act of justice and of mercy will be performed without the delay of but a very small fraction of the time of the Senate. My friend from Tennessee, however, desires to press the measure pending at the adjournment yesterday. I know that an objection will prevent the consideration of the bill I should like to call up at present. Yesterday, when my friend from Missouri [Mr. Cockrell] called up the bill to which the Senator from Tennessee refers, I did not expect it would go through without debate. He did. It turned out that he was in error as to that, and perhaps it may be that the ten minutes now talked of may be somewhat prolonged; but still, I have made the request, and if there is any objection of course the bill cannot be considered.

Mr. HARRIS. I interposed no objection; I simply appealed to the North O Street and South Washington Railway Company was announced as being first in order on the Calendar, and it was read.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to ask the Clerk to read again the description of the last offense that he has just read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There is an amendment proposed by the committee which covers the objection made by the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. HOAR. I ask the Clerk to read again the last section which he read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 6. Any person receiving a transfer from any railroad company and not using the same for the person and purpose and at the time for which it was sold, shall forfeit and pay for each such offense the sum of $10 to the said company, to be recovered and disposed of as other fines and penalties in said District.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is that a thing that is proposed to be adopted,

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is that a thing that is proposed to be adopted, or does the committee recommend an amendment?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There is an amendment proposed by the committee which covers that.

Mr. WHYTE. That is proposed to be stricken out.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think it ought to be stricken out. I do not wish to go to the penitentiary myself, for I have had a good many transfer tickets that I have threwn away.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment of the committee will

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill, and in lieu thereof to insert:

That the act to incorporate the Capitol, North O Street and South Washington Railway Company, approved March 3, 1875, be, and the same is hereby, amended so that the corporate name thereof skall hereafter be the Capitol Railway Company, by which name it may sue and be sued and transact its business, instead of the Capitol, North O Street and South Washington Railway Company. And said company is hereby authorized to lay a single or double track and run its cars from its present line at the corner of Twelfth street and B street, southwest, westwardly along B street, southwest to Fifteenth street and E Breet, southwest, westwardly along B street, southwest for fifteenth street the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, and also to lay a single or double track from its present line on P street and Eleventh street, northwest, north along said Eleventh street to Boundary street.

SEC. 2 That the said company shall complete the tracks and run its cars along the streets named within twelve months from the approval of this act.

SEC. 3. That section 8 of said act be amended so as to read as follows: "That the capital stock of said company shall be $200,000, and that the stock shall be divided into shares of $25 each, and shall be deemed personal property, transferable in such manner as the by-laws of said company may direct."

SEC. 4. Should any part of the track extension herein authorized coincide with portions of any other duly incorporated street railway, the relative conditions of the chartered rights may be adjusted upon terms to be mutually agreed upon between the companies, or, in case of disagreement, by the supreme court of the District of Columbia on petition filed therein by either party; and on such notice to the other party as the court may order.

SEC. 5. That Congress may at any time amend, alter, or repeal this act.

Mr. EDMUNDS. This amendment may be entirely right; I do not

Mr. EDMUNDS. This amendment may be entirely right; I do not quite understand it; but may I ask the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia whether any provision has been made in reference to allowing this company to lay its track in such a way as to come to the street (I am not sure that I remember its letter) that adjoins the new National Museum on the south side? The Senator will remember that the new National Museum fronts south on some street, perhaps B street south—it is B street south, the Reporter says, who knows everything and is always right, as I have found a good many times. It was suggested to me the other day by gentlemen connected with the National Museum that in the public interest it might be well to allow this company to run a track along that street, which would bring the public by this cheap method of transportation directly to the door of the National Museum. As the tracks are now, it requires a walk of what would amount probably to two squares or so from the nearest point where the cars run to reach the Museum. I should like to inquire of the chairman of the committee whether that subject has been brought to his notice, as it would of to come to the street (I am not sure that I remember its letter) that Museum. I should like to inquire of the chairman of the committee whether that subject has been brought to his notice, as it would of course require an amendment of the charter to authorize that. It may be that the amendment which has been read covers it.

Mr. WHYTE. At the time the amendment which is now before the Senate was reported by the committee, after a very careful examination of the whole subject, which required some considerable labor, the committee came to the conclusion that the route proposed in that amendment was the best for this company for the purposes which the amendment was intended to carry out. Since then, however, the subject of the proximity of the National Museum to this route has been suggested and considered, and I am about to offer to the amendment of the committee another amendment, different in its character, to take the place of matter in the amendment of the committee, and with it will have read for the information of the Senate a letter from take the place of matter in the amendment of the committee, and with it will have read for the information of the Senate a letter from the Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution, Mr. Baird, upon the subject, and I think it will be satisfactory. I have also a map of the city and of this route, and the proposition laid down upon the map, showing what changes are proposed to be made, which can be seen by any Senator who wants further information. I now offer the amendment to the amendment of the committee to which I have referred.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment offered by the Senator from Maryland to the substitute proposed by the Committee on the District of Columbia will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. After the word "so," in line 6 of section 1 of the amendment, it is proposed to strike out all down to and including the word "printing," in line 14 of the section, as follows:

That the corporate name thereof shall hereafter be the Capitol Railway Company, by which name it may sue and be sued and transact its business, instead of the Capitol, North O Street and South Washington Railway Company. And said company is hereby authorized to lay a single or double track and run its cars from its present line at the corner of Twelfth street and B street, southwest, westwardly along B street, southwest, to Fifteenth street, to the Bureau of Engraving and Printing;

And to insert the following:

As to authorize said company, at its discretion, to remove its track from Ohio avenue and Twelfth street, southwest, and lay a single or double track, and run its cars thereon, from its present line at the intersection of Ohio avenue and Fourteenth street, south, along Fourteenth to B street, southwest, eastwardly along B street, southwest, to Ninth street to Virginia avenue and C street, southwest, to connect with its present line at the junction of said avenue and street;
